SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 15, 1884.

Prayer by Rev. JOSEPH COOK, of Boston.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office submitting a report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land claim of the town of Albuquerque; which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers submitting reports from Col. John Newton of results of surveys under his direction of certain rivers and harbors in New York, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which, together with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONGER presented the petition of C. C. Royce, Louis Stegmiller, and 42 others, residents of Escanaba, Mich., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 691) to confirm and declare legal the acts of certain officers of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the Ladies' Seaman's Friends' Society, of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the passage of laws providing for the payment and discharge of sailors in foreign ports; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB. I have two petitions signed by numerous citizens of the State of Kansas addressed to me but intended for the Senate, requesting the passage of what is known as the sixteenth amendment, conferring suffrage upon women. I ask permission to offer them and have them referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks leave to present for reference to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage sundry papers addressed to him but intended to be petitions to the Senate, concerning woman suffrage. They will be referred to the committee on that subject, if there be no objection.

Mr. PENDLETON presented a petition of citizens of Jacksonville, Adams County, Ohio, praying for the extension of the arrears-of-pension act, and also the passage of the equalization-of-bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of E. T. Pettengill, D. W. Patterson, and others, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a memorial of the Wayne Presbyterian Church of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, in favor of certain changes in relation to the Indian policy of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON presented the petition of William H. Fenton, late private Company G, Nineteenth Regiment Ohio Veteran Volunteers, praying for the passage of a special act to remove the charge of desertion from his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VAN WYCK presented a petition of citizens of Knox County, Nebraska, praying for the ratification of a treaty made with the Sioux Indians for the opening for settlement of a portion of the Sioux reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of late paymasters in the Army during the war for the Union, praying additional compensation for their services; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLAIR. I have received sundry petitions which are informally addressed to the Committee on Education and Labor, but as they ask for legislation I will present them to the Senate. I present a petition of the North Star Barrel Company, a petition of the Phœnix Barrel Manufacturing Company, a petition of the Northwestern Barrel Company, a petition of the Hennepin Barrel Company, and a petition of the Co-operative Barrel Company, all of the State of Minnesota, which petitions are severally signed by the officers of those organizations and a large list of members, praying legislation by which a certain portion of the public lands may be set apart to be taken up by co-operative associations; that the amendment recommended by a certain commission be enacted into law, whereby "twenty or more families should be permitted to select contiguous territory, lay out a village in some suitable place on said territory, and live therein." This amendment, the petitions recite, with a provision allowing the colonists, as against themselves, to consolidate their claims, subject of course to such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent fraud, "would enable a co-operative company to be established on the public lands in safety, and with much less of the expense, hazard, and hardship that now fall to the lot of isolated settlers." I move that the petitions be received and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Lewis W. Moore and others, legal descendants of Capt. James Moore, a spy in the Revolutionary war, praying remuneration for certain expenditures made by Captain Moore during such service and subsequently; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JACKSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 238) for the relief of Hester Sprong, widow of David Sprong, to report it back adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee desire the bill to go on the Calendar or to be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. JACKSON. I ask for its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the usual course is, in order to keep the Calendar as clear as possible, for an adverse report to be considered immediately and agreed to, unless some Senator desires to have the question kept open.

Mr. JACKSON. There has been no application to have the bill placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 544) granting an increase of pension to Elijah W. Penny, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. CONGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 587) granting a pension to Phineas Cano, to report adversely thereon, and move its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order for indefinite postponement will be entered, if there be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. On that subject I wish to make a remark. I rose to address the Chair a moment ago, and perhaps on the pending motion to indefinitely postpone I may be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Pennsylvania, who had not presented his bill at the time he was interrupted by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. But there was pending at that time a motion to postpone indefinitely, and I wished to make a remark about that as I do about this motion. Where these motions are made and the persons interested in a bill are present and have their attention called to it, there can be no wrong done by the indefinite postponement of this class of bills; but there are some bills upon which adverse reports have been made and indefinite postponement ordered in which I was interested, but I did not happen to notice them at the time. I think those bills where there is an adverse report should go upon the Calendar, and be subject to the consideration of the Senate when the Calendar is called. For that reason I hope that all pension bills may not be indefinitely postponed when reported upon adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan object to the present consideration of the motion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONGER. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection places the bill on the Calendar. The Chair only orders the indefinite postponement when no objection is made to that course, and for the reason the Chair stated before, that it has been found that the Calendar would become unmanageable if all adverse reports which nobody desires to have contested are kept upon the list.

Mr. CONGER. I understand the rule to be that if a motion to reconsider the motion of indefinite postponement is not made by the next legislative day it can not be made at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to reconsider may be made during the next two legislative days.

Mr. INGALLS. Unanimous consent never has been refused to allow the reconsideration of an adverse report, and no injustice can occur, I will suggest to the Senator from Michigan. Any Senator interested in a bill that has been adversely reported can have it reinstated at once upon request; but if the practice he suggests were followed of placing every adverse report upon the Calendar, it would soon become so bulky and unwieldy as to be unmanageable; and, besides that, great additional labor would be imposed upon the Secretary and his clerks. I would suggest, inasmuch as the latitude is so wide and the facilities are so numerous for obtaining reinstatement, that the better plan would be, whenever the case is desired to go upon the Calendar, to ask permission that that action may be taken.

Mr. CONGER. With that understanding I have no objection. One or two cases of that kind have occurred, but I was not aware of the facility with which cases could be put back. I was informed that after two days a motion to reconsider could not be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that a motion to reconsider is not in order after two days, but the Chair will also state that in his experience on the floor he has never known a Senator to be refused who applied to reinstate a case when his attention had not been called to it at the time the adverse report was made.

Mr. CONGER. For the reason given I will not make an objection to the indefinite postponement of this bill, but will trust to the courtesy of the Senate to restore bills that have been thus acted upon when the attention of those interested was not drawn to the adverse report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the bill last reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] will stand indefinitely postponed if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 359) granting a pension to Samuel P. Bronson, submitted an adverse report thereon and moved its indefinite postponement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the request of the Senator from Missouri the bill with the adverse report will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 241) to repeal section 8 of an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 271) for the relief of Louisa Boddy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1035) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union agency, Indian Territory, for services and expenses, reported it without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 368) for the relief of Oscar Eastmond and James W. Atwill, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 439) for the relief of George A. Jaeger, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 56) for the relief of Lieut. C. C. Norton, submitted an adverse report thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Select Committee on the Mississippi River Improvements, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate of the 22d of February, 1883, "to examine into the works now in progress for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo and the methods employed in making such improvements," &c., submitted a report, which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1095) granting a pension to Aaron Shurtleff; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1096) for the relief of Daniel H. B. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1097) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to approve certain leases made with certain Indian tribes in the Territory of Arizona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1098) for the relief of V. B. Horton, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1099) for the relief of Thomas M. Harbin; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to say that I introduce the bill by request. I know nothing about it myself. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1100) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Amanda M. Smyth; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1101) to secure reasonable rates of transportation to the people over railroads aided by the issue of large amounts of United States bonds and public lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANDERSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1102) requiring transcripts of judgments obtained in United States courts to be filed with county officers having charge of judgment records in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1103) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Fenton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1104) relative to acknowledgments of conveyances of land in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1105) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a suitable building for a marine hospital at Pensacola, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DAWES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1106) for the relief of Frances H. Plummer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1107) for the relief of John A. Knowles; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1108) to provide for the sale of the Iowa Indian reservation in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, for the issuance of a patent for a reservation for the Iowa tribe of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1109) for the relief of John B. Lowry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENDLETON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1110) for the relief of James H. Hamilton; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALDRICH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1111) granting an increase of pension to Sally Rodman, widow of General Isaac P. Rodman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1112) granting a pension to John Sweeney; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1113) granting a pension to Ann E. Manchester; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1114) granting an increase of pension to William Shannon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1115) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the recovery of damages for the infringement of patents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 40) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Antonio Barrios, of Guatemala, and José Victor Zavala, of Nicaragua; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SLATER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of H. H. Wheeler be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

On motion of Mr. PUGH, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of the Mobile Marine Dock Company be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On the motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Senate bill 1732 (Forty-seventh Congress, second session), to refund excessive duties levied by overvaluation of the Austrian florin, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion of Mr. GROOME, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Harriet W. Shacklett be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse report.

THOMAS E. BRAWNER.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some days ago I introduced a bill (S. 358) granting a pension to Thomas E. Brawner, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions. I desire to withdraw that bill, as the case is still pending in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions. I do not know exactly what order to ask for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can ask for an order discharging the committee, and then he can have the bill either indefinitely postponed or laid upon the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will ask, then, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be brought back to the Senate and laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that the bill be laid on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is the order of the Senate.

DISCOVERY OF PHOSPHATES IN BRAZIL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested (if he deem it not incompatible with the public interest) to furnish the Senate with all papers and correspondence, and with all information in the possession of the Department of State, relating to the discovery of phosphates upon the coast of Brazil by a citizen of the United States; and also as to the rights of the United States therein under the laws of Brazil, and what steps have been taken, if any, to avail of the benefits of said discovery to our shipping and agricultural interests.

MEAT EXPORTATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Chair, pursuant to the rule, will lay before the Senate the resolutions on the Calendar in their order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the resolution I offered in regard to American pork come up now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule says that the Chair shall lay before the Senate during the residue of the morning hour the resolutions that were offered on previous days. The Chair understands that that means in their order; but the Chair will lay before the Senate the resolution which was under consideration in the last morning hour, if there be no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it is necessary I will move to proceed to the consideration of that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the three resolutions standing at the head of the general order of resolutions are those which have been passed over at the request of the Senators submitting them; and if there be no objection he will lay before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on the 9th of January, which was under consideration at the expiration of the last morning hour. It will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed to the text of the resolution by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], to strike out the words "the expediency of," in the second line, and insert in lieu thereof the words "and report to the Senate," so as to read:

That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate such legislation as shall enable the Executive, &c.

Mr. VAN WYCK. After looking more particularly at the form of the resolution, or rather its direction, as it proposes to refer the subject to a committee for the purpose of determining whether anything shall be reported for the particular object indicated, I feel inclined to withdraw the amendment which I proposed a few days ago, so as not to embarrass the purpose of the resolution. As I stated to the Senator from Rhode Island at the outset, I am in sympathy with him entirely, except that I desire to have it understood, at least as my understanding, that I am willing to concede to other nations the right to act in precisely the same spirit of retaliation which we feel it our duty by a solemn resolution, possibly to resolve itself into a more solemn act of Congress, to recognize and insist upon for ourselves. That was my purport and object, and anything further that may be necessary to be said upon that subject of course may be said at any time when a bill may be reported from the committee to which the resolution shall be referred. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. LOGAN. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say, briefly, Mr. President, that the object of the amendment is that we may have a bill reported to the Senate so as to secure such legislation as the Congress of the United States may deem proper under the circumstances. My own judgment is that legislation of a character that would exclude from this country particular articles sought to be imported here from certain countries until our meats should have a fair opportunity to be transported to and received by those countries would be the proper action for us to take in our legislative capacity.

Now, one word in reference to the manner in which this matter has been treated. On the 25th of June, 1880, a decree was made prohibiting our meats being imported into Germany on the ground, as they charged, that they were diseased in some way; and the decree of prohibition in France was made on the 18th of February, 1881. The latter decree was revoked by the French minister of commerce on the 27th of November last, and on the 28th of December last its revocation was suspended, with a temporary provision allowing American pork to enter the ports of Havre, Bordeaux, and Marseilles until January 20, 1884, subject to examination before it is sold.

For nearly four years our meats have been excluded from the ports of France and Germany; and yet by an examination made by experts of all the meats of different countries ours prove to be the best of all. Why these decrees were made against the importation of our pork to those countries is something I can not divine. At the time the decrees were made a correspondence ensued between our Government and these foreign governments in reference thereto, and on an examination of that correspondence you will find letters written by some of our Secretaries of State (there have been three) which were very vigorous and insisted upon a revocation of the decrees. Promises were made that this should be done, but yet it has not been done. It seems as though the policy has been merely to keep this thing moving along, thinking that after a while, perhaps by persuading and coaxing these foreign governments, the decrees would be revoked and our meats would be permitted to enter their ports.

I do not wish, so far as I am concerned, to do anything that would be out of a proper line of policy; but my own judgment is that when we are dealt with as we have been by those governments in reference to such articles as these and when we have tried diplomacy for four years—and that certainly seems to be long enough—the only way to meet it is to exclude from our ports certain importations from those countries, and give them to understand that while our products that are sound and good can not enter their ports, a certain character of products of theirs can not enter our ports.

I know that some people do not believe in retaliatory legislation. I do, when it is necessary. I believe the time has come when it is necessary for us to say to France and to Germany that there are certain articles of theirs which come to this country which will be excluded unless our products are permitted to enter their ports, where they are sound and good. I am in favor of a bill being reported from the committee establishing this proposition and saying to them, "On this we stand; while there are excluded from your ports our products which are proper articles of commerce and trade, certain articles of yours shall be excluded from our ports." This is all I desire to say in reference to the proposition.

Mr. VEST. Before the Senator from Illinois takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. I have not had time to investigate this matter as thoroughly as I should desire. When he refers to an examination of these meats by experts, do I understand him to say that that has been done in the United States, or was it done upon the continent, in France and Germany? Where has the examination been made?

Mr. LOGAN. I will state to the Senate that in a conversation with the Secretary of State within the last few days he told me that experts, headed by Dr. Loring, our Commissioner of Agriculture, had made examinations, and that it was known not only to our people but to the people of foreign countries that the examinations showed that our pork was the best pork in the market to-day and had been for years. That was the statement made to me by the Secretary of State.

Mr. VEST. I only know that I recently received (I do not know whether other members of the Senate did) the proceedings of the National Cattle-Growers' Association, held in the city of Chicago, and in that I find statements made by gentlemen largely interested in the cattle business to the effect that the remedy to be applied to this injustice on the part of foreign countries would be found first, as an initiatory step, in the organization of a board of inspection, to inspect American meats, and to remove the ground for any such allegations as have been made by the French Government in regard to the unsoundness of the meats imported into their country. I had the honor to present to the Senate yesterday a memorial signed by the largest meat exporters in the city of Saint Louis and in my State, headed by Henry Ames & Co. and Francis Whitaker & Sons, who (with the exception of Armour Brothers, of Chicago) are the largest dealers probably in the West. These gentlemen in that memorial, which was read to the Senate, demand what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] calls retaliatory measures. It seems that in a spirit of national comity the first thing for this country to do, and the first thing for the Committee on Foreign Relations in examining into the question to do, is to ascertain whether we have such a system of inspection as puts beyond doubt the condition of the meat when it leaves our shores. That takes away any ground of complaint or any reason based upon sanitary considerations which either France or Germany might advance in defense of their course. After this has been done, after it is established that these meats are sound and healthy, it seems to me that the next step for the Government of the United States, considering our relations with these great nationalities, is to call their attention officially to the fact that they have regulations and orders in regard to imports which are unjust and inimical to the people of the United States and their interests, and which, considering our mutual treaty regulations, are absolutely and intrinsically unjust and wrong. If, after this is done, France and Germany refuse to take any steps toward remedying the evil and the injustice, in the last resort, then, and then alone, we should be justified in the retaliatory measures which have been suggested on this floor.

I have no sentimentality in regard to retaliation. I understand, as every other business man and as every other Senator on this floor probably understands, that in these matters of national intercourse, as between individuals, the only tribunal is that of self and of self-interest; and at last we have it in our power, after acting in the dignified and, it seems to me, in the just manner which I have mentioned—we have it always within our own power by excluding their imports to bring them to that basis of comity and justice which is right.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the exportation of fresh and salted meats is one of the most important interests of the United States. The business is conducted very largely in the West, where the cattle and the swine are raised and fed and where the great centers of distribution exist. I have received during the past few days a number of communications by wire and by mail, calling my attention to this subject, from those interested in the traffic, and asking me to lend my support to measures of retaliation for the action of foreign governments upon this subject.

I do not understand, Mr. President, that the Governments of France or Germany, or any of the great continental powers, have excluded healthful meats from their ports; the ground of exclusion has been that they were unhealthy; and while there is no doubt that this action has been stimulated by the persons engaged in this business in foreign countries, yet there can be no doubt that the original action was initiated by those governments upon the theory that the meats were unhealthy, that meats which had been manufactured from diseased cattle had been exported to foreign countries and there sold, where the means of detection were of course very difficult.

Now, while the evil complained of is very great, I can not see why we are called upon to do ourselves an injury by preventing the importation of things that we require because other nations are guilty of injustice to us. There is not a man who does not know that the meat supply of Great Britain and France is insufficient for the needs of their populations; they require our meats; it is necessary that they should have them; and if it can be made apparent that the meats that are salted and exported fresh from this country are salutary and wholesome, then I have no doubt the inhibition will be removed. What is required, as it appears to me, is an authoritative inspection by Government officers of all meats that are put up for export, and I should hope that before the Committee on Foreign Relations would devote itself to the preparation of a bill for the infliction of retaliatory measures of exclusion, it would at least attempt, in the spirit indicated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], to institute such a rigid system of inspection by Government officers appointed for that purpose at the manufactories and at our own ports as to render it assured that the meats will be wholesome and salutary. If, after that has been done and the attention of foreign governments has been called to that fact, they then pursue the policy of inhibition or exclusion, it will be time for us to resort to something else. But I can not believe that the Governments of France and Germany, needing these meats, when their supply raised at home is entirely insufficient and inadequate for the wants of their populations, would deliberately, to the great detriment of their own welfare and their own interest, exclude meats known to be wholesome.

We all know that it is one of the commonest statements that the herds of this country are infected with pleuro-pneumonia and with lung-plague, and the Committee on Agriculture has been called upon repeatedly to report measures that should, as they say, tramp out and destroy this infection that exists in our herds here. I think it is entirely justifiable, when it is impossible to tell from an inspection of the preserved product whether it came from a diseased animal or a sound animal, and when there are well-authenticated cases where injury has occurred, that those countries should protect themselves; and until we put ourselves in a position of enabling the people to be assured that the meat exported is sound we cannot blame them for taking precautions that we would take ourselves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired; and it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask permission to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be regarded as before the Senate, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Kansas was replying, I suppose, to what I said and not to the resolution itself. The resolution as I propose to amend it requires the Committee on Foreign Relations to report such legislation as will empower the President to protect our interests. It is not a resolution requiring that the committee shall report legislation of the character which has been mentioned. I made the remark that so far as I was concerned I could not see any other way out of this matter except that character of legislation, and I did so on the ground—and I do not take it back—that all the meats which have been exported from this country to these foreign countries, no matter whether sound or unsound, have been excluded upon the hypothesis that they were unsound. No matter whether inspected or not inspected, no matter whether inspected at Chicago or other places where they are put up or inspected at the port of exportation, no matter what the representations made or the character of the products exported from this country, they have been excluded. Four years have elapsed since these embargoes were laid or these decrees excluding our products from these countries were issued. If in four years we have not been able to induce these countries to understand that we are trying to send them sound meats, I ask the Senator how many more years it will require to convince them?

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me just one word?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. He rather misrepresents the position that I took. I was not replying to any observations that he made in connection with the character of the legislation that was to be invoked. I suppose the theory that the foreign powers exclude our meats upon is not that all the meats exported are unsound, but that it is impossible to distinguish between those that are unsound and those that are healthy.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very likely so, but they exclude them even if they inspect them themselves. Our meats are excluded, it is immaterial whether sound or unsound; the decrees go to a whole and not to a part.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator allow me a word right there?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Illinois states that these meats were excluded by the nations to which he refers without any regard to the fact whether they were healthy or unhealthy. I presume that is so. Then will the Senator go a little further and tell us—for I have no doubt that he has information on this subject—why these nations exclude meats which they know to be healthy when their people need them? Why do these foreign nations do that?

Mr. LOGAN. Inasmuch as I am not a part of the foreign nation that does it, I do not presume that I have a correct opinion on that subject. I perhaps might think that they were excluded in the interest of some individual, and yet I might have an erroneous opinion. I might suppose that they were excluded in the interest of a number of individuals who were engaged in this business in that country, and yet I might be mistaken in that. I have seen that representation made. I will not state it to be a fact, for I do not know it to be so. It is enough to know that these products of ours are excluded. Why they are excluded I certainly am not able to say. I have my opinion about it, but that I do not propose to detain the Senate by giving. I have my notion why they are excluded and what the result will be and what the intention is in the future. I have my views about all that, but it is entirely unnecessary to give them at this time.

But as I was saying, if in four years we have not been able to adopt any means by which we can convince these nations that we export sound meats and do not desire to send them any other kind, I ask how long it will take, how many more years it will take, to convince them? I said I would be in favor of retaliatory measures. Why? For the reason that I do not believe we can establish any inspection or resort to any species of legislation that will entirely satisfy those people on this particular subject. We may be able to do it. If we are able to do it, let us do it; but let us not stop until we do something.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me just here to make a suggestion to him, as I think it will aid him materially in his argument?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I want to simply state the case of Great Britain with regard to the importation of live cattle from the United States and from some ports of the continent. Certain districts were said to be infected, among them the United States of America. There has been a large exportation of cattle from the United States to Great Britain. Those cattle exported from the United States are required to be slaughtered at the port of entry and conveyed as dressed meat to all parts of the British possessions—Great Britain, Ireland, and Scotland at least. A drove of cattle may go from a district that is not an infected district, that was never known to be an infected district, no disease ever having been known among its cattle, and how is it treated? In the eastern part of our country disease has been known to exist, such as pleuro-pneumonia, but there are portions of the United States where it has never reached. A drove of cattle from a healthy district goes over any of the railroads of the United States and is brought to the port of New York, placed on board steamer, and conveyed to Great Britain; but the cattle must be slaughtered at the port of entry in Great Britain. If the same drove of cattle is transported over a Canadian railroad, stopping for forty-eight hours, if you please, in the Province of Canada, and laden at some port in Canada and conveyed to Great Britain as the product of Canada, it is allowed to go anywhere over Great Britain until it reaches its destination. There is an inspection at the port of New York, by reason of the earnest feeling that dealers have had in this matter and the desire that all animals transported from that port should be furnished with a clean bill of health. A competent inspection has been made there; the bill of health has followed the animal to the port of Great Britain, but under the general inhibition the animal has not been allowed to enter the territory otherwise than as I have stated. I suppose the same thing exists in regard to pork. Our country is declared by the French to be an infected district, and no difference is made between good pork and bad pork, if there be any such.

Mr. LOGAN. It makes no difference at all; our whole country, as the Senator says, has been declared an infected district, and our meats have been excluded on that ground. Now, sir, if the Senate is desirous of having what we might call fair play between countries, our committee certainly can report some kind of legislation. If the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kansas think that legislation which would appoint Government inspectors to inspect our meats prior to their being exported to these foreign countries would be satisfactory, let that character of legislation be reported, and let it be passed. I do not believe it would. Every experiment has been tried with these countries that we could try, except this particular character of legislation mentioned by those gentlemen. The inspection that has already been made before the exportation is as good as an inspection by a Government inspector. At the same time let that be tried if it is thought best.

But will any Senator say, as was said by the Senator from Kansas, that we are only injuring ourselves by what is called retaliatory legislation because the articles they export to this country are those which we desire? Will Senators say that the people of this country desire foreign wines that are adulterated? The wines and liquors those nations send to this country which are adulterated probably produce more disease here than the diseased meats sent abroad, if any such have been sent abroad, produce there; and yet we take those things from those people. Why? Is it because we desire articles of that kind? Certainly not. Why is it then that we shall not say to those countries, "While you refuse to take our products which are sound and good, we shall not take your products which are not sound and good?" Is it because we have not nerve enough as a government to say to them, "While you refuse to receive our exports that are good, we will not receive yours that are not good?" Is that the logic? Is that the argument? That is certainly the point to be arrived at if we require these articles from them and must take them anyhow; and if for fear we might offend them we will not exclude the adulterated wines but will still take them, and yet allow them to exclude our meats which are good and sound. I do not see that that is good policy. I do not see that we should be so mild-mannered with those governments as to receive from them that which is not pure, and yet at the same time permit them to refuse to take from us that which is sound and good.

Now, sir, as I said before, while they exclude our meats from their ports, I am in favor of excluding their adulterated wines and other articles which are impure, as a retaliatory measure for the purpose of letting them know that we can exclude articles which they manufacture as well as they can exclude articles that we do. It is sound policy, too. There is nothing unsound in that policy. There is nothing unfair in it; there is nothing improper in it; there is nothing that shows that we are trying to do something for the purpose of creating feeling with those governments or those people. They exclude our exports on a bare suspicion of unsoundness, and I would exclude those that are infected from their countries.

Mr. MAXEY. Allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. MAXEY. If retaliatory legislation should be eventually found to be true policy, would it not be well to have a basis for it? Would it not be the better course to put ourselves in a situation where we could adopt such legislation without any sort of criticism from any source? In other words, we now have only outside testimony as to whether or not this meat is pure or impure, healthy or unhealthy; but if we have our own commissioners, experts, to inspect the meat before it leaves here, would not that be a basis for legislation much better than we have now?

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. This resolution carries upon its face any kind of legislation that the committee sees proper to report.

Mr. MAXEY. I was referring to the argument of the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. The resolution has not in it the point I am making. It only requires the committee to report legislation that will give the President power to protect our interests. If it is by inspection, that is one thing; if it is by retaliation, that is another thing. It is for the Senate, when the legislation is reported, to take such view of the case as it sees proper.

Mr. MAXEY. I understood that, but the Senator from Illinois intimated the line of legislation he thought proper. That, of course, will go before the Committee on Foreign Relations. Like the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kansas, I agree that a point may be reached when retaliatory legislation may be wise policy; but are we in a situation now, without further light on the subject, to adopt that line of policy? Germany tells us, and so does France, that the reason of the exclusion is not because they want to exclude American meat, but because this class of meat which they exclude is unhealthy. If that be true, their position is perfectly tenable, indeed impregnable. Now, we think that is not the case, but that the reason is such as was assigned by the Senator from Illinois, that parties in interest having meats put up in other countries are producing impressions on the minds of the German and French Governments when the fact alleged does not exist. How can we arrive at this, then? If we have a corps of experts appointed by the authority of the Government, whose duty it shall be to inspect our meats before they leave and those meats thus exported are reported to be healthful, then we have something absolutely sound upon which to base retaliatory legislation. On that ground it seems to me we can base legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. Would it not be upon the same theory, however, that they exclude our meats if we should say to them that while we have a suspicion of the unhealthiness of wines, and things of that kind, they shall be excluded? Is not that the same principle precisely?

Mr. MAXEY. Undoubtedly, if wines or other things are introduced into this country which are unhealthful, so far as the States are concerned every State has laws against impure and unwholesome meats and drinks, and I have no doubt Congress could pass a law prohibiting the importation of unwholesome meat or drink; but I say that it will not do for us to pass a law of that kind without some basis on which to act. We must have a corps of men officially responsible to us, experts to test that question, so as to have something tangible and definite to rely upon.

Mr. LOGAN. That is a matter for legislation. I only say we have a right to do it and we ought to do it. We may exclude adulterated wines and adulterated articles coming to us either as food or drink.

Mr. MAXEY. I am not disputing that proposition at all.

Mr. LOGAN. That is my proposition. If they legislate against us on account of alleged impure food, why should we not legislate against impure food and drink and exclude them by inspection, the same as they exclude ours? What objection is there to that?

Mr. MAXEY. The point I was endeavoring to make is that while the views of the Senator from Illinois go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and of course will have their impression and ought to have, other views should in like manner go. While the resolution itself is broad enough to cover the character of legislation indicated by the Senator from Kansas, at the same time it is well for the committee to know that there are many here who believe that before we adopt extreme measures of retaliation we should know precisely what we are doing.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, I think this discussion is a little premature. It is quite evident that the question can not be settled at this time. I understand that we shall in the course of a few days receive from the State Department the entire correspondence with the French and German Governments in regard to the question of the prohibition of our meats being received into those countries. Along with that, I have no doubt, will come a report from the commission appointed by the President to investigate the healthfulness of the meats which are packed in this country and shipped abroad.

I will simply say that the Committee on Agriculture, in connection with the convention of cattle-growers and dealers in meats, have been in session for some days, and that that committee will undoubtedly present to this body a bill with regard to the protection of our cattle against pleuro-pneumonia, and bills also for the inspection of all our meat products which are exported abroad. Of course these bills are not at all in the direction of retaliatory legislation, but in the direction of preservative legislation. And whenever this resolution shall finally be disposed of, in consideration of the wide range the debate has taken and the views expressed by the Senator now in the chair [Mr. INGALLS] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], as this resolution might call for the introduction of bills looking to the inspection of our meats, I think I shall be warranted in then moving that the resolution shall go to the Committee on Agriculture. I do not care to go into a discussion of that to-day, for I think it premature. I should prefer that this matter wait until the correspondence comes to us from the State Department and the Agricultural Department on this question. For that reason I prefer that the resolution shall now go over.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

SAMUEL H. LOCKETT.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senator from California to allow me to call up and have passed a bill to remove the political disabilities of a citizen of Alabama. It passed the House at the last session, but it received a short amendment which prevented its passing the Senate. It will not occupy two minutes of time if there is no objection; and if the Senator will yield I ask to have it considered now.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If no one else objects, I shall not interpose.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 713.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 713) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel H. Lockett, of Alabama, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 17 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NAMING OF A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore notified the Senate that he would probably be absent at the opening of the session to-morrow on account of a meeting of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and asked unanimous consent to designate Mr. JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, to perform the duties of the chair for the day in the event of his absence; which was granted.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 15, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The reading of the Journal of yesterday was begun, when

Mr. BLAND asked unanimous consent that the reading of so much of the Journal as related to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions be omitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, said: I withdraw my objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to omitting, in reading the Journal, that portion relating to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The remainder of the Journal was then read, and as read was approved.

WILLIAM C. SPENCER.

Mr. COVINGTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3517) for the relief of William C. Spencer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ROAD FROM FORT SCOTT, KANS., TO NATIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. PERKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3518) appropriating $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the completion of the macadam road from Fort Scott, Kans., to the national cemetery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADULTERATIONS OF FOOD, MEDICINES, ETC.

Mr. GREEN. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will call for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is popularly charged and generally believed that divers and various articles of food, drink, and medicine are adulterated by admixtures with baser and usually deleterious substances; and

Whereas such adulterated compounds are injurious to public health and calculated to shorten human life: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Public Health be authorized and directed to inquire into the truth of said alleged abuse, and to report to this House the result of their investigation at as early a day as practicable; and if it shall be shown that such practices exist, then to suggest or recommend in their report what further legislation, if any, is necessary to correct the wrong. And that they may the more effectually do their work,

Be it further resolved, That said committee be, and they are hereby, empowered to send for persons and papers and to employ such chemical and medical experts as they may deem necessary to carry out the end, aim, and object in view.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution just read?

Mr. LEWIS. I object.

Mr. GREEN. Then I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Public Health.

There was no objection, and the resolution was referred accordingly.

Mr. REAGAN. What was the reference of the resolution just presented by the gentleman from North Carolina?

The SPEAKER. It was referred to the Committee on Public Health, as requested by the gentleman introducing it.

Mr. REAGAN. I would suggest to the gentleman that a bill on the general subject is before the Committee on Commerce.

IMPROVEMENT OF CHARLESTON HARBOR, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorial of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce concerning the jetties in the harbor of Charleston, S. C.

There being no objection, the following memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

CHARLESTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Charleston, S. C., January 12, 1884.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

The memorial of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce respectfully sheweth:

That it is of vital importance to the commercial and agricultural interests of this city and State that the work upon the jetties at the entrance of this harbor should be speedily completed.

That the partial work already done at an expense of $1,045,000 to the Government requires immediate protection from deterioration and injury.

That all work upon the jetties has ceased from the 28th of November last from exhaustion of funds.

That the appropriation of $755,000 asked for by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for the continuation of the work, should be granted by Congress as early as possible, not only to insure continuous work, but to protect what has already been constructed, and thereby save increased expense to the Government in the future.

The following information recently obtained from Lieutenant Bailey, the United States engineer officer in charge of improvements in Charleston Harbor, will show the present condition of the jetties and the necessity that exists for the work promptly to be resumed, and with ample funds for that purpose:

The crest of the bar, between the lines of the jetties, had moved seaward 500 feet from 1882 to 1883. The survey to date shows that this outward movement has extended along the crest for 2,000 feet south of the south jetty, averaging 500 feet outward, and that this movement is not so marked north of the north jetty.

As the outpour of the ebb between the jetties tends southeast, these observations seem to indicate that the effect is due to the jetties.

The filling of deep pockets between the jetties and consequent tendency to a more uniform channel, and the pronounced outward movement of Jim Evan's Shoal, can, I think, be fairly attributed to the jetties. Seventeen and one-tenth feet can now be carried through the Swash channel at mean high water, and 17.5 feet through Pumpkin Hill.

There are many reasons why work should be promptly resumed, and with ample funds. The following may be mentioned:

The outer end of the north jetty is now 1,000 feet within the outer 18-foot curve. The south jetty approaches to within but 4,700 feet of this curve.

The southward wash around the end of the south jetty will increase the expense of future work through delay by necessitating greater height of jetty.

The present work very probably interferes with the stability of the Pumpkin Hill channel. Shoaling is now suspected there. Future work will certainly affect the regimen of the Pumpkin Hill channel.

The jetties at present may be considered to represent a condition of preparation for the final change of best channel from Pumpkin Hill to the Swash.

This critical transformation should be well supported by ample resources.

The change should be rapidly effected, and the probable period of poor navigation in both channels rendered as short as possible.

Assuming that Congress, in its wisdom, considered the expenditure of $1,800,000 for the present project a good investment, say at 3 per cent., then $54,000 will be lost for every year's delay of the work.

The great advantage to this port and vicinity, and resulting increase of revenue to the General Government, to be secured by this improved channel must represent a considerable sum for even one year, which sum is also lost by delay.

The present length of the north jetty is 14,361 feet; of south jetty, 14,109 feet—or each about two and one-half miles.

Jetty work ceased from exhaustion of funds November 28, 1883.

Your memorialists would further represent that Charleston has a population of over 50,000, and transacts a large exporting and importing business, with abundant facilities for increasing the same. The value of her exports, foreign and coastwise, exceeds $37,000,000 per annum. The manufacturing business is large and increasing. Charleston, moreover, is on the margin of the sea. The deep water of the Atlantic beyond the bar is but six miles from the city. Within the land-locked harbor, with deep water to the wharves, is ample room for the entire shipping of the largest city in the Union. Wharf accommodations are ample for the trade, and can be largely increased when necessary.

The serious impediment to her increased commerce and prosperity is the comparative shallowness of the water on the bar. There is at present 17½ feet of water on the bar at mean high tide; the national jetties now in progress of construction by the United States Government will increase the depth of water to at least 25 feet, making Charleston incomparably the best port and harbor on the South Atlantic.

Your memorialists therefore humbly pray that the appropriation asked for by the Chief Engineer of the United States Army be speedily granted.

E. H. FROST, President.
WM. A. COURTENAY,
First Vice-President.
THEO. D. JERVEY,
Second Vice-President.
SAM'L Y. TUPPER,
LOUIS D. DESAUSSURE,
JAMES S. MURDOCH,
Committee under resolutions of the Chamber.

P. J. BARBOT, Secretary.

WILLIAM D. STEWART.

Mr. CRISP, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3519) for the relief of William D. Stewart and other heirs at law of James Stewart, of Americus, Ga., deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the Chair will proceed to call the committees for reports.

UNDERVALUATION OF IMPORTS, ETC.

Mr. MILLS. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report the resolution which I send to the desk as a substitute for two resolutions, one offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], the other by his colleague [Mr. BELMONT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish this House with any information in his possession, including reports from United States consuls, special agents of the Treasury Department, appraisers of customs, and decisions of the Department, concerning the undervaluation, false classification, and other irregular practices in the importation of foreign goods, wares, and merchandise since January 1, 1882, and in his discretion prior thereto; and that he be requested to recommend what legislation, if any, in his opinion, is needed to prevent fraud on the revenue resulting from the causes above specified.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION OF WHISKY TAX.

Mr. MORRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back the resolution which I send to the desk and recommend its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish this House with copies of all letters of collectors of internal revenue relative to suspending the collection of tax for whisky listed in September, October, November, and December of the year 1880; also to inform this House whether the time for collecting tax due on whisky listed October, 1880, in the Allegheny or twenty-third collection district for the State of Pennsylvania has been extended, and if so, by what authority.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GENERAL WARD B. BURNETT.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the petition of General Ward B. Burnett.

The SPEAKER. What is the recommendation of the committee?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I am instructed by the committee to make an explanation in reference to this report. The petition of General Burnett was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary under the impression that it involved questions of law which would make appropriate some legislation on the part of Congress. But an investigation of the matter has disclosed that all the questions of law involved have been passed upon and disposed of by the Supreme Court of the United States in a proceeding to which this petitioner was a party. Under these circumstances the Judiciary Committee have not thought it appropriate to take any action, and have directed that the petition be reported back to this House with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Committee on the Judiciary will be discharged from the further consideration of this petition, and it will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the petition was referred accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report for adoption a resolution calling for executive information.

The SPEAKER (after examining the resolution). The Chair will state to the gentleman from California that this resolution can not be considered at this time. It is a resolution of inquiry which has not been referred to the committee.

Mr. ROSECRANS. It originated in the committee.

The SPEAKER. It can be reported by the committee, but can not be considered now. It may go to the Calendar.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Then I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. That can not be asked during this call.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Then I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. REED. Is the report upon something that was referred to the committee? If not, I make the point of order that the committee can not originate legislation.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is withdrawn.

GENERAL ALFRED PLEASONTON.

Mr. BAYNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1101) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton, a major-general; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. STEELE. In accordance with leave already granted by the House, I present the views of a minority of the Committee on Military Affairs upon the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be printed with the report of the committee.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back bills of the following titles; when the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and they were referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 656) for the relief of Mrs. Fanny S. Conway; and

A bill (H. R. 2207) for the relief of Mrs. Agnes E. Fry.

RECEPTION OF GIFTS BY UNITED STATES OFFICERS.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the following resolution, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to inform this House whether any officer of the Navy has received or accepted any gift or present from any king, prince, or foreign state without the consent of Congress and contrary to the provisions of the Constitution.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy communicate to this House whether the officers——

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged resolution, which could be introduced at some other time for action. If reported now it can only be for reference.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw it, then, for the present. I had an idea that it was a question of privilege, but not under this call.

FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANTS.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on the Public Lands, to which has been referred the subject-matter touching forfeiture of railroad grants, to report a bill (H. R. 3520) declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads, and to move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed. I also move that the minority report made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] be also printed, to accompany the majority report.

There was no objection; and the bill was received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report and the views of the minority, ordered to be printed.

SETTLING OF INDIANS IN SEVERALTY.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. 65) to provide for settling the Indians of Los Angeles, San Bernardino, and San Diego Counties, California, upon lands in severalty; and the same was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LEXINGTON, KY.

Mr. LEWIS also, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back the bill (H. R. 593) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Lexington, Ky.; and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LOUISA BODDY.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1292) for the relief of Louisa Boddy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN B. MONTEITH, DECEASED.

Mr. GEORGE also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 1319) to adjust the accounts of John B. Monteith, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLOSING OF GAPS IN MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 3504) to close the gaps in the levees of the Mississippi River, and for other structures for the improvement of the navigation and protection of the commerce of said river; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. BEAN.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 1710) granting a pension to George W. Bean; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HENRY C. WORTHINGTON.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 1621) for the relief of Henry C. Worthington; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A. G. TEBAULT.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 1614) for the relief of A. G. Tebault; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DAVID SINGLETON.

Mr. GEDDES also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the petition of David Singleton; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER P. ROSE.

Mr. GEDDES also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the petition of Alexander P. Rose; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF DADE COUNTY, MISSOURI.

Mr. GEDDES also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 928) for the relief of the county of Dade, in the State of Missouri; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN P. T. DAVIS.

Mr. GEDDES also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 328) for the relief of John P. T. Davis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MAJ. WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

Mr. GEDDES also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. 1378) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, paymaster in the United States Army; and moved its reference to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I object, unless the bill properly belongs to the Committee on Claims and not to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William M. Maynadier, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,726.50, the amount paid by him into the Treasury of the United States in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster at Prescott, Arizona Territory, caused by robbery committed by his clerk, D. D. Chandler, at Prescott, April 3, 1876, as shown by the finding and report of a board of inquiry appointed by General Kautz, commanding that military department, to investigate the circumstances of the loss; and also the further sum of $100 paid by said Maynadier for the arrest of Chandler, the restoration of both sums having been recommended by said board of inquiry.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

J. W. STONE.

Mr. GEDDES also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the petition of J. W. Stone; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with adverse recommendations petitions of the following titles; which were severally laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of the city of Memphis, Tenn., asking compensation for the use and occupation of the navy-yard at Memphis during and subsequent to the late civil war,

The petition of Hugh Core, of Pulaski County, Arkansas, for property taken by the Federal forces during the late war of the rebellion; and also

The petition of Elias R. Core, of Pulaski County, Arkansas, for property taken from him by the Federal forces during the late rebellion.

JOHN TAYLOR & SON.

Mr. BOWEN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1198) for the relief of John Taylor & Son; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN D. LAKIN.

Mr. BOWEN also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 1264, a bill (H. R. 3521) for the relief of Benjamin D. Lakin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. TULLY, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with adverse recommendation bill and petitions of the following titles; which were severally laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 860) for the relief of Alfred Houston;

The petition of Isaiah Sweat;

The petition of R. H. Wood, executor of the estate of J. H. Bills, deceased; and also

The petition of Z. C. Nolen.

SIDNEY HENDERSON.

Mr. TULLY also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 3522) for the relief of Sidney Henderson, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WEAVER & STERRY.

On motion of Mr. MULDROW, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 138) for the relief of Weaver & Sterry; and the same was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SPECIAL DAYS FOR BUSINESS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. Under instructions from the Committee on the District of Columbia I desire to submit the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent that it be read and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the second and fourth Mondays of each calendar month hereafter during the continuance of the Forty-eighth Congress, after the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions, be, and the same are hereby, set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reference of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Rules.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am also instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer the resolution which I send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That authority be given to this committee to report directly to the House all bills involving appropriation for the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that this does not come properly from that committee as a report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Virginia if this subject was referred to the committee?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am unable to hear the question of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia that a point of order is made that this resolution does not come properly from that committee on this call for reports, the subject not having been referred to the committee, and the Chair is inclined to think that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing as far as I am individually concerned to have the resolution go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REED. There seems to be a general misunderstanding on the part of the committees of the House this morning that they can originate legislation. I suppose nothing is better established than that the committees are the mere creatures of the House, for the purpose of doing its work and not their own; that the House must initiate all legislation by referring the matter to a committee, and that otherwise the committee has no right to report upon the subject-matter at all. This, it seems to me, ought to be clearly understood in view of the proceedings that have taken place here this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already indicated that the resolution was not in order under this call.

Mr. REED. I speak because there have been several instances this morning of such action on the part of the committees.

Mr. BARBOUR. I withdraw the resolution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice having been called,

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE said: I am instructed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to report back to the House and to recommend the adoption of the resolution referred to that committee yesterday calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information.

The SPEAKER. If that resolution is reported back now it can not be disposed of under the call of committees for reports. Under the rules nothing can be done in that call except to refer the reports which are made to the appropriate calendars.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. This resolution was referred to the committee yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can report back the resolution, but it can not be acted upon by the House at this time. But the Chair will state to the gentleman that this is a privileged report, and can be made at any time when the House is not engaged in other business.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I will submit the report and ask the privilege of calling it up after the call of committees is completed.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done. If the gentleman submits the report now it must go to the Calendar.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Then I withdraw it for the present.

PUBLIC ROADS AND HIGHWAYS POST-ROUTES.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1482) making all public roads and highways post-routes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INFORMATION AS TO ARMY OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports has been concluded.

Mr. LYMAN. I ask unanimous consent, on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs, to submit a resolution for present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives without delay the name, rank, and regiment or corps of each officer of the Army borne on the sick report for long periods or continuously, as unable to perform full duty, since July 1, 1876, to December 31, 1883;

The name, rank, regiment, or corps of each officer of the Army who has been recommended for retirement since July 1, 1876, to December 31, 1883; the name and date of retirement of each officer who has been retired;

The name, rank, and regiment or corps of each officer of the Army now on sick leave, or unable to perform full duty, and in each case when said officer ceased doing full duty;

The length of time each officer who has been retired since July 1, 1882, up to December 31, 1883, had been on the sick report or off duty previous to his retirement, in each case giving his name, rank, and regiment or corps;

The name, rank, and regiment or corps of each officer in the Army who has been recommended by a board of retirement, and the date of retirement of each officer retired thereupon, showing those who have not been retired, up to December 31, 1883;

The number of vacancies that existed in the grade of second lieutenant in the Army on the 1st day of September, 1879, and on the 20th day of November, 1880;

The names of all persons appointed from civil life to be second lieutenants, and the names of all non-commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Army appointed to be second lieutenants, with the dates of appointment, in each of the two years ending June 30, 1880, and June 30, 1881.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. LYMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. McMILLIN. By direction of the Committee on Claims, I desire to submit the resolution which I send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be authorized during this session only, until the further order of the House, to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the same rate of compensation now paid to session committee clerks.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

HEIRS OF GEORGE W. WELSH.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3523) for the relief of the heirs of George W. Welsh; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IMPORTS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 111) authorizing the President, during the recess of Congress, to prohibit the importation of any imports injurious to public health from those countries which, upon the same ground, prohibit the importation of any American goods or products; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. As directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for reference to the Committee on Printing the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution to print a report made to the Postmaster-General relating to the carrying of mails.

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print 1,000 extra copies of the report of the committee appointed by the Postmaster-General to devise a more complete system of gauging the rates of pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883; 3,400 copies for the use of the House, and 600 copies for the use of the Senate.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 112) was received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

TON-KA-WA INDIANS.

Mr. THROCKMORTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3524) for the benefit of the Ton-ka-wa Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH HARPER.

Mr. BINGHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3525) granting a pension to Sarah Harper; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. AMANDA M. SMITH.

Mr. BINGHAM also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3526) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Amanda M. Smith, widow of the late General Thomas A. Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I am recorded in the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday as having "laid on the Clerk's desk papers relating to the improvement of Pearl River and of Big Black River and other navigable streams in the State of Mississippi." They were bills which I introduced, and I ask that the Journal be corrected, in order that the bills may be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Journal is correct. The bills referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] under the rule of the House went into the petition-box and through that to the proper committee. The Chair will cause this rule to be read, because there seems to be some misunderstanding about it among members.

The Clerk read as follows:

All bills for improvement of rivers and harbors and for the establishment or change of post-routes shall be delivered to the Clerk, as in the case of petitions and memorials, for reference to appropriate committees.—[Rule XXI, clause 5.]

The SPEAKER. And such bills are not printed except by order of the House.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then I ask consent of the House for the printing of those bills.

Mr. KEIFER. Let us understand this matter. Why should these bills be distinguishable from other bills of like character? All should be printed or none.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, it is not so ordered.

AMERICAN IRON AND STEEL STEAMERS.

Mr. REAGAN. I was not in my place this morning when the Committee on Commerce was called. I now ask consent to report back from that committee the bill (H. R. 59) to encourage the building of American iron and steel steamers. As the provisions of the bill relate to the carrying of the mails, I ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from its further consideration and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

REINHARD WAGNER.

Mr. CURTIN. I ask consent to submit for present consideration the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby requested, if in his opinion it be not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish for the information of the House of Representatives copies of correspondence on file in the Department of State in relation to the reported arrest at Lodz, in Russian Poland, of Reinhard Wagner, a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CURTIN. I will just say that that resolution is offered with the knowledge and approbation of the State Department.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, considered, and adopted.

Mr. CURTIN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOMBARDMENT OF ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT, ETC.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back with the recommendation that the same be adopted the resolution of inquiry which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to inform this House whether any officer of the Navy has received or accepted any gift or present from any king, prince, or foreign state without the consent of Congress and contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy communicate to this House whether the officers and sailors of the United States ever rendered any service to the British navy in the recent bombardment or occupation of Alexandria, in Egypt, together with all correspondence relating thereto now in the possession of the Department.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not rise to oppose these resolutions, but to ask that the gentleman who reports them from the committee shall state some reasons at least for the first resolution. It seems to be implied by that resolution that officers of the United States Navy have been violating the Constitution of the United States in accepting gifts from foreign powers. I should be very glad to hear from gentlemen on the other side some reason that will justify our adopting a resolution that assumes that such a violation has taken place.

Mr. COX, of New York. In response to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] I will say that at the request of the Committee on Naval Affairs I have made some inquiry, and find that there is a basis for the two resolutions presented.

The gentleman from New York, my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON], who presented the resolutions to the House and asked their reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs, states that he is advised that one of the officers of the Navy has boasted of receiving a present from a foreign government. It is within my own knowledge that one officer at least has received a very valuable present from, I think, the Government of Sweden and Norway; but he has very properly asked the consent of Congress to accept it. The answer to this resolution may in this regard vindicate a very meritorious officer.

As to the second resolution and the assistance which our Navy may have given at the bombardment of Alexandria, Egypt, it is within my own knowledge that there were some officers, American officers, who performed very valuable services at the time of that bombardment. If any one has assisted the British wrongfully, or against the ordinary rules of neutrality between nations, I would like that the facts should come out, so that we may know who are deserving and who are not.

I introduced the other day a joint resolution giving the thanks of this Congress to Col. Charles C. Long, who went into Alexandria during the bombardment and conflagration and who rescued our consulate and did more than any other person in saving that city from conflagration. Although this resolution was not intended by the gentleman who introduced it to reach all these cases, I think it will redound to the honor of some men if the correspondence shall become known. And if any person connected with our Navy may be subject to reproach by reason of that correspondence, surely we ought to know it.

I will yield now to my friend from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] who introduced the resolution, if he desires to say anything about it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, is this discussion in order?

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution. That is debatable.

Mr. REED. Let us have the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I wish to say simply a word or two, as I presume there will be no objection to the passage of these resolutions. I understand, Mr. Speaker, the charge has been made that our officers, marines, and men connected with our Navy made themselves conspicuous and obsequious in aiding England in slaughtering the Egyptians. This charge has been met with a quasi denial. This matter was up in this House during the last session. I had introduced a resolution similar to this, but before the committee had acted upon it the Secretary of the Navy, anticipating the action of the committee, sent in a communication, which did not bring down the facts to the date of the bombardment. While the communication of the Secretary of the Navy was a quasi denial that our troops had taken any part with England in that bombardment, it did not meet the question. The matter was not properly presented to the Secretary, as it will be by these resolutions. So general was the belief that this thing had been done, that in the exhibition of fireworks at Manhattan Beach, on Coney Island, where, as gentlemen know, they have had costly and brilliant displays of pyrotechnics, at the conclusion of this exhibition, which, by the way, was gotten up by an Englishman imported for the occasion, it was—represented that when England was slaughtering honest Egyptians who had some idea of liberty—perhaps they had read of Washington—it was represented that after the English had expended their fury upon these poor Egyptians the American tars were rushed in and the Egyptians used up.

If that is what our Navy has been doing, if we have no other use for it than to aid tyrants, let us call them home, and set them to hoeing potatoes or raising corn. I object to such a use of our American Navy abroad. Although the charge that our officers and men had rendered such assistance has been met with the quasi denial to which I have referred, the British admiral in London—at the lord mayor's dinner, I think—rendered his homage to our American Navy, who obeyed him as servants on that occasion and helped him to do his disgraceful work. The charge is either true or false, and we are entitled to know the facts.

As to the other part of the resolution, it has been stated and not denied—indeed I believe it has been openly acknowledged—that an officer of the United States who was present at the inauguration of another tyrant in another country made himself so agreeable to the tyrant that he was rewarded by the Czar with a snuff-box (which he does not use, I believe) gemmed with diamonds, worth $15,000. This has been published abroad as if it were a graceful act. What did our ancestors do? They provided that no person in the employment of the United States should receive any gift from any foreign government. Even a wreath of roses thrown by direction of a foreign power upon the coffin of a dead servant of this country was a violation of the Constitution. Though it has thus been provided in our Constitution that "no person holding any office of profit or trust under them (the United States) shall, without the consent of Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind from any king, prince, or foreign state," such as our American minister has recently received from the University of Edinburg—a clear violation of the Constitution, though I do not wonder at it, because he is more an Englishman than American—these things are going on from day to day; and such apathy has been exhibited on the part of the United States, that officers of the Government do not hesitate to publish it abroad that they have violated in this respect the mandate of the Constitution. Here is an American commodore sent to Russia to witness the inauguration of perhaps the greatest tyrant in the world, and he comes home gemmed all over with snuff-boxes and diamonds—the insignia of the worn-out splendor of tyranny—and calls upon the people of the United States to sanction what was done in violation of the Constitution. This snobbery, this imitation of the ways and manners of tyrants abroad, has dishonored the service of our Government. We demand that the public servants shall obey the Constitution and shall not hobnob with tyrants, making the world believe, as it does believe, that the destiny of this great country is to "play second fiddle" to all the despots of the world.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE A. MARSHALL.

Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3527) granting a pension to George A. Marshall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NAVIGATION OF DETROIT RIVER.

Mr. MAYBURY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

Whereas the Lime Kiln Crossing (so called) in the Detroit River is the most dangerous obstruction to navigation in the chain of the great lakes of the Northwest; and

Whereas upwards of forty thousand vessels, whose estimated freight is over seventeen millions of tons aggregate, pass through the Detroit River in a single season, and are subject to constant damage and detention at the crossing aforesaid; and

Whereas the plan for completing the improvement has been fully approved by the engineering department in charge of the work, and the estimated cost of completing the same has been reported and approved by the Engineer-in-Chief; and

Whereas of the original estimate of $1,100,000 required to complete the work but $335,000 have been expended, while the further sum of $227,000 will remove all obstructions in the channel, render its navigation safe and convenient, and is urgently demanded: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House be, and is hereby, requested to take into consideration the wisdom of having the improvement referred to in the preamble of this resolution completed within the present year and of making the requisite appropriation to that end.

RICHARD F. BARRETT.

Mr. GRAVES (by Mr. DOCKERY) introduced, by unanimous consent, a bill (H. R. 3528) for the relief of Richard F. Barrett; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

E. H. GEORGE AND H. W. WALKER.

Mr. MOULTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to E. H. George the sum of $125, and H. W. Walker the sum of $250, the said compensation being for services rendered in closing and opening new books in the office of Sergeant-at-Arms and preparing mileage reports for payment.

SHIPPING.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the bill H. R. 2228, with the accompanying report, be reprinted. It is the bill which was introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] on the subject of shipping. I am informed that the number heretofore ordered to be printed is exhausted, while there continues to be a large demand for the bill and report.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope my colleague will also include in his motion the printing of amendments to the bill.

Mr. SLOCUM. Yes, I will also include in my motion to reprint the amendments offered to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

TARIFF ON IMPORTED WOOL.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have received memorials and resolutions adopted by citizens of my district praying for a restoration of the tariff of 1867 on imported wool, and I move that they be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. It is not necessary to read them.

There was no objection.

The papers are as follows:

Whereas one-third, if not more, of the farmers are dependent upon sheep husbandry for a livelihood; and

Whereas there are no notable benefits derived from the late tariff legislation in the interests of this great producing class, but, on the contrary, it works disastrously to their material welfare; and

Whereas a judicious and equitable tariff on wool is the only hope of maintaining and perpetuating sheep husbandry in this country: Therefore,

Resolved by the wool-growers of Licking County in convention assembled, That the reduction of the tariff upon wool by the late Congress was a base ingratitude, and inimical to the best interests of 20,000,000 laborers of the United States, and likewise prejudicial to the financial prosperity of our nation.

Resolved, That justice and equity demand the restoration of the wool tariff of 1867, and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to use every effort to restore said tariff on wool.

Resolved, That our thanks are due Hon. GEORGE L. CONVERSE for his timely efforts to restore the old tariff upon wool.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress assembled, and that the proceedings of this convention be published in our county papers.

I hereby certify that the above resolutions were adopted by the Licking County Wool-Growers' Association, December 29, 1883.

H. W. HOWE,
Secretary Licking County Wool-Growers' Association.

At a called meeting of the wool-growers of Guernsey County, Ohio, the following resolutions were passed, December 13, 1883:

Whereas in the course of tariff legislation the Forty-seventh Congress reduced the tariff on wool to the extent of the ad valorem duty thereon, thereby crippling the industry and rendering it unremunerative: Therefore,

Resolved, That we ask Congress at its present session to restore the tariff on wool in at least an equal degree with the tariff of 1867; and

Resolved, That we make the question a non-partisan political issue, and support only men who will honestly labor to secure the above desired legislation.

Very truly, yours,

W. S. BRASHEAR,
Secretary Wool Growers, Guernsey County, Ohio.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned wool-growers in the State of Ohio respectfully and earnestly petition the Congress to restore the duties on foreign wools substantially as they were enacted by the act of 1867.

The flagrant injustice done to the wool-growers by abolishing the ad valorem duties provided by the wool tariff of 1867 demands your attention, and we venture briefly to state some reasons for this assertion:

Prior to that enactment no substantial protection had been given by Congress to the production of American wools, whereas the manufacturers of wool had been sufficiently protected against similar foreign fabrics. This well-known fact led to a conference of wool-growers and manufacturers, who, after careful and laborious consideration, agreed upon the act of 1867, and this agreement became the law of that date.

At that time the number of sheep in the United States was about 22,000,000, and the annual product of wool was about 60,000,000 pounds. Under the influence of this law sheep husbandry rapidly advanced, until the number of sheep is now over 50,000,000 and the annual product of wool is more than 300,000,000 pounds. With this increase the price of wool has steadily receded from 51 cents a pound in 1867 to 42 cents prior to the tariff of the last Congress. The stability of the home market, secured by the act of 1867, accounts for this rapid increase of production and for the reduction in price. Let it be remembered that these facts carried sheep husbandry into every State in the Union, and in some of these States not a county is found without a portion of its wealth invested in wool production, so that there is to-day 1,000,000 flockmasters who are demanding the restoration of the late tariff.

Your petitioners further state that the abolition of ad valorem duties has reduced the price of wool during the current year to the producer not less than 5 cents per pound; which equals, on the entire product of 300,000,000 pounds, $15,000,000, and they ask: "Who have been benefited by the loss?"

The consumers of woolen goods certainly have not, for on many classes of such goods prices have advanced. In fact and in truth this great loss has only augmented the profits of manufacturers, without any appreciable advantage to those who consume the fabric.

It must not be forgotten that the producers of wool have been compelled to submit to this reduction in order to compete with foreign wools. There are 80,000,000 of sheep in Australia, and with her mild climate and perennial pastures she can multiply this number, until she quadruples the present production of the United States, and finally destroy this industry. Great efforts are now being made by certain parties in the United States to assist Australia in this competition, by improving the quality of her wool through the instrumentality of the best American merino blood. This effort seems to have been commenced simultaneously with the effort to modify the act of 1867.

The loss to the United States by destroying sheep husbandry will not be confined to the direct loss of the wool production. The value of sheep for fertilizing land, and thereby enabling it to sustain the drain incident to the production of the cereals, is an important factor in this problem, especially in the grain-producing States, and this incidental loss is of great magnitude, and is best understood by those who are practical agriculturists. Wool is the only production of those who till the soil that is directly and materially benefited by economic legislation. We therefore urge upon Congress the duty of restoring the duties provided by the act of 1867.

Why should the manufacturers have free wool, or wool with a duty so low as to let in foreign wools, unless the consumers of their products have free goods, or goods with a duty so low as to admit foreign fabrics?

We are protectionists, and desire to see all American industries and American labor fairly and uniformly protected by just and equal economic legislation. Wherefore we respectfully and earnestly pray for the relief herein requested.

HARBOR OF REFUGE, JERRY'S POINT, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. HAYNES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives all reports relating to the improvement of shoal in channel of harbor of refuge near Jerry's Point, New Hampshire.

Mr. HAYNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBOR OF REFUGE, SANDY BAY, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. STONE. I ask by unanimous consent that the memorial of the governors and members of executive council and members of Legislatures of Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, and of shipowners and pilots of the principal seaports in New England, for the establishment of a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Cape Ann, Massachusetts, be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. DUNN. How much of the RECORD is that memorial likely to occupy? It looks voluminous.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to inform the gentleman.

Mr. DUNN. I object.

Subsequently Mr. DUNN withdrew his objection, as he learned the memorial was a brief one; and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the names.

It is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned, the governors and members of executive council and Legislatures of the States of Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, shipowners, pilots, and others of the principal seaports in New England, would humbly represent to your honorable bodies that there is great need of a harbor of refuge on the eastern coast of Massachusetts. No point is more favorable or better located for such a harbor than Sandy Bay, Rockport, at the extremity of Cape Ann. More than seven-tenths of our import and export trade, besides all of our eastern carrying trade, pass so near the cape as to make a harbor of refuge at that place of incalculable value to the commercial interests of the United States. Had such a harbor been located there many shipwrecks would have been prevented, many lives saved, and in stress of weather the necessity of again putting to sea would have been avoided, thus saving an immense amount of suffering to our seafaring men.

The last session of Congress provided for a survey of "Sandy Bay, Rockport, Mass., with a view to the construction of a breakwater for a harbor of refuge;" said survey has been completed, and the project receives the approval of the engineer. We now ask that you make an appropriation, and that said breakwater be commenced at an early day. We consider that the interests of commerce and humanity demand such action. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES JUDGES.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3529) to increase the salaries of district and circuit judges of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BETSEY WEISSENFELD.

Mr. HOBLITZELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3530) for the relief of Betsey Weissenfeld; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

STAR-ROUTE CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to furnish the House of Representatives with copies of all correspondence between the Department of Justice and the Post-Office Department touching the prosecution of persons charged with frauds in connection with the star-route mail service, and a statement of the names of individuals found to be indebted to the United States, and the amount of indebtedness of each in consequence of such frauds; and also an itemized statement of the expenditures in the Post-Office Department from the 4th day, of March, 1881, to the 1st day of January, 1884, in the investigation and prosecution of such frauds.

Mr. REED. How does this come before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked leave to introduce it for present consideration, if there be no objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to suggest a modification.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, I must object to its adoption unless I can modify it.

Mr. REED. Such action, it seems to me, should be taken only on the report of a committee of this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the resolution?

Mr. REED. Yes, I object to action on it at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

The resolution was received, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

SUSPENDED RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. SHELLEY. I move by unanimous consent the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be instructed to inquire into the necessity of making an immediate appropriation for continuing work on important river and harbor improvements where work has been, or is about to be, suspended for want of money, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that for reference?

Mr. WILLIS. Let it be referred.

Mr. SHELLEY. Very well; then let the resolution be referred.

The resolution was received, and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

IMMEDIATE APPROPRIATION FOR THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was called this morning the report upon the bill referred to that committee was not quite completed. I now ask unanimous consent to present the bill and the accompanying report for reference and printing; following that with the motion to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill of similar tenor, making an appropriation for continuing the work on the Mississippi River, and refer that also to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first submit the request of the gentleman from Kentucky for unanimous consent to make the report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors on his statement that the report was not completed at the time the committee was called.

Mr. KING. I offer to amend the motion——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not amend a request for unanimous consent. The question now is, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What is the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to the House for its information that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors adopt the Senate bill——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill reported by the gentleman from Kentucky is reported now for reference only; and the question is, is there objection?

Mr. KING. He made a subsequent motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains but one motion. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. We do not know what it is.

Mr. REED. There cannot be unanimous consent unless the House knows the subject on which it is sought to obtain consent.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill reported by the gentleman from Kentucky from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the presentation of this report at this time?

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 3531) was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIS. Now I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill in reference to the same subject, and refer that also to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill, after which the request of the gentleman will be submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. KEIFER. Let it go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIS. I will state that this bill has been practically before the committee, and the committee have adopted the Senate bill, so that the bill now proposed by the committee is precisely the same as the Senate bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. KING. I move to take that bill from the Speaker's table and put it upon its passage.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not disposed of the request of the gentleman from Kentucky. There being no objection, the Senate bill will be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KING. I moved that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. That does not take precedence of the motion to refer.

Mr. MILLS. I understood that unanimous consent was asked that it be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union together with the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. WILLIS. That was my request.

Mr. KING. Then I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be so referred.

ABROGATION OF DUTIES BY TREATY STIPULATION.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Kentucky yields to me for a moment to introduce a resolution for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be directed to report to the House whether the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, can negotiate treaties with foreign governments by which the duties levied by Congress on importations can be changed or abrogated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Let the resolution be again reported, as it was not distinctly heard.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMMEDIATE APPROPRIATION FOR MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. WILLIS. Acting upon the instructions from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, my object being to take up for consideration the Senate bill making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that all bills preceding that upon the Calendar be laid aside.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I object to that.

Mr. KING. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. BELFORD. I would like to ask if it is not common for a majority of this House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider questions of great national importance?

The SPEAKER. No question has been made on that point.

Mr. BELFORD. That is just what I desire to be informed about. The gentleman from Kentucky has made a motion to that effect, and, as I understand it, some other gentleman here interposes an objection. I object, for my part, to any one man controlling the action of this House.

The SPEAKER. Objection was made to the request made by the gentleman from Kentucky for unanimous consent to lay aside all other bills on the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole. That objection was well taken.

Mr. BELFORD. I did not so understand it.

The SPEAKER. The only question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

AMERICAN LIVE-STOCK AND MEAT PRODUCTS.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Before the motion is submitted to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me for a moment so that I may be able to present a memorial from the committee of the national live-stock convention held in Chicago in November, 1883, with the request that it be printed in the RECORD of to-morrow morning for the information of the House, and as it relates to agriculture, that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to that; but I desire to give notice that in future these matters ought to go to a committee. Printing in the RECORD involves considerable expense and lumbers up the RECORD, which is already a burden to get through.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. This is but a short memorial. It is an important subject, and the Committee on Agriculture desire it to be laid before the House for its information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

A memorial of the committee of the national live-stock convention held in Chicago November, 1883.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners respectfully set forth that at a national convention of the live-stock breeders of the United States, representing twenty-two of the principal stock-growing States and Territories, held in the city of Chicago, November 16, 1883, they were appointed a committee for the purpose of presenting to your honorable body a statement of the losses which the live-stock interests of the country suffer by reason of the restrictive regulations now enforced by foreign governments against the importation of American live-stock and meat products into their respective countries.

We believe that these regulations are, to a great extent, inspired by motives other than those publicly assigned. It is claimed that our cattle are infected with a disease known as contagious pleuro-pneumonia, and that our swine are diseased in various ways—but more particularly with trichinosis. It is further alleged that we have no adequate system of inspection of either live-stock or dead-meat products. While the facts do not fully bear out these allegations, yet they contain a sufficient amount of truth to give them a degree of plausibility.

The facts are briefly these: The disease of lung-plague exists to a limited extent in circumscribed localities along the Atlantic seaboard, where it was first introduced by importation from Great Britain and Holland. Various State laws have been passed for the suppression of this disease and several hundred thousand dollars expended, but owing to the lack of united action by several States, and the difficulty of regulating by State enactments the commerce between the States, it has been impossible so far to entirely eradicate the disease, except in the single State of Massachusetts, which took immediate action on discovering the disease, and by prompt measures, at an expenditure of about $100,000, successfully eradicated it.

There is also a certain amount of disease existing among the swine of the United States, but certainly to not nearly so great an extent as is represented abroad. The statistics of our export trade show that we are now annually losing millions of dollars by reason of these restrictions. The number of neat cattle in the United States as estimated by the census of 1880 is 41,171,000, representing an estimated value of $1,250,000,000. The number of swine is 43,000,000, representing an estimated value of $300,000,000. Our export of live-stock and meat products during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, aggregated $120,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, they aggregated only $107,000,000, showing a decrease of $13,000,000. This great and rapidly growing interest is not only seriously embarrassed by reason of the restrictive regulations imposed by foreign governments against our meats, but the actual existence of the cattle interest is imperiled by the prevalence of contagious pleuro-pneumonia or lung-plague, which prevails, as yet, to only a limited extent, as hereinbefore stated.

In proof of this strong statement it is only necessary to cite the case of Australia, where formerly vast herds of cattle roamed the extensive plains of that country as they now do the plains of our own Western frontier. In the year 1858 a single cow infected with lung-plague was imported into that country from England, and from that one animal the disease extended to the ranges of the interior, and entirely destroyed the herds of whole districts of country, so that the raising of cattle was abandoned in consequence. The same state of affairs occurred in South Africa. We cite these cases to show what would be the result of the infection of our own Western ranges, now teeming with millions of cattle. That they have not already become infected is due solely to the fact that the traffic in live-stock has been almost entirely from the West to the East, except during the year 1880, when a large trade in Eastern dairy calves sprang up between the West and the East. The State of Illinois, foreseeing the fatal effects likely to result from this trade, promptly passed a law prohibiting the traffic in such calves within her territory, thereby substantially breaking up the dangerous traffic.

In consequence of the restrictions which Great Britain imposes on our exports of live cattle, animals taken from this country bring an average of $15 per head less than if the same class of cattle were exported from Canada, where a rigid examination of cattle is enforced and no disease is known to exist, thus placing our cattle industry at a serious disadvantage in competition with countries against which no restrictions are imposed, and tends constantly to lessen the aggregate of our export. A much greater percentage of losses is sustained by reason of the restrictions imposed by foreign countries upon our pork products.

For fuller and more complete information we respectfully refer you to the reports of the United States Department of Agriculture and of the United States Treasury cattle commission.

In view of losses already sustained and of the yet greater dangers menacing us, we most earnestly recommend that your honorable bodies enact such laws as will not only relieve us from the unjust suspicion which attaches to our live-stock and meat products abroad, but that you will also take proper measures to provide for the extinction of the disease of contagious pleuro-pneumonia, which can only be done by the slaughter of all infected cattle and the thorough disinfection of infected premises.

The United States Treasury cattle commission, who have made a very thorough examination of the subject, estimate the expense of such a measure at $1,500,000. Large as this sum is, it is a mere trifle in comparison with the losses already sustained. In our opinion not more than $500,000 need be made immediately available, and it is to be hoped that after the work has been properly inaugurated it may be found that a much smaller sum than that first named may be sufficient; but in any case we wish to particularly urge upon you the necessity for immediate, thorough, and complete work. We further respectfully recommend, with a view to removing the prejudice of our foreign customers whose trade it is desirable for this country to retain, that a rigid system of inspection of all meat products for foreign export be provided for and enforced, the expense of such inspection to be borne by the exporter.

In order that the States whose Legislatures are now in session may take immediate measures to co-operate with the provisions of a bill to carry out these recommendations, your early consideration of this measure is earnestly urged.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Calendar of that committee. The Clerk will report the first business on the Calendar.

PRINTING SUPREME COURT RECORDS.

The first business on the Calendar was a letter from the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, asking an immediate appropriation for the printing of records of said court.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that that be passed over for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the proposition that this be reported back to the House with a view to its being referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next business on the Calendar.

Mr. REED. Is it not necessary under the rules to report to the House each matter separately on which action has been taken?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that that has not been the custom.

Mr. RANDALL. The rule has been, where objection is made to the consideration of a bill we go back into the House. But the rule can be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read Rule XXIII, clause 4, as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence; and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next business on the Calendar.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and to encourage the American foreign carrying trade, reported by Mr. SLOCUM from the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that that bill be informally laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. A bill can not be laid aside in that way. There must be an objection.

Mr. WILLIS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection having been made to the consideration of this bill, the committee, in accordance with the rule, will rise and report to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had the Calender under consideration, had directed him to report back the letter from the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, asking an immediate appropriation for the printing of records of said court, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. He further reported that the committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, objection to the consideration of said bill was made, which objection he reported to the House.

PRINTING SUPREME COURT RECORDS.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that the committee having had under consideration a letter from the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, asking an immediate appropriation for printing the records of said court, had directed him to report back the same with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the committee.

The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to, and the letter was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union further reports that the committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, objection to its consideration was made, which objection he reported to the House. The question for the House to decide is whether the bill shall be considered or laid aside for the present.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be laid aside, so as not to lose its place.

The SPEAKER. That proposition can not be entertained. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session (Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House has directed that the bill (H. R. 2228) shall be laid aside for the present. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3531) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the last report of the Mississippi River Commission, submitted to the Secretary of War, December 28, 1883, declares that "every endeavor has been made to place the work in as safe a condition as possible, but it is greatly to be feared that this can only be partially accomplished, as the funds now available (the balance of last year's appropriation) will only admit of carrying on active operations till about the middle of December, after which time all work must cease until Congress makes a further appropriation for its prosecution, the commission feel that they can not too strongly urge upon Congress the necessities of the case and need of early relief, as the flood season, with all its attendant dangers, is close at hand, and the commission before that time will have exhausted all its available funds, only reserving such amounts as are absolutely needed for the care and preservation of the extensive and costly plant belonging to the works. An appropriation of $1,000,000 made immediately could be advantageously used:" Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Mississippi River, which said sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission created by an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters," approved June 28, 1879: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be used solely for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River, and no part thereof shall be expended with the view to the improvement of private property.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The next business upon the Calendar was the bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Mississippi River, which said sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission created by an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters," approved June 28, 1879: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be used solely for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and no part thereof shall be expended with the view to the improvement of private property.

Mr. WILLIS. The bill just read is a Senate bill. The bill that was just before the committee is a House bill. The two bills are identical. I do not know that it is necessary to say anything to the Committee of the Whole in regard to the merits of this bill.

The President of the United States, by a special message, has referred this subject to the consideration of Congress. The Mississippi River Commission has made its report, upon which the message of the President is based. By order of the House both of those documents were referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. A subcommittee was immediately appointed by that committee, who have had the report of the Mississippi River Commission under their careful consideration for the past three or four days. That report embraces about 1,000 printed pages. We have this morning made our report to the House, setting forth the necessity for the immediate appropriation of this amount.

It is well known to the Committee of the Whole that the last river and harbor bill failed to pass Congress. As a consequence, the appropriation which had theretofore been made for this purpose has been exhausted. The large and extensive plant now in existence upon the two reaches of the river, which are under the immediate consideration of the Mississippi River Commission, may be endangered because of the prospective rise of the Mississippi River. For the purpose of preventing injury to the valuable plant of the Government, and in order to enable the commission to proceed with its examinations, surveys, and improvement, this appropriation is asked to be immediately made. I do not know that it is necessary for me to make any further statement at this time.

Mr. KING. I will add to the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that this morning the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River met, and after considering this bill which had come in from the Senate, the substance of which we had before us, the committee unanimously agreed to make a report substantially the same as the report referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That report and bill were presented by me by order of the committee I represent this morning on the call of committees. When two committees, numbering in all some twenty-four members, report in favor of any given proposition, those reports should be regarded by the House as the very strongest recommendation that could be made of a proposition of this kind. The President of the United States has twice urged this matter upon Congress; once by a special message to the Forty-seventh Congress and the second time by a special message to this Congress a few days ago. I have risen merely to make these statements. I do not think any extended remarks on this subject are necessary. I hope the bill will now be put upon its passage.

Mr. BELFORD. A few days ago, Mr. Chairman, when the President of the United States sent a message to this House touching the improvement of the Mississippi River, the great water artery of this Republic, we on this side, who constitute the left center—because our Democratic friends are here on both sides of us—witnessed the edifying spectacle of a quarrel between the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] and some other gentlemen from the South.

I do not pretend to speak for the Republican party, but I can truthfully say, as I said a few days ago, that I am willing to vote, if it be necessary, thirty millions of dollars to improve this great highway of our commerce. Are you going to defeat that improvement by quarreling over the jurisdiction of the committees of this House? I want to call the attention of the country to the fact that while the Republican party is willing to make the most liberal appropriations for this purpose, you gentlemen are higgling and quiggling as to which committee shall have the jurisdiction of one bill or another. That is the exact situation, the position in which you have placed yourselves, and I hope the country will take notice of it.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. BELFORD. I do not want to be interrupted.

Mr. KING. I hope the gentleman will allow me to correct him.

Mr. BELFORD. I do not propose to be interrupted by anybody.

Mr. KING. I desire to say that we are in perfect accord.

Mr. BELFORD. We have had a beautiful spectacle in this House to-day. What is it? My vigorous and robustious friend from Maine [Mr. REED], who unquestionably enjoys the possession of a bushel of brains [laughter], gets up here and says that when the House has resolved itself into Committee of the Whole and anybody makes objection to the consideration of a bill the chairman of the Committee of the Whole has got to walk down, the Committee of the Whole has got to rise up; and although we do not put on our hats and do not adorn ourselves with overcoats, yet we are operating under a magnificent rule, by which one man, against the wishes of three hundred and twenty-four members of this House, actually controls the legislation of this body. Now, so far as I am personally concerned, I propose on all occasions to enter my protest against the tyranny of the one-man power in this House.

Now, beyond that question, what is our duty; what is the duty of this House? It is to unlock the vaults of the national Treasury. [Laughter and cries of "Exactly!" "That is it!"] Oh! you may laugh. But you have a hundred millions of dollars in your Treasury kept out of the channels of business and trade.

Take up the papers of this country, and you will find that business firms all over this Republic are failing. And why? Because you are keeping this money out of actual employment. Suppose that we appropriate twenty millions of dollars for the improvement of the Mississippi River, where will it go? It will go to the citizens of these United States; not to England, not to France, but to the "horny-handed sons of toil" of this country.

I say that it is the duty of the majority of this House to compel the Government to execute and enforce a broad, liberal, generous policy with respect to the great water courses of this nation, in order that we may meet and overcome the five men who control the railroad corporations of this country. Therefore I say that for one I have no objection to voting a million dollars; I would have no objection to voting thirty million dollars. And I hope this bill will receive the favorable consideration of this House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, we have been treated by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] again this morning with one of his characteristic efforts; and under the guise of a speech in support of this measure for the improvement of the Mississippi River he has seen fit to inject into this discussion the nauseous dose of politics.

I will say to my friend that when he says this, the Democratic side of the House is inharmonious in its support of the Mississippi River improvement—when he says that there is division among us on that great question—he misstates the position of this side of the House. And when he twits us with the statement that the Republicans are harmonious in their support of this measure, while we on the Democratic side are divided on it (while we want all the votes we can get, Republicans as well as Democrats), I will reply to him that for every vote cast for this measure on his side of the House we will guarantee to give two on the Democratic side.

But I do not propose, as he has done, to go out of my way in this discussion to treat of questions which are foreign to the matter at issue. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have reported a measure appropriating a million of dollars for the Mississippi River. That committee tells you in its report that a similar measure has already passed the Senate and is now upon the table of the House. We are told by the chairman of another committee (the Mississippi Levee and Improvement Committee) that they too have considered this great measure and have unanimously agreed to report a similar bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, the appropriation provided for in this measure is asked upon the ground that there is an emergency calling for it to be made at once.

An examination of the report of the Mississippi River Commission discloses that former appropriations made for the river have been expended on the river in the inauguration and prosecution of works of improvement under the system adopted by the commission, except a sum sufficient for the preservation and repair of the extensive and costly plant belonging to the Government and used on said works.

Their report further shows that by reason of the exhaustion of said appropriations works of improvement on the river would cease on and after December 15, 1883; that the flood season is now at hand, with all its attendant dangers, and that without the steady and uninterrupted prosecution of the works begun it is feared the results already achieved by the expenditure of millions of money may be greatly impaired, if not lost.

The commission reaffirm with increasing emphasis their former declarations of the success and efficiency of the system of works adopted for the improvement of the river, and declare that the highest encouragement is derived from the experience of the last low-water season (fall of 1883), when it is shown that both above and below Plum Point reach and Lake Providence reach (where the principal works of improvement have been prosecuted) the water was at various points as shoal as from 5½ to 6 feet, while in said reaches, which aggregate a total length of 75 miles and where in former years the shoalest water was found, a depth of water of from 12 to 15 feet was had and no difficulties to navigation encountered.

The commission attribute these remarkable results to the works of improvement already partially constructed in said reaches, and point out that this evidence is all the more conclusive since these works are yet wholly incomplete.

They recommend an immediate appropriation of $1,000,000 for the river, and this recommendation is concurred in by the President in his special message on the subject of the river. I trust the bill will be passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is in order until general debate is closed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Can I not have the amendment read as a part of my remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can do so when he has the floor. The Chair recognizes him now. The Clerk will read the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding:

"Provided, That the sum of $20,000 from said sum be, and it is hereby, appropriated to continue the improvements of the ice-harbor at Dubuque city, Iowa; said improvements to be continued under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to antagonize this bill. I have no disposition to do so.

Mr. DUNN. I make a point of order. I did not catch the reading of the whole amendment, but I do not think it is germane to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment is not offered now, but is only read for information as a part of the gentleman's remarks. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to bring this proposition to the attention of the committee for the purpose of showing that it is, in my judgment, germane to this bill and should be incorporated in it.

Mr. KING. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. The Mississippi River Commission has no jurisdiction over the harbor which the gentleman's amendment proposes to improve.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not know how many sections or vertebræ are going to be given to the Mississippi River. I may be out of order in offering this amendment in connection with this legislation; but I want this House to know that there are improvements in process of construction at different points on the Mississippi River and some above Cairo.

I am not going to offer any obstacle to any of these improvements which gentlemen may bring forward, and I do not wish my remarks to be regarded as making any opposition to them.

Now, the improvement which this amendment contemplates has already had expended upon it some $20,000. At Dubuque is the best natural harbor within a distance of 700 miles below the city of Saint Paul. The report of the Secretary of War for 1883 shows that the sum of $40,000 was needed for the improvement of this harbor, but that only $20,000 was appropriated and expended. An additional $20,000, therefore, is needed for its completion. So that if there is any point on the Mississippi River where improvement is needed it is at this little harbor which I have the honor to be looking after now. And while I ask gentlemen to consider this fact, that I am not antagonizing their improvements, let us consider this as one grand stream, and act in concert and in harmony for the general improvement of that river. That is my motto, and at the proper time I wish to ask this committee to incorporate as a part of the legislation under consideration the amendment which has been read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. GIBSON. I am very much afraid, Mr. Chairman, that some of the gentlemen having improvements they desire have formed a wrong opinion as to the action of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in reporting this specific bill, and insomuch as this special bill here is but a part of this general system which has been heretofore inaugurated and which we propose now to carry out, I trust it will not be considered by anybody as a bill specially for the Mississippi River. I am not one of those on that committee, nor am I one of those in this House, who seem to think, or who do think, that all other river and harbor bills should be subordinated to the Mississippi River. I regard that simply as a part of the grand water scheme of the country, and I regard it simply as a part of the duty of this Congress in taking care of its water streams to take care of that river, and the reason why the Mississippi bill has come up specially before any other has been out of respect on the part of the majority of this Congress for the recommendation of the President of the United States in his annual message. He has there seen fit to take this one from among all others and to disconnect this immediate necessity of the Mississippi from the immediate necessities of the other streams, and he has recommended an immediate appropriation for the purpose of protecting the great national interests which are at stake there. It is therefore out of respect to the recommendation of the Executive on the part of the committee that this bill has been introduced simply referring to the Mississippi and not to any other work needed now. I wish to say to gentlemen on the other side and to gentlemen on this side who may differ as to the object of the committee that, so far as I am concerned, I propose to be a friend to a judicious, a fair, and an honest improvement of the harbors and water streams of this country, and to give to the whole land a free and untrammeled highway to reach the heart of the commerce of the world. Now, the River and Harbor Committee do not propose to make itself the special champion of the Mississippi River by this bill. I repeat, it is in accordance with the recommendation of the President that it has been proposed. When we come to act on the different other propositions I have no doubt if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] will make his case before that committee it will give us great pleasure to report favorably upon his scheme.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word, and especially in reference to the proposition suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, which is for the improvement of a harbor on the Mississippi River. Now, this business of improving inland harbors is a rising one, and it is, in my judgment, growing into an enormous abuse. I will say in view of what has just been said by a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], who suggests if a proper case be made the committee will no doubt be prepared to act favorably on the improvement proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, that whenever we attempt to make local appropriations for all the towns along the river we shall load down the river and harbor appropriation bill until it can not be passed.

The first one of these appropriations for inland harbors was made in the Forty-fourth Congress for the improvement of the harbor at Saint Joseph, Mo.; and from that day it has grown until upon the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers there are as many as thirty inland harbors for which appropriations have been made.

Whenever a town wants a wharf built it wants the Government to make a special appropriation for it, which the Government ought not to do. Whenever a railroad bridge is endangered by the washes of the river, the railroad people come and tell us that we must make an appropriation for this place to preserve their works. They do not put it exactly in that way or in such plain terms, but that is practically the effect of it. And you will find that local improvements in the main are for the preservation almost entirely of private enterprises.

The rule with Congress in dealing with such a subject should be that appropriations of this character ought to be made to improve the navigation of rivers, and it should be left to the engineers charged with the work, after the appropriation is made, to apply it where it will do the greatest amount of good and where its utility can not be questioned for the public benefit, but not allow it to be expended in promoting private or local enterprises. The whole scope of the appropriation should be the improvement of the navigation of the river. All I wish to do now, however, is simply to call attention to this proposition to make an appropriation of $20,000 to improve a harbor of a river, or probably to make a wharf that the city ought to make. If it is to deepen the channel, to make an appropriation to improve the navigation of the river, let it go to the engineer who has charge of the work, and let him apply it to the work of improvement where it will do the most good in promoting that navigation.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, I have half a dozen practical suggestions and observations in relation to the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River, to which I beg leave to call the attention of the committee. The urgent need of the appropriation, the reason why it is required at all, is easily stated to the Committee of the Whole. The Mississippi River Commission decided to try the plan of improving two reaches of the river, Lake Providence and Plum Point reaches. In order to test the theories of the commission, these two reaches were set aside to be improved. When the report of December 1, 1882, was made work was going on upon these reaches. There followed immediately a tremendous flood in the river. That flood did not abate until the following July. The works of the commission upon the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches were exposed to the greatest pressure and the greatest risk to which works of such a character could be exposed; and upon the subsidence of the flood were left to a certain extent impaired. Then it was that the commission went to work with all the efficiency it could command until it had exhausted the amounts at its disposal. It then comes to Congress, and asks that it might go on upon these critical points with the work already begun and for the preservation of the plant accumulated for the prosecution of the work.

So much for the necessity. But there is another reason, the committee must understand, for asking this appropriation now. There will be by adopting the plan of immediate action greater economy, with such methods and material as the commission is now using, than under any other engineering system of construction. When subjected to flood-tests each part of the work of the commission must be complete in itself, and in addition there should be the means of immediately arresting the beginning of evil.

An equilibrium between the tremendous forces of the river itself and the material the commission is compelled to use can only be maintained by vigilance and promptness. It is a literally truthful statement that work could be made to cost two or three times as much by an injudicious distribution of appropriations.

Not only, then, is the work itself necessary, not only did the flood that followed the last report increase the necessity for it by making essential the repairs now required, but by voting the money now a large economy will be accomplished—an economical expenditure which can be attained in no other way.

Last of all, Mr. Chairman, I will observe that the exigency of the case and the economy which will be effected by adopting the recommendations of the commission are not the only matters to be considered, but we must also consider that the experience of the commission itself demonstrates the correctness of the theory upon which they are now proceeding, that by narrowing or confining the channel of the river the stream will scour itself out, and that by causing the silt in the current to be properly deposited where scientific investigation requires new banks the navigation will be made easy and safe. Finally, the flood surface or level of the river will be lowered.

The appropriation then is required; it is exigent; it is economical, and in making it you are acting in conformity with a theory fully tested, sustained by scientific inquiry and by experience, and which no man who is candid, and who will look into the reports of the river commission, will undertake to controvert.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not oppose this bill, but I am not disposed to sit quietly here in my seat and hear it advocated at the expense of all the other rivers and harbors of the country. I am opposed to that stream of sentiment and feeling upon which it is attempted to float through such an appropriation as this, a stream which in its volume is equal in magnitude to the great Mississippi River itself. I think that there is, perhaps, want of knowledge on the part of members in this House which in no other way can justify the immense appropriations which have been made and which it has become the custom to expect annually from Congress for this work.

I am disposed to think that so far as the improvement of the Mississippi River has gone it is an experiment, and an experiment which has not by any means been demonstrated to be a success. Nevertheless I am willing that appropriations shall be made. And if what I admit to be the great water way of this country can be improved for navigating purposes, I am as willing as anybody can be to appropriate money for that purpose. But I am not willing to sit quietly and hear this river advocated as the only river in the country, because I am convinced, so far as my knowledge of these matters goes, that money applied to various other rivers and harbors in the country will do infinitely more good in the way of improving navigation than the moneys that are expended on the Mississippi River. One of the reasons for this is because the Mississippi River itself is a navigable river; and practical river men are not making loud complaints about its navigation. You will look in vain in the records of this or any preceding Congress for petitions, remonstrances, or other evidences of complaint from practical navigators of the Mississippi River.

The improvement of the Mississippi River is advocated by theorists, by scientific gentlemen, who say that if you adopt such and such a plan great results will follow. That may be all true. I do not know whether it is true or not. Experience only will demonstrate whether it be true or not. But we do know that there are many other streams in this country where money can be expended with great advantage to the navigation of those streams; and although I assent to the passage of this bill, I am not willing it shall be understood that there are not other demands which are just as imperative upon Congress as the claims of the Mississippi. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. DUNN. I rather regret the fact that this subject has been opened to debate. I do not think debate was necessary. I think the House was prepared for action upon the Senate bill without debate; and I never allowed the rule to obtain in my practice, when I was a practicing lawyer, to ruin my client's cause in order to make a speech. I deprecate that policy; but inasmuch as debate has been permitted, it is perhaps as well to answer some things that have been stated by some members who have participated in the debate.

Now I do not concur in the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that there have been no petitions addressed to Congress on the part of practical navigators and people concerned in commerce and shipping in favor of this work; that no demand for these improvements has been made. Why, sir, is that gentleman ignorant of the numerous great meetings and conventions which have been held in all the cities and States of the Mississippi Valley from New Orleans to the lakes of the North, and which have memorialized Congress in behalf of this great work continuously for many years past?

If the gentleman means by that statement that a certain class of licensed pilots who imagine that they constitute a close corporation by reason of their special knowledge of the labyrinthian intricacies of the difficult and ever-changing channels of the unimproved Mississippi River have not asked for it, that is perhaps true. Neither did the pilots off the mouth of the Mississippi River, who knew of the devious and difficult ways to get in light craft over those obstructing bars, ask for the building of the jetties. Neither did the dredge-boat operators there who fattened upon the fruitless attempts at dredging out those bars to have their little channels refilled next month ask for the building of the jetties. "Long live Diana of the Ephesians!" is the cry of that class of people. These works that make possible the ways to navigation, that open the ways to commerce, that give safety and ease to navigation, are not what that class of people want; but they are the demands of the public welfare.

The question for us to deal with is the great needs of commerce. I congratulate the country as well as this House upon the fact that it is no longer necessary to discuss in this House the merits and importance of this great work or enter into argument as to whether it should or should not be undertaken and its prosecution continued. I congratulate the country upon the fact that it is now the established policy of the Government as evidenced by the repeated action of Congress, by the action of the Executive, and by the action of all the branches of the Government that deal with these subjects. There is not that want of practical knowledge which the gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of as to this subject on the part of Congress. If there is one great work of river and harbor improvement better understood by this House and by this country than another, it is this great work of the Mississippi River. If any one great work has received more anxious care and attention on the part of Congress than another, it is this. In all the other works it is sufficient that the engineer makes a survey and a report and an estimate, and the work is then proceeded with if Congress happens to will it or the committee having charge of the work happens to will it. That was not the case with this work.

A great scientific commission was created in order to grapple with this great question; and after that commission, composed of the ablest engineers in this country, or in the world for that matter, had carefully and elaborately examined all the proposed plans and recommended one, in abundance of caution Congress sent a select committee to carefully examine and investigate that, and to make observations upon the conditions of the river and report upon it; and it was only after the coming in of the unanimous report of that committee approving the plan recommended and strongly recommending the measure that Congress ever appropriated one dollar for that great work. The annual appropriation for that work has been made every year from then until now as regularly as the river and harbor bill has come before this House until last session, when the bill failed to pass the Senate for want of time. All its details have been scrutinized; every feature has been inquired into; it has been assailed and assaulted with a persistence, an earnestness, and a cunning that have characterized the assault upon no other measure whatever.

It has withstood all assaults and been thoroughly sustained. Sir, I repeat, I congratulate the country that this has become the established policy of the Government. And I will go further, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], and congratulate the country upon the fact that that great work has now passed the stage of mere experiment; it is no longer an experiment. Demonstration after demonstration—practical demonstrations—have come with every report of the commission of the correctness of their theory and of the successful application of the principle upon which they are proceeding. It has passed beyond the regions of experiment, and I have no doubt that the commission is correct in assuming now that they have control of the Mississippi River. That means that they know the laws governing it, and that they have correctly applied them in the treatment of that great river. I confidently believe that it will prove in the end the grandest triumph of modern engineering, great as are those triumphs throughout the world.

But, Mr. Chairman, I deprecate above all other things the slight tendency exhibited here to-day to lug or admit into the discussion of this question any party feeling. Above all things I desire to see this one great subject treated as it has always been heretofore treated, from a non-partisan, national standpoint.

I thank God that there is one great interest in this nation upon which we can all unite, North, South, East, and West; upon which all patriots can meet in common fellowship, and to which we can all give united support, not of the improvement of the Mississippi River alone, but of all the great water ways of this country.

I will state what I have heretofore stated to this House, that I am in favor, not of extravagant and reckless appropriations, but of utilizing every cubic foot of water on this continent and compelling it to bear its burden of the products of labor and industry to the sea. I trust that the ugly effigy of party feeling, of party spirit, will not be permitted to obtrude itself into the discussion of this measure. And, sir, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] for the generous, manly, and enlightened support which he has always given to this great and important measure.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. THOMAS. Allow me ten minutes.

Mr. YOUNG. How does the gentleman obtain any time to yield?

Mr. DUNN. This is general debate, and has not been limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to what remains of his hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the time for general debate been limited?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I hope it will be.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that there are but one or two gentlemen who desire to speak, and that very briefly. After they have spoken I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. DUNN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] for ten minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I am gratified to see the promptness with which this bill has been reported back to the House by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I am glad that that committee has so readily grasped the importance of the interests involved in this great question.

I have a deep and abiding interest in the improvement of this great national highway, and hope that, as the waters of this great river come from twenty-one States and Territories, some of which are Republican and some of which are Democratic, there will be no political questions thrust into the consideration of this matter.

I do not care to discuss the merits of the question of the improvement of the Mississippi River. That subject has been gone over and over so often in this House, has been so thoroughly explained to the American people, that a man must certainly be far behind in his knowledge of the commercial and national questions of this country if he does not know that the plan for the improvement of the Mississippi River has been finally settled and adopted.

Years and years went by with the frittering away of vast sums of money in the improvement of this and that local point of the Mississippi River under the Engineer Corps of the Army; and it was found that after the expenditure of all this money little if any improvement resulted therefrom.

It was found that the improvement of the Mississippi River could be treated only upon some general system. A corps of the best engineers the world has ever known was called by the Congress of the United States to consider this subject, and they finally settled upon a plan. That plan was ratified by Congress, and appropriation after appropriation has been made to carry it out.

Congress said there and then, by those appropriations, we will give this subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River to this commission alone, and we will not interfere with it by interjecting here and there special appropriations for this point or that, but we will leave to the commission to determine where the money can be best applied and where it shall be expended.

I throw out this hint in response to a notice given by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] that at the proper time he will ask the adoption of an amendment setting aside $20,000 of this appropriation for the continuance and preservation of works on the ice-harbor within his district. I hope that the gentleman will not bring that proposition forward at this time. This appropriation of $1,000,000 is to be made for an emergency, to save from destruction the costly plant that has been gathered by the officers of the Government and to continue this great work. The work is not confined alone, as has been suggested by some gentlemen here, to the reach of the river below Cairo; but, sir, they have control of the whole river; and since we have delegated to them this great work, have left to them to say where and how they will proceed, I hope this House will not come in now and try to tie their hands by setting apart any portion of this appropriation for this or that specific work. It was measures of this sort which obstructed and delayed this great improvement for years and years; and I hope the Congress of the United States will not at this day turn its back upon the intelligent course resolved upon by the last two Congresses.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me a few words?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not think it will amount to more than that. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield to the gentleman presently, but not now.

If this were a general bill (for I hope the Congress of the United States will not conclude from this emergency bill being brought in that this is the last appropriation which will be asked for the Mississippi River during this session of Congress) there might be some excuse for coming in and asking for the setting apart of a portion of the appropriation for this specific work. But this bill is not a general bill. It is for the specific purpose of preserving the plant purchased and now held by the Mississippi River Commission and for preserving the work they already have in hand from destruction by overflow and by ice.

Now, since the Mississippi River Commission have control as well of the construction of this ice-harbor that the gentleman's amendment applies to as of the improvement of Providence reach and the other important works on the Lower Mississippi, how does he know, if there is an exigency demanding the protection of the work there, that they will not assign so much as to them may seem right and proper to this work? Is he better able to determine that question than these men, who have had their minds bent upon this great work for so long a time? I think not. This particular work may appear to him to be important from his standpoint; but he looks upon it from his own selfish standpoint naturally. I do not say this in a spirit of resentment or criticism, but simply as defining the position which the gentleman occupies. This is his interest as compared with the great interest of the improvement of the Mississippi River. Therefore I say that if the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Iowa should be offered, I hope that this House will vote it down with promptness and unanimity, and that we will continue to leave this work in the hands of this body of engineers, than whom a greater has never been known in modern times. Their work has shown their wisdom as well as their patriotism, and the country has been benefited far beyond any expenditure that has ever been made by the Government in this improvement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is in order until the general debate has closed.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Do I understand that this million of dollars is to be dumped without a word having been said on this side of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the committee rise.

Mr. WILLIS. The House will have control of the matter. It is not my desire to cut off any gentleman who may desire to speak, but to fix some limit to the debate.

Mr. CHACE. The gentleman had better allow ample discussion of this matter.

Mr. WILLIS. I had no idea that any gentleman wished to discuss it further. If any member desires to do so, and will indicate his wish in the House, we can agree upon some time.

Mr. REED. Let the debate go on.

Mr. WILLIS. I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it was my good fortune last spring to be one of a party in the company of that distinguished jurist of Pennsylvania, lately deceased, Judge Black. During the evening the discussion turned upon the question of the action of the Electoral Commission. Some one asked Judge Black how he made up his mind to discuss the question as to the counting of the electoral vote of Louisiana after the commission had virtually decided the question by passing upon the vote of Florida. He said that he occupied the position of an attorney, a friend of his, who once appeared before the supreme judiciary of the State to argue a cause which had been appealed from a lower court. He opened his case, and the chief-justice at once said: "Why, my dear sir, we have already adjudicated that question this term." The attorney persisted in going on, and the judge said to him again: "Do you expect to change the opinion of this court on that question?" "No," said the attorney, "I simply wanted to damn the opinion." [Laughter.]

Now, sir, I do not expect to change the views of any member of this House by anything that I may say, for I have made up my mind that there are many gentlemen in this House who feel like the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD], that the business of the average Congressman is to find some place to dump the surplus, not how the affairs of the Government can be economically administered; not how the money in the Treasury can be economically spent, but how can we find some way to use up the surplus.

It is not long since the country was wonderfully agitated over the action of the members of the Forty-seventh Congress relative to the passage of the river and harbor bill; and that agitation was created largely by the men who seek here to-day for this appropriation without discussion. We have not been told what was done with the four million and odd thousand dollars appropriated by the Forty-seventh Congress. We well know that many members of the Forty-seventh Congress were black-listed by a portion of the press because they voted for that river and harbor bill, and yet of the millions appropriated by that bill as it originally left the House nearly one-third was for the Mississippi River. The seats of many of the men who voted for that bill are now filled by persons of opposite political proclivities. The Democratic members saw fit to keep before their constituents the fact that these men on the Republican side had voted for that iniquitous measure, as they styled it. Men who sat in that Congress occupying seats from Democratic districts, and who had received a portion of that appropriation, thought it not amiss to stand before the people and denounce the infamies of that bill.

Now, I venture to say, notwithstanding the high standing of this commission, as stated here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]—I venture to say not a stream in this country, not a harbor in this Union, not an appropriation for one of them to which there has been less filching than there has been of the appropriation for the Mississippi River. How much of it—notwithstanding the fact there is always appended to the bill "not one dollar shall be appropriated for the benefit of private individuals"—has been spent in building up levees, in repairing levees, in elevating the land on either side above the bed of the river, in order that lands might be reclaimed for private benefit?

Mr. KING. I will answer the gentleman. Not a dollar.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. It is all very well to say that.

Mr. KING. I say it by the record of the Mississippi River.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. There come up mutterings from that section that private corporations and private individuals are being largely benefited by this appropriation.

I am in favor of a fair appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of that river, but, as was remarked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] a moment ago, the rivermen, when there were no means of railroad communication between the great lakes of the North and the Gulf, went up and down that river for nigh a century taking as much traffic then as now without one word of complaint. But it is useless to talk here. This question is already decided, for there seems to be a fear on either side of the House on the part of men who have political aspirations for national favors to speak one word against it. Whenever a Representative on the opposite side of this Chamber desires promotion in his party, the question is immediately asked, how does he stand on the appropriation for the Mississippi River? and at once he is "smoked out." He has to define himself favorably before he can be honored by his associates.

The gentlemen even who live distant from the banks of that river are so fearful of public opinion, that they not only raise their voices but cast their votes in favor of every measure asked for. For what other great river, what other harbor, has had a commission raised exclusively to look after its interests? Is not that magnificent harbor of New York of wonderful benefit to the whole country? And yet we do not have a special commission to look after its interests. Are not there other great rivers? Is not that wonderful chain of lakes of the Northwest of great benefit to the people? And yet who ever thought of raising a special commission for them? Yet for this stream we have had for a long time appointed a commission, and annually appointed a committee of this House with authority to roam up and down that stream and view its banks and its fertile lands and make a report.

While I am in favor of a fair appropriation, I am also in favor of discussion. I am not in favor of rushing a bill through this House giving a million of dollars when there are not one-fourth of the members of the House who know for what purpose it is to be expended, and I insist that some information should be given as to how the vast sums already appropriated have been expended, and for what purposes this special appropriation is for. It is true the sum asked for is not a large sum when compared with the total aggregate appropriations for the current year for all other purposes, but it is a large sum when compared with the possible appropriations of all the rivers and harbors in the country.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yields the balance of his time to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman do so before he left the floor?

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I intended to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there are some reasons why at this time this bill ought not to be passed by this House. So far as I have been able to discover, the report of the commission of their operations during the past year is not in print, and I doubt whether any gentleman on this floor knows of the manner in which the last appropriations made for this river have been used.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman is entirely in error.

Mr. HEPBURN. I made inquiry not two hours ago for this report, and was told by the superintendent of the document-room that it was not in print.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman will pardon me, the report is not yet in print——

Mr. HEPBURN. That is just what I stated.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But it was before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and was considered by them.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I am incorrect so far as the committee is concerned, but not so far as the balance of the membership of this House is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of proper appropriations for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. I am not in favor of appropriations for the improvement of the banks of the Mississippi River and the plantations on either side of it; and it is my judgment that through the operation of this Mississippi River Commission it is the purpose of certain gentlemen upon this floor to secure the improvement of the private property of their constituents through Government aid. It is my judgment that the real object of these appropriations, the real purpose for which these gentlemen are making this struggle, is to secure the plantations of the Lower Mississippi River from overflow, rather than to perfect the navigation of that stream.

Why, Mr. Chairman, when the Mississippi River is in a condition to agitate these gentlemen, who in this hurried manner demand the passage of this bill, it is perfect as a channel of communication. They want to improve the Mississippi River when there are volumes of water there that would float the navies of the world. They are entirely content with the Mississippi River and with its condition when the people living farther north desire its improvement. There are these two antagonistic purposes between the advocates of Mississippi River improvement; they want to improve it when it is at flood; we want to improve it when it is insufficient for navigation.

Now, I have some evidences in my mind that compel me to this conclusion. Those persons familiar with that river know that during a large portion of each season it is abundantly navigable. They know that in its lowest stages there are comparatively few places where, by reason of sand-bars or snags, the navigation of the river is interrupted or made dangerous, and those who really desire to improve its navigation will be content that these stretches of the river where these sand-bars intervene and interrupt the navigation should be removed. That is what is meant, in the region of country where I live at least, by the term "improvement of the Mississippi River." That will necessitate comparatively a small outlay; it will necessitate a comparatively small plant—machinery and material for deepening the bed where the bars are found and removing the snags. A very few millions of dollars at most would meet the requirement, and whatever sum might in truth be needed for this purpose I would gladly aid in appropriating.

But look, Mr. Chairman, at the extraordinary ideas that certain gentlemen have with regard to this matter. We sometimes indulge in the fond delusion that these improvements are being conducted by the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States, and that the engineers of the Army are doing the work. I have been recently investigating the Blue Book, and I find that among the employés on the pay-roll of the Mississippi River Commission there are no less than sixty-seven engineers, to whom there is paid a monthly compensation of $8,690—nearly $105,000 a year. This sum is paid for engineering alone, in addition, sir, to the commission and to the officers of the United States Army detailed upon that commission.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield for a question only.

Mr. DUNN. Are those employés engaged in surveying or in doing the work?

Mr. HEPBURN. There, sir, I am entirely at a loss for an answer, because I have not seen the report of the commission, as I before stated.

Mr. DUNN. Then let me inform the gentleman. They are engaged exclusively in the surveys.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yielded to the gentleman for the purpose of making an inquiry, and not for the purpose of injecting a speech into mine.

Mr. DUNN. The commission does not execute the work, but the Secretary of War does, under the direction of the engineer officers.

Mr. HEPBURN. But, Mr. Chairman, I will go on a little further, illustrating the idea I have that the members of this commission have a most extraordinary, I may say wonderful, idea of the importance and extent of the work that they are engaged upon and the unlimited resources that are to be provided for them. Among others of the employés that I find specified in this book they have six chief clerks to whom they pay monthly in the aggregate $1,035; they have seventeen clerks to whom they pay monthly $1,562. They have forty-four cooks, Mr. Chairman, on the pay-roll of this commission—full-fledged cooks! I do not know precisely their relations to the commission, or whether Professor Blot is among the number, or whether they have graduated at his school of culinary art, or whether they have passed the ordeal of the Civil Service Commission. [Laughter.] But I do know that the Blue Book charges there is paid out monthly of the public money to these cooks $1,800 belonging to the people of the United States. I know that they have employés exclusive of laborers—remember, gentlemen, exclusive of those who do the real work, the manual labor on the improvement—they have employés to whom they pay $43,000 every month. There is paid more than one-half a million of dollars every year to this commission and to the persons on their pay-roll.

Now, sir, this statement is without reference to the two hundred and fourteen laborers that I find upon the Blue Book. Taking into account their services, the $72,000 paid to them, the yearly expenditure of this commission without reference to the other sums expended for labor, material, &c., used in building embankments, revetments, dams, mattresses or anything of that sort is $590,790. And in addition to that you must add the monthly pay of the military officers upon the commission. I was not able to ascertain accurately what that was, but it is something in the neighborhood of $15,000, making the annual expenses of the commission for personal services, without including sums paid to persons called "laborers," more than $525,000.

Is it wonderful, Mr. Chairman, that, in the language of some of these gentlemen, "the appropriations of the past are gone?" It seems to me it is not. If it is true that this commission has been in existence three years, and their expenditures have been at the same rates, then, sir, they have eaten up in the payment for services of this kind about one and a half millions of the $5,100,000 that has been appropriated.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have some other reasons for believing that it is the purpose of gentlemen here to improve the banks of the river rather than the navigation of the river. I heard the other day with a great deal of satisfaction (because I thought what was said was illustrative of the real purposes of gentlemen in this matter) the somewhat protracted discussion upon the subject of the reference of the annual report of the Mississippi River Commission. I heard the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] with the interest with which I always listen to him in his frank and dignified utterances; I sympathized with him in his proposition as to the reference, and voted with him because I thought that I concurred with him in the opinion that the major purpose of the report then to be referred contemplated the question of levees, and levees only. And I think that he agreed with me, because I understood him to be learned in the law of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. KING. I would like to correct my friend.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask the gentleman to be so good as not to interrupt me. I am a young man, and it embarrasses me. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. It embarrasses me also to have a misconception of my position or to have a friend put me in a wrong light.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will do the gentleman the justice to say that nothing perhaps he said induced me to this conclusion; but it was the general scope of his action. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I know that he is learned in the law that governs deliberative bodies and that governs this deliberative body. I know that he was well satisfied that "all subjects relating to the levees of the Mississippi River" should "be referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of that river." That is the language of the rule, and when I heard him so earnestly urging that his committee should have the custody of this measure, I knew, as a just and candid and learned man as he is, that he was fully convinced that the subject treated of and the purpose had in view by that report was the building of levees upon the Mississippi River, and that he was right in demanding the reference that he did.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I think my friend is mistaken. He principally intended to levy on the Treasury of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. For a good purpose only.

Mr. GIBSON. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish the gentleman would not ask it just now.

Mr. GIBSON. It is a very short question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand the gentleman to say that, believing it was the purpose to misappropriate these funds, yet he voted to send the matter to that committee. Am I correct?

Mr. HEPBURN. Whatever inference the gentleman desires to draw he is perfectly welcome to.

Another gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] during the discussion he indulged in used this language, if the reporter correctly reported him. His language is said to have been this:

> If the House intends that rescue should be given to the interests now in peril, if the House intends that the floods should be turned backward and the people residing on the river protected, it should give the message promptly to the only committee vested with jurisdiction on the subject.

That was the gentleman's language.

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman was clamoring then for protection to the people living on the banks of that river, for their protection against all incoming floods that he desired should be turned back, for protection against the inroads that were about to be made around their homes and upon their plantations. That was the plea that the gentleman from Louisiana then so eloquently made. It was to protect the individual interests of his constituents living upon the banks of the river; and from first to last of that estimable speech of his there was not one word that I can now recollect upon the subject of the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River.

Mr. HUNT. Protection of the people of the United States, the whole people of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. It would have been better to have stated that at that time. But then the gentleman was arguing his cause from the standpoint that he then had; he is arguing it now in his amendment from another standpoint.

Mr. Chairman, I have still another reason why I think we ought to be very careful how we vote and when we vote in view of the absence of the report upon this important question. I have taken the liberty of saying that in my judgment comparatively little was needed to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River. And in furtherance and corroboration of the remark made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], that no clamor was being made for this improvement by practical rivermen, I desire to say that in the fall of 1881 I was a guest with others of the city of Saint Louis at the Mississippi River improvement convention. There are a number of gentlemen in my presence who were there, and who, with me, were taken upon an excursion upon one of their great flotillas with which they navigate that river.

A towboat and five barges made up the fleet, capable of carrying five or six thousand tons of freight. Upon the vessel which we were on was a large placard, stating that the vessel was constructed in 1872, had made ninety-one round trips to New Orleans, had carried down stream on her decks and her barges 446,000 tons of freight, and had brought up stream in the same manner 41,000 tons of freight.

When we took this excursion the river was at flood; I do not know how many feet of water were in the channel, but it spread out over its banks in the vicinity of our journey. As we passed the wharves of Saint Louis we were told that there were lying there, tied up and at the time unused, nearly one hundred of these barges, and that there were fifteen or sixteen tow-boats lying idle there. The same morning the daily press informed us that the railroads had instructed their agents to send no more grain to the city of Saint Louis, for 2,000 cars were then upon the tracks unladen and the elevators were all filled.

Yet with this fleet of boats there idle, with this great river at flood, with many millions of bushels of grain in store there was no demand for freight to the port in New Orleans. Why? Simply because there were no vessels in the port of New Orleans to carry forward to foreign ports the corn and wheat that might be taken there; simply because they could not secure at New Orleans the cheap freights that could be had in the port of New York.

Now, in my judgment, you may improve this river as far as you please, as much as you please, and the corn of the West will not go in great quantities to the city of New Orleans for European shipment until you change and reform the commerce of this country and make New Orleans a great entrepôt as New York now is, so that there may be vessels there to be either laden with corn at nominal freight rates or to go back in ballast to European ports.

Having digressed thus far, let me resume the idea that I tried to advance a few moments ago, that these gentlemen mean something more than the mere improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. Among other indications we have, we may be led to suppose so, I think, from the enormous sums that the commission talk of expending. I understood a gentleman to say the other day that he was in favor of an appropriation of $20,000,000 for the purpose of improving the Mississippi River, and I heard my enthusiastic friend from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] say to-day that he was in favor of appropriating $30,000,000 for this purpose. Now these gentlemen do not understand aught of the magnificent demands of this Mississippi River Commission, and these sums are insignificant in comparison with theirs. The sum of $30,000,000 will not reach the estimates of this commission.

Mr. Taylor, one of the most intelligent members of the commission, was interrogated some time ago on this question by a committee of this House. He is reported to have stated that for the improvement of the Mississippi River between Cairo and the mouth of the Red River there would be needed $33,000,000. Now I do not know of any instance where the estimate of the cost of a work of this kind was equal to the actual expenditures. And I think that if he said $33,000,000, we may reasonably expect that the actual expenditure will be double that sum, or $66,000,000.

But we do know this fact, that there are at least 1,200 miles of river between Saint Louis and the mouth of the Mississippi, and 2,400 miles of banks along that river. We know that all the tributaries must be leveed until you reach back to the point where the natural bank of the river has the altitude of the artificial banks at its mouth. Again, each one of these larger tributaries must have its system of levees, and I do not doubt but that this plan includes the building of at least 5,000 miles of levees along the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

Now, the cost of constructing these improvements, according to the estimates made by a member of the commission, varies from $35,000 to $70,000 a mile, and his average of cost from Cairo to the mouth of Red River is $35,000. And suppose it is only the latter sum, what a colossal sum will be needed to meet this probable expenditure, if I am right in believing that it is the purpose of you gentlemen to make all incapable of encroachments upon your lands.

I once had the pleasure at one of the meetings of the friends of this enterprise, in this city, of listening to a gentleman of rare intelligence, who came here, as I understood, accredited by the governor of the State of Mississippi, as one of a committee whose duty it was to urge upon Congress an appropriation for this improvement. That gentleman spoke of what had been accomplished in leveeing the delta of the Yazoo. When asked as to the expense of those levees, he told us that they cost upon an average, if my memory is not at fault, $15,000 a mile.

Now every man who knows anything about the Mississippi River, from the mouth of the Ohio to the river's mouth, knows that there are not fifty miles of the natural banks of that stream that at certain seasons of the year are not subject to overflow, that do not need levees, in order, as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] says, "to drive back the floods and to rescue the imperiled inhabitants upon its banks." Not only must both banks of the Mississippi be leveed, if you purpose the protection of the adjacent lands, but the banks of all the tributaries, up to a point where the natural bank rises to the altitude of the artificial bank at the mouth, must also be raised, requiring on the main stream, from Cairo down, and on the tributaries, five or six thousand miles of levees. If these are to cost but $10,000 to the mile, you have to contemplate the expenditure of at least an immense sum of money from the Treasury. For my part, Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to assist in the expenditure.

In my judgment, the expenditure of this vast sum will be but the beginning. We know, from the action of the elements, even if there were no encroachment from the river itself, if there were no caving-in of its banks, if there were no undermining of the artificial embankments, that at least once in every twenty years, where there is the light friable soil to be found in the Mississippi region, the floods from heaven and the frosts, where there are frosts, would wipe these embankments out of existence, wash them away, dissolve them, and compel their renewal. It is so with the earthworks and fortifications that we built twenty years ago. The disappearing frosts have left them mellow, the rains have fallen upon them and little by little washed them away, so that now you find only faint traces of embankments and ditches that once gave ample protection to armies. So that every twenty years at least the same expenditure will be necessary in order to continue the protection that it seems now necessary to give to the people along that stream.

Mr. Chairman, I again want to say that I have no hostility whatever to the improvement of the navigation of this river. I am earnest and hearty in my friendship, and I will vote liberal appropriations to all these worthy enterprises. I believe that they are of the utmost importance to the people of this country. I believe that the improvement of our water ways is the one great work that we can urge as a barrier, potent, and that will be determining, against the rapacity and the wrong-doing of the railroad carriers. As a protection against them I am in favor of these improvements, but I do not believe that I have the constitutional right to appropriate the public money to private uses, which in my belief—I may be mistaken—are covered up under this seeming public use.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, when I see some of these stalwart, old-fashioned Democrats taking the position that they do upon this question. As I read the history of their party, it is not many years since those of that party who tower high above all others whom we see in our recollections of the past thought there was no language in the Constitution from which Congress could assume that it had the power to make improvements of this kind even for public uses. Now we find that these gentlemen have gone a long way from that ground, and in my judgment they are to-day proposing to support this and other bills that have for their primary object the improvement of the private property of individuals. And this you do, gentlemen, notwithstanding the bounty of this Government to you, notwithstanding the gift that it has made for the very purpose for which I believe you want to appropriate this money.

Thousands and thousands of acres—I may say millions—of these lands now demanding protection were given to the States that are most clamorous for this appropriation. For what purpose? For the purpose of reclaiming them; for the purpose of protecting them from overflow by the Mississippi River and other streams; for the purpose of adding them to the arable aggregate of the lands of this country. You have squandered these magnificent appropriations; they have disappeared, and the work is not accomplished.

Now, under this bill and under this commission and through these processes, you propose to secure that benefit which ought to have been secured to you through your own exertions and by reason of the largess of the Government.

I yield the remainder of my time to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Half an hour.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall not require that length of time, as I do not propose to discuss the general merits of the bill. But I understand that the gentleman from Texas spoke of the harbor named in my amendment as being a private interest. I desire to say that there is no measure contemplated by this bill looking to the appropriation of a million of dollars that is of more general character than the ice-harbor at Dubuque. It is not for the benefit of Dubuque city; it is not for the benefit of the people of my district alone, but it is for the benefit of the commerce of the Mississippi River. Will not the gentleman from Texas stand upon this floor and make special effort for appropriations for the great harbors along the borders of his State when those harbors open their arms to the commerce of his shore? I do the same in regard to this harbor.

I asked permission of my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] to interrupt him for a moment. He kindly granted permission, and then said that when he concluded he would yield to me the remainder of his time. He yielded the floor when his time was out, after expending his genius in firing away at the interests which my amendment covers. Now I appreciate the generosity of his mind, which seems to open up in grand benevolence toward the entire interests of the Mississippi Valley as far as the northern boundary of his Cairo district; then it stops suddenly, and he can not see any interests beyond it.

Having made this response to my friend from Illinois, I want to say that when I offered the amendment I was not aware, as I then intimated, whether that was the proper time or place to submit it. I am not accustomed to the rules of this House, and I see that men who have been here for twenty years are not. [Laughter.] But I have made up my mind that whenever the interests of my district or State are concerned I will make my proposition and then find out whether it is in order, and I am finding out. [Laughter.]

As I before said, I do not intend to antagonize this bill; and the reason I have asked my colleague to yield me a portion of his time is that I may say I do not intend now to press this amendment, but will urge it before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. My reason for doing this, I will say to the House, is because I do not desire to block the wheels that seek the improvement of the Mississippi. I am for the improvement of that stream and for everything that tends to improve it. I am in favor of everything that will cheapen commerce and advance the agricultural interests of my State and my section as well as of the whole country, and those interests extend down as far as the Cairo district of my friend from Illinois and lower still. But my present purpose is simply to say that I will not urge that amendment on this bill, but will press it upon the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, for I find that by pressing my proposition now I may entangle this measure, as I do not wish to do, with a number of other amendments.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, obtained the floor and said: I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it necessary for me to say more than a word on this subject, nor would I do even that were it not for the fact that it is a question to which I have given careful and long investigation. I need not say to the members who have served with me previously in this House that I am in favor of the improvement of the Mississippi River. My position upon that question is well understood, and I took it after very laborious work. Upon examination I came to the conclusion that the Mississippi River Commission had devised the proper plan, and I have never yet changed my mind in that regard. That commission is composed of able, careful, capable men, and their plan is the result of long and patient study of the river and the principles which govern these silt-bearing streams.

Now, this special appropriation of $1,000,000 simply involves the question of whether we will permit that commission to go on with their experiment. For I must say to my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] that I differ with him in this regard. I do not think the success of their plan is settled beyond question by any means. Indeed, I consider it still an experiment. I wish it could be set down among the certainties. But do not let us appropriate money here under any misunderstanding. There are many good men in the United States, able men, who sincerely believe that every dollar we appropriate to the Mississippi River upon the plan adopted by that commission might as well be dumped into the river; that it is a mere waste of money. I say good men, intelligent men, believe that. On the other hand, many good men believe the other way; have faith in this plan. I know that, because I believe that way myself. [Laughter.] Is not that convincing proof?

I believe that the commission have adopted the only plan that will ever successfully improve and control that stream. I know it will involve a large expenditure of money before we get through, but I believe the enterprise is so magnificent, so far reaching in its results, of so much importance to the commerce and development of this country, that as a nation we ought to undertake it. In doing this I do not believe it will ever be done successfully without leveeing the banks as the commission has determined. Now, if in building these levees for the purpose of confining its waters and thereby deepening its channel so as to improve the navigation of this river, what if it does happen to benefit the people who live upon its shores? And admit, if you please, that they are a people who have differed with me seriously in the past, so seriously that it requires an immense effort to work myself up to a point where I can labor in their behalf, and I admit that it costs me a struggle [laughter], still I say, even if it does benefit these people, in the name of God, shall we withhold an appropriation of this kind on that account?

I glory in the fact that it is likely to redeem from the overflowing waters of that stream land enough to make a State. That fact is an additional reason to me for favoring the project and not an objection to the enterprise.

But the only question which we have before us to-day is whether we will permit this commission to go on with its plan and complete its work. If we intend to do so, then we should give them this money, because the last appropriation will be exhausted, and then the delay will cause more damage than the amount of this appropriation if the work is suspended until the regular river and harbor bill can be passed. Work on that river can not be prosecuted during the flood-time. They need to get ready for the high water of the spring-time. Thus you see it is simply a question of whether we will rely on that commission and stand by them in their attempt to do this work or whether we intend to abandon them and the work altogether.

I am glad that my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has abandoned his effort to add another appropriation to this bill. This is not the first time we have passed a special appropriation for a needed work in advance of the regular bill. Members will remember that in the last Congress the engineers reported they were in need of $50,000 at Hell Gate for the protection and completion of work there, and that they needed the funds before we could pass the regular river and harbor bill, and a bill was passed in the Forty-seventh Congress meeting that emergency, which gave them that amount of money in advance. As a rule I do not believe in putting these special appropriations through in advance of the regular bill, but this case I think is an exception, a just and proper exception, one which should be made in deference to the public good.

I do not believe in passing an appropriation for this stream simply because it is the Mississippi River. Any other work with the same surroundings should receive the same attention. I said the other day that some men seemed to think that the Mississippi River was the only water way in the United States. I live upon a chain of lakes the commerce of which in tonnage is several times the amount that passes down the Mississippi River. Do you know that the Detroit River floats over its waters during the summer season almost as much tonnage in two days as goes over the Mississippi River in as many weeks? Yes, it does. But of late the people who live on the banks of the Mississippi have not withheld from us a single dollar needed for the improvement of that great highway or for the harbors upon our great lakes. Nor do I believe you intend to do it. You are coming to understand the needs of all the great water ways of this country. And our people are fast learning the importance of your great river, that drains the greatest valley on this continent. The appropriation now asked for is for the benefit of that important work. As a nation we have undertaken that great experiment, and now we must either abandon it or furnish the money to carry on the work.

I hope the committee will look this question squarely in the face. I know that there is a great question involved as to whether or not the plan on which the work is progressing will succeed. I know there is a serious question in the minds of many who have studied this matter carefully as to whether we can tame this great river and control its forces. Some think it an undertaking beyond the power of man. It is a big job, a grave question. Great doubts exist in the minds no doubt of many of us. I know that I have my fears on this question. But I prefer to take counsel of my hopes rather than my fears. I believe that this great nation should make the experiment, and if we fail we can survive it, while if we succeed it will be to our glory as a nation and as a people for all time.

Then let us try it for a while longer. Let us not higgle about the matter. Let us do the work like business men, and if the men who are intrusted with this important labor are out of funds, let us give them sufficient to keep the work going until we make of it a success or are satisfied that it is a failure. When the people become satisfied that the work can not be performed, then let them withhold the appropriations. If any members here are satisfied now on that point, of course they will vote against this proposition. For my own part I am not yet satisfied. I believe in the work, and have faith in its ultimate success; and I shall vote for this special appropriation in order that this immense undertaking may be proceeded with, trusting that the future will prove to us all that our attempt to compel that great river to obey the behests of man was a wise and beneficent undertaking.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, was received, announcing that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 713) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel H. Lockett, of Alabama; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

IMMEDIATE APPROPRIATION FOR IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I am not disposed, Mr. Chairman, to occupy the time or the attention of this committee in discussing either the necessity or the importance of the work of improving the Mississippi River. The question, it seems to me, which the committee should now consider is whether there is a necessity for making this appropriation at this time. I had supposed, sir, that the importance of improving the Mississippi River had been almost universally conceded by all sections of the country. In the discussions on the floor of this House heretofore the great objection to the river and harbor bill has been always that it included smaller and insignificant streams and harbors which were not national in their character, and therefore did not deserve the consideration of Congress. But the importance of improving the Mississippi River has not been seriously questioned. Whether we should improve the Mississippi River by one system or by another is a question which I do not propose to discuss at this time. We have been discussing it for eight years, ever since I have had the honor of a seat in Congress, and I had supposed that Congress had settled down upon the plan of constituting a commission for the Mississippi River, to be composed of eminent engineers, men of experience and ability, who were qualified to investigate and consider the question of improving the Mississippi River, and who would adopt some plan for that purpose and report the same to Congress; and upon the report of that commission we have been acting and making our annual appropriations for a number of years.

I think in the Forty-sixth Congress, at the first session of that Congress, after full discussion of this great question, we finally appropriated a million of dollars for the improvement of that portion of the Mississippi River below Cairo; and in the last Congress we made a much larger appropriation. So Congress, it would seem, is fully committed, Mr. Chairman, to this plan of improving the river. I care not whether you call it an experiment or not. It was entered upon as an experiment, it is true, and it may be, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] has just said, still an experiment; but we have the report of this commission, informing us that this plan of improving the river is proving eminently successful and satisfactory to the commissioners so far as it has progressed, and that it is in the interest of the improvement of the navigation of the river. Where we had but four or five feet of water a few years ago we are now having ten or twelve feet, and that in the worst and most dangerous places on the river.

Now the work is progressing satisfactorily. The commission tells us that, and the only question here is, whether we shall appropriate a million of dollars at this time, the necessity of which grows out of the failure to make any appropriation at the last session of Congress, and the fact that the money before appropriated is now expended within a very small amount, and soon there will come a time when floods will rise in the river and great loss and damage may be sustained to the work already in operation if this appropriation is not made. That is the question for us to consider, and I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it was upon this ground that I favored, as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, this immediate appropriation. I have seen enough of public improvements since I have been a member of this body to know that there is always great waste in the public expenditures, growing out of the insufficiency of appropriations for the purposes of carrying on public works. Sometimes we appropriate 20 per cent. only of the estimates; sometimes we appropriate 40 per cent. of what is asked for, and sometimes 50 per cent. of the amount that is deemed necessary for the work, and the result is that in improvements like that of the Mississippi River and other streams the entire plant is liable to be swept away and the amounts expended lost and destroyed unless a sufficient amount is given to carry on the work begun to completion and to protect it from freshets while it is progressing.

The Mississippi River is a great river. Everybody concedes that it requires a large amount of money to improve it, and everybody can see that we have a large amount of money already expended there, and which is liable to be lost or destroyed by not going on and completing the work at the earliest possible day. This is a rule with reference to the improvements of all rivers; and that makes it necessary, and more necessary in the case of the Mississippi River than others, because the amount involved is so much larger than the amounts which we have appropriated for the improvement of smaller streams.

Now, here is a commission constituted of intelligent men, as I have believed. I know one of them personally and have known him for some years, and as an engineer he has no superior in my opinion in the country. I refer to General Gillmore, whom I believe to be an able, intelligent engineer, and a faithful, conscientious public servant. He is a member of this commission, and has given this subject his attention. He is in favor of the plan adopted for the improvement of the river and of going on with the work. And I rely on what he says as well as other members of the commission. The commissioners say there is a necessity for this amount to go on with the work and protect it against the possible floods that may follow the winter and spring.

Mr. BRUMM. May I ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Has the committee as yet any idea of how much they will ask for the entire year?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I think about $3,000,000, with possibly $1,000,000 for some other portions of the river. It was agreed by Congress that they would commence with Providence reach and Plum Point reach and test the proposed plans of improving the river by these, which are the most important points and at which there is most danger to navigation.

Mr. BRUMM. About $3,000,000 for the whole year?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Yes, sir; that is my understanding, unless another $1,000,000 shall be appropriated for other points.

Well, Mr. Chairman, regarding it as a necessity to appropriate this money at this time in order to guard against great possible loss which may ensue if it is not appropriated, I believe this bill ought to pass, so that the commission may have a sufficient amount of money to proceed with the work and guard against possible loss and damage.

I will say a word in regard to levees. I have not favored the construction of levees on the Mississippi River unless for the purpose of improving the navigation of the river. Where it is necessary in order to improve the channel of the river to construct levees I see no objection to their construction, even though they do furnish protection to private property. In all our public improvements private property may be benefited by the expenditure of public money. You can not construct an arsenal, you can not construct a public work of any kind in any portion of the country, but you will benefit private property, and one locality will be more benefited than another. If the protection be incidental and the real object of building the levee is to improve the navigation of the river, I know no objection to it. But I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that this intelligent commission says that to go on with a system of levees for the purpose of improving the navigation of the river will not cost to exceed the sum of about $11,000,000. Am I correct in that statement, Mr. BLANCHARD? That is my recollection of the report. No $20,000,000 is necessary, no $30,000,000 is necessary, nor $40,000,000 in the judgment of this commission; but about $11,000,000 is sufficient for the purpose of building levees and going on even with the levee system in the improvement of the river. But this appropriation does not involve the levee system.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the entire amount asked for is $11,000,000?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. They say the estimate for the levees is $11,000,000.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. For the whole work of the improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. That is what they say in their report for levees.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think that is the estimate of what the levees themselves would cost.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The inquiry I intended to make was how much you expected it would cost to improve the Mississippi River according to the plan of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. KING. The estimate is $43,000,000.

Mr. DUNN. I think no estimates have ever been made.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I want to say another thing to my friend from Iowa. He speaks of persons who want private property protected; that is, people who live along the banks of the Lower Mississippi River. I want to say to him that from year to year, and I think it must be within his knowledge, Mississippi River improvement conventions have been held at Saint Louis, have been held at Davenport, have been held all along the Mississippi River above Saint Louis, and that there has been more earnest and active interest taken in regard to the improvement of the Mississippi River on the part of the commercial cities and people on the Upper Mississippi River than there has been below. We have been urged from year to year, and now in a very few weeks we have another convention here in this city largely emanating from the great commercial city of Saint Louis, on what we call the Upper Mississippi River, to urge the improvement of the Mississippi River; so that our own people in the Northwest feel as deeply the importance of this work as I think the people of the Lower Mississippi River do, and we are doing it for our own benefit.

One of the most distinguished railroad men in this country, who, I think, understands the transportation question more fully and intelligently than any man I have conversed with upon the subject, has spoken of the influence of the water ways of our country upon the question of cheapening transportation. He says that must be our great dependence against the extortionate charges of railroads, and he tells us how the Erie Canal, during the season of navigation, in connection with the lakes of the North, affects the cost of transportation not only on the lines of railroad which run parallel to it, but on every line of railroad which runs from the Mississippi Valley to the Atlantic coast. And when he is asked the question, "But what is your dependence during the winter season of the year; when your lakes and canals are locked up with ice what protection have you then?" he points to the Mississippi River, flowing on to the Gulf and to the sea, as being the great dependence of our people. This great river is an interest which I contend we ought not to neglect. We should make liberal appropriations to improve it, for the very reason that while corn and wheat and all the products of the West and the Northwest may go down the Mississippi River, it will have a controlling influence in giving the people cheaper transportation.

In reply to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] I will say that I voted for the river and harbor bill, and I went home and made speeches in every county in my district vindicating my vote everywhere. I did not apologize for it or attempt to palliate it in the slightest degree. Yet I was re-elected by the largest majority I believe that I ever received as a candidate for Congress.

And I know that a little way up the Mississippi River one of my friends, whom I respect and honor, and who stood here on the floor of this House day by day and fought the river and harbor bill, was left at home.

And I now yield five minutes of my time to his successor [Mr. WELLER], that he may have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. WELLER. I am not well informed as to the methods of procedure required that one may be heard by members of this distinguished body on this floor. But I will do as my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] did a little while ago, and will feel my way out, and trust to the generosity of the members of this House. I ask the Clerk to read, as a part of my remarks, the body of the petition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A petition to the Forty-eighth Congress of the United States by the people of the Mississippi Valley in behalf of the improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries (as provided by the conference committee, July 11, 1883).

The people of the Mississippi Valley residing in the fourth Congressional district of the State of Iowa, and largely interested in the growth of this section of our country, as well as in the prosperity of all the United States, do petition and ask that your honorable body make such appropriations for the improvement of the Western water ways as shall be adequate for the purpose of securing in them a permanent navigable channel equal to the needs of commerce.

The value to the country of a comprehensive improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries can not be estimated. Whenever the improvement of these great rivers becomes complete the question of cheap transportation will be forever settled; a question of transcendent importance alike to all of our own people and of common interests to producers at home and consumers abroad.

These natural channels of communication are the property of the Government. They bind together the various sections of the country, politically and commercially, and their perfect improvement and supervision should be the especial care of the nation.

The people, without regard to party, representing every variety of industry in the Mississippi Valley, now the center of production, both of natural products and manufactured articles, producing in the year 1882 85 per cent. in value of all our exports, and contributing about 75 per cent. of our national revenues, respectfully ask from you, as their lawmakers and rulers, a full, fair, and just consideration of the needs and necessities of our great rivers as natural highways, and pray that such needed appropriations may be bestowed upon them by the General Government as are recommended by the United States officers in charge of the works and as are necessary to make transportation upon them safe and inexpensive.

Mr. WELLER. That is a sample of what might come from the great State of Iowa. If the question was presented to-day to the people of Iowa I am satisfied that 95 per cent. of the people of that great State would be in accord with the distinguished gentleman from the third district [Mr. HENDERSON] and myself, and would be specifically antagonistic to the position occupied by my other colleague from that State [Mr. HEPBURN].

I suggest that the names appearing upon that petition are not those of persons residing upon the banks of the Mississippi, but of persons residing one hundred miles inland. Yet they recognize the value of that stream to the commerce of the great Northwest; they recognize the value of that stream to the industrial, manufacturing, and farming interests of the country. They desire that this million of dollars, only a drop, perhaps, in comparison with the sum that ought to be appropriated, shall now be given, in order that the work may go on that has been so graciously begun.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of submitting a motion to limit debate upon the pending bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Mississippi River appropriation bill; and pending that motion, I move that all general debate upon the bill be limited to five minutes.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. And pending that motion, I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 96, noes 104.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, called for tellers.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being 38 in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon ordering tellers upon the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers, and there were 46 in the affirmative—more than one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and Mr. HUNT were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 90, noes 146.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion to limit debate.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to offer an amendment to that motion.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to amend so as to allow thirty minutes for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

The motion to amend was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I renew the motion that the House now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, upon a division—ayes 52, noes 117.

The question recurred upon the motion to limit debate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend so as to allow forty minutes for debate, and I hope gentlemen on the other side will concede that much. There are some important facts that have not yet been developed, and will not be developed in the House if debate is cut off in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS to limit general debate to five minutes was then agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Pending that motion, I move again that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 41 in the affirmative—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 182, not voting 67; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. CABELL. I voted inadvertently. I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE].

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio, with Mr. FINDLAY.

Mr. SHELLEY with Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina, with Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. JORDAN with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. BREWER.

Mr. BUCHANAN with Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, on political questions.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] on political questions; but not considering this a political question, I have voted.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to make a suggestion to gentlemen who wish to discuss this question. The proposition has been made to allow 40 minutes for debate—to be equally divided, of course, between the friends and opponents of the bill. We are perfectly willing that 20 minutes be given to those who oppose the bill, no one occupying any time on the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the proposition as to the extension of time has been disposed of by the House, and the question now is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. But the suggestion of the gentleman can be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I ask unanimous consent to that agreement, after which I shall make a motion to adjourn. My proposition is that twenty minutes be allowed for debate, all of which shall be occupied by the opponents of the bill.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he give thirty minutes to the opponents of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well; thirty minutes for general debate—twenty minutes on the other side and ten on this.

Mr. REED. The opponents of the bill, as I understand, would like to have thirty minutes. It seems to me the wisest course to give them that time.

Mr. WILLIS. Let it be thirty minutes on the other side and ten on this, making forty minutes altogether.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that an order be made allowing forty minutes' debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill, thirty to be controlled by the opponents of the bill and ten by its advocates or friends. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. KEIFER. Is it understood that is the general debate?

The SPEAKER. It is. The Chair hears no objection, and the order will be made.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GRAVES, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family; and

To Mr. PETTIBONE, for one week, on account of sickness.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 16, 1884.

Prayer by Rev. G. GOTTHEIL, D. D., of New York city.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

TRADE WITH CUBA AND PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of the 8th instant, calling for the correspondence on file upon the subject of discriminating duties upon commerce between the United States and Cuba and Porto Rico, I transmit herewith a report made to me by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 15, 1884.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAWES. I present a petition of citizens of Boston, praying for an appropriation for schools in Alaska, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present also the petition of the Temple of Honor of Massachusetts, representing 1,815 members, praying for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the use, manufacture, or sale of alcoholic drinks. The petitioners ask that this petition may be referred to a select committee. I am not advised whether any such petition has already been presented and referred during the session. I would like to have the petition take the reference of similar petitions, if any have been hitherto presented and referred.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Similar petitions were referred to the Committee on Finance in the last Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot advise the Senator from Massachusetts, but will have the petition referred to any committee he may suggest.

Mr. DAWES. Some petitions on this subject have gone heretofore to the Committee on Finance, but I do not see any reason why the Committee on Finance should report upon an amendment to the Constitution. I suggest that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will be so referred.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New York, representing 7,000 members, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Connecticut, representing 1,250 members, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Hampshire, representing 1,200 members, and a petition of the National Temperance Society of New York, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JACKSON presented a petition of the Good Templars of Tennessee, representing 3,549 members, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of Joannes Brothers and 8 other tobacco dealers at Green Bay, Wis., praying for a tobacco-rebate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hold in my hand three petitions from citizens of the District of Columbia, one from Mrs. Dorman B. Eaton, Mrs. John B. Alley, and others; another signed by L. S. Emery, A. S. Solomons, and others, and the third by Judge William B. Snell and others, all praying for the passage of the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. I move that these petitions be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I hope that the committee will give prompt consideration to the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Robert Reyburn, M. D., M. W. Galt & Brother, and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Charles W. Beatty, of Baltimore, Md., praying a refund of duties alleged to be illegally exacted by the collector of customs; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Grand Temple of Honor of Ohio, representing 700 members, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CONGER presented the petition of James H. Walton and other citizens of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 691) to confirm and declare legal the acts of certain officers of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BUTLER presented the memorial of the Charleston (S. C.) Chamber of Commerce, in favor of an appropriation in advance for the Charleston jetties; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Teachers' Institute of South Carolina, in favor of an appropriation in aid of the Bureau of Education; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of O. H. Kelly and other citizens of Carrabelle, Fla., praying for the establishment of a port of entry at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present the petition of a committee of the national live-stock convention which was held in Chicago, an adjourned meeting of which has been held in this city during the past three or four days. The petition relates to the subject which was under discussion yesterday morning, in regard to diseased meats and diseased cattle. I desire to have it read. It is not long, but as it pertains particularly to the resolution which was before the Senate and under discussion yesterday, I wish that the paper may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the memorial.

The petition was read, as follows:

A memorial of the committee of the national live-stock convention held in Chicago November, 1883.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners respectfully set forth that at a national convention of the live-stock breeders of the United States, representing twenty-two of the principal stock-growing States and Territories, held in the city of Chicago, November 16, 1883, they were appointed a committee for the purpose of presenting to your honorable body a statement of the losses which the live-stock interests of the country suffer by reason of the restrictive regulations now enforced by foreign governments against the importation of American live-stock and meat products into their respective countries.

We believe that these regulations are, to a great extent, inspired by motives other than those publicly assigned. It is claimed that our cattle are infected with a disease known as contagious pleuro-pneumonia, and that our swine are diseased in various ways—but more particularly with trichinosis. It is further alleged that we have no adequate system of inspection of either live-stock or dead-meat products. While the facts do not fully bear out these allegations, yet they contain a sufficient amount of truth to give them a degree of plausibility.

The facts are briefly these: The disease of lung-plague exists to a limited extent in circumscribed localities along the Atlantic seaboard, where it was first introduced by importation from Great Britain and Holland. Various State laws have been passed for the suppression of this disease and several hundred thousand dollars expended, but owing to the lack of united action by the several States and the difficulty of regulating by State enactments the commerce between the States it has been impossible so far to entirely eradicate the disease, except in the single State of Massachusetts, which took immediate action on discovering the disease, and by prompt measures, at an expenditure of about $100,000, successfully eradicated it.

There is also a certain amount of disease existing among the swine of the United States, but certainly to not nearly so great an extent as is represented abroad. The statistics of our export trade show that we are now annually losing millions of dollars by reason of these restrictions. The number of neat cattle in the United States as estimated by the census of 1880 is 41,171,000, representing an estimated value of $1,250,000,000. The number of swine is 43,000,000, representing an estimated value of $300,000,000. Our export of live-stock and meat products during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, aggregated $120,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, they aggregated only $107,000,000, showing a decrease of $13,000,000. This great and rapidly growing interest is not only seriously embarrassed by reason of the restrictive regulations imposed by foreign governments against our meats, but the actual existence of the cattle interest is imperiled by the prevalence of contagious pleuro-pneumonia or lung-plague, which prevails as yet to only a limited extent, as hereinbefore stated.

In proof of this strong statement it is only necessary to cite the case of Australia, where formerly vast herds of cattle roamed the extensive plains of that country as they now do the plains of our own Western frontier. In the year 1858 a single cow infected with lung-plague was imported into that country from England, and from that one animal the disease extended to the ranges of the interior, and entirely destroyed the herds of whole districts of country, so that the raising of cattle was abandoned in consequence. The same state of affairs occurred in South Africa. We cite these cases to show what would be the result of the infection of our own Western ranges, now teeming with millions of cattle. That they have not already become infected is due solely to the fact that the traffic in live-stock has been almost entirely from the West to the East, except during the year 1880, when a large trade in Eastern dairy calves sprang up between the West and the East. The State of Illinois, foreseeing the fatal effects likely to result from this trade, promptly passed a law prohibiting the traffic in such calves within her territory, thereby substantially breaking up the dangerous traffic.

In consequence of the restrictions which Great Britain imposes upon our exports of live cattle, animals taken from this country bring an average of $15 per head less than if the same class of catte were exported from Canada, where a rigid examination of cattle is enforced and no disease is known to exist, thus placing our cattle industry at a serious disadvantage in competition with countries against which no restrictions are imposed and tends constantly to lessen the aggregate of our export. A much greater percentage of losses is sustained by reason of the restrictions imposed by foreign countries upon our pork products.

For fuller and more complete information we respectfully refer you to the reports of the United States Department of Agriculture and of the United States Treasury Cattle Commission.

In view of losses already sustained and of the yet greater dangers menacing us, we most earnestly recommend that your honorable bodies enact such laws as will not only relieve us from the unjust suspicion which attaches to our live-stock and meat products abroad, but that you will also take proper measures to provide for the extinction of the disease of contagious pleuro-pneumonia, which can only be done by the slaughter of all infected cattle and the thorough disinfection of infected premises.

The United States Treasury Cattle Commission, who have made a very thorough examination of the subject, estimate the expense of such a measure at $1,500,000. Large as this sum is, it is a mere trifle in comparison with the losses already sustained. In our opinion not more than $500,000 need be made immediately available, and it is to be hoped that after the work has been properly inaugurated it may be found that a much smaller sum than that first named may be sufficient; but in any case we wish to particularly urge upon you the necessity for immediate, thorough, and complete work. We further respectfully recommend, with a view to removing the prejudice of our foreign customers whose trade it is desirable for this country to retain, that a rigid system of inspection of all meat products for foreign export be provided for and enforced, the expense of such inspection to be borne by the exporter.

In order that the States whose Legislatures are now in session make take immediate measures to co-operate with the provisions of a bill to carry out these recommendations, your early consideration of this measure is earnestly urged.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

J. B. GRINNELL, Iowa.
T. CORWIN ANDERSON, Kentucky.
JOSEPH M. CAREY, Wyoming.
D. W. SMITH, Illinois.
DONALD ROBB, Arizona.
N. M. CURTIS, New York.
D. COOPER AYRES, M. D., Wisconsin.
LEVI STOCKBRIDGE, Massachusetts.
S. R. THOMPSON, Nebraska.
GEO. V. LAWRENCE, Pennsylvania.
WM. J. WILSON, Colorado.
E. M. HUNT, M. D., New Jersey.

Mr. BECK. I wish to know if the petition will be printed in the RECORD. If not, I desire an order that it may be so printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will appear in the RECORD, having been read at the desk. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. When that order of business is reached I shall ask leave to introduce a bill upon this subject.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Maine, representing 20,000 members, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of the State Temperance Union of Kansas, representing 6,000 members, and a petition of the Sons of Temperance of Kansas, representing 780 members, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MAXEY presented a petition of the Templars of Honor and Temperance of Texas, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 20) to provide for the issue of circulation to national banking associations, reported it with amendments; which were ordered to be printed, and, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 376) for the relief of Henry McGowan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 735) for the relief of Charles S. Mills, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Lewis D. Allen, to report it adversely and with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill may go on the Calendar until to-morrow so that I can look at it. I do not know whether I introduced that bill or not, but I will see and call it up. Let the bill go over so that I may see the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I am also directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 392) for the relief of Joseph Kinney, administrator of David Ballentine, to report it adversely and recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are one or two cases involving the same principle on the Calendar, and I ask that that bill may also go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 491) for the relief of John W. Franklin, executor of the last will of John Armfield, deceased;

A bill (S. 767) for the relief of Columbus F. Perry and Elizabeth H. Gilmer; and

A bill (S. 339) for the relief of the State National Bank of Louisiana.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 167) for the relief of John Thorns, submitted an adverse report thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement.

Mr. BECK. I desire that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 410) for the relief of the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company, limited, of the city of New York; and,

A bill (S. 399) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 253) for the relief of John Leathers, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PIKE. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the personal representatives of Irvine & Field, praying compensation for cotton the proceeds of which were sold under a decree of a United States court, to submit an adverse report thereon, and recommend that the claim be disallowed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee will be discharged from further consideration of the petition, if there be no objection.

Mr. BECK. I should like to have that placed on the Calendar. I think it is a bill that my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that it is a petition, and not a bill, and there is no way by which petitions can be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. I think the petition was presented by my colleague, and I should like to have it placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire whether under the rules of the Senate this is not the time for the disposition of such a report upon a petition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that it is.

Mr. HOAR. Then I hope the Senate will proceed to dispose of it now, and if there be any objection on the merits, that the merits be discussed now.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon. I see on examination that this petition was presented by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]. I was not aware of it; I thought it was presented by my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky withdraws his objection, and the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. CALL. Neither of the Senators from Mississippi is here, and I ask that the matter lie over until one of them is present.

Mr. HOAR. As was stated yesterday by the Senator now in the chair, the universal practice of the Senate, without an exception, has been that when one of these reports comes in from the Committee on Claims and the subject is acted upon in accordance with the report without discussion, if the Senator presenting the petition desires at any future day, being absent at the time or for any other reason, to have the matter reconsidered, it is always done by unanimous consent. I trust, therefore, that the Calendar will not be crowded by putting upon it petitions. I hope this report will be disposed of, and then if the Senator from Mississippi comes in undoubtedly the Senate will yield to a request of his, if he has any reason for making it.

Mr. CALL. With that understanding I have no objection to discharging the committee from the further consideration of the petition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the committee will be agreed to, and the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 343) to provide for the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon the United States in places out of their territory and dominion and to repeal the Revised Statutes from section 4083 to section 4130, inclusive, reported it without amendment.

IRON MOUNTAIN RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 353) to repeal section 1 of the act entitled "An act making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain Railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas," approved July 4, 1866, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment and with a recommendation that it be passed.

I desire to state that a bill has been heretofore reported from the Committee on Public Lands in precisely the terms in which this is now reported, and also to state that this is a grant of lands which was never availed of by the railroad company; that until a comparatively recent period the railroad company, not having built over the line prescribed by the statute, supposed that it had no right to the lands in law or otherwise; that on the delivery of a certain opinion by the Supreme Court to the effect that grants of land made to railroads must be affirmatively forfeited by either legislative or judicial action before they could become a portion of the public domain, certain onerous requirements of the law making the grant were imposed upon the railroad company, and the railroad company then desired to get rid, as it before supposed it had got rid, of the land-grant. This bill is simply to forfeit that land-grant, and to restore the railroad company to the position it would have been in if the grant had not been made. It has never encumbered the land; it never has sold any of the land. On the contrary, the lands have been settled upon by a large number of persons who are now awaiting the consummation of their title, and it can not be consummated until such a bill as this shall pass and become a law. Inasmuch as it has heretofore received the favorable consideration of the committee and of the Senate, I venture to ask that it be now considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill just reported by him may now be considered at this time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that consent will be given. It is a very material bill and very short, and will only take a moment.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be reported for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas by the first section of an act of Congress approved July 4, 1866, there was granted to the State of Missouri, for the purpose of aiding in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain Railroad, from its terminus at Pilot Knob to a point on the southern boundary line of the State, every alternate section of land designated by odd numbers, for ten sections in width on each side of said road; and

Whereas said Iron Mountain Railroad Company, or its successor, did not comply with the terms of said act either in time or by the construction of its line in accordance with the location of its line as shown on its maps filed in the Department of the Interior, or otherwise, and never became entitled to or received any of said lands: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1 of the act of Congress entitled "An act making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain Railroad, from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas," approved July 4, 1866, be, and hereby is, repealed; and upon the acceptance by the said Iron Mountain Railroad Company, its successors or assigns, in writing, under corporate seal, within six months from the passage of this act, of the terms of this act, and upon the production to the Secretary of the Interior by said company, its successors or assigns, of satisfactory proof that said lands have not been sold or encumbered by said company, the said Iron Mountain Railroad Company, its successors or assigns, shall be forever released from any and all obligations imposed by said act of July 4, 1866; and thereupon said lands shall be restored to the public domain for disposition under the public-land laws of the United States: Provided, That all pre-emption and homestead entries heretofore allowed upon any of said lands, not in excess of the legal quantity, be, and they are hereby, confirmed: And provided further, That all persons residing on any of said lands at the date of the passage of this act shall have a prior right to acquire the same, not exceeding 160 acres, by the usual methods and under the usual restrictions.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have some Senator state to us the restrictions or burdens that are cast upon the railroad company which this bill releases the company from.

Mr. PLUMB. I will read the section in the original granting act. Section 4 of the act making the grant provides:

That the said railroads—

There were grants provided in the act to two railroads, a railroad in Arkansas and a railroad in Missouri, and this section 4 applies equally to both—

That the said railroads shall be, and remain, public highways, so far as the same may be constructed under this act, for the use of the Government of the United States, free of all toll or other charges upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States, and at the costs in all respects of said railroad companies; and the said roads are hereby required to be constructed within the term of five years from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1866.

Mr. SHERMAN. The next question is, has this railroad company received any other land grants from the Government of the United States?

Mr. COCKRELL. None in the world, Mr. President; not a thing.

Mr. PLUMB. It has received nothing. I will state what I think will make the matter clear to the Senate. The railroad company did not locate its line upon the line provided for in the law; it did not suppose that it had any right to the land and intended to abandon the land, to waive all its rights under the grant; and it was only on the decision of the Supreme Court that the grant attached notwithstanding the lapse of time, that is to say, it must be declared forfeited by either legislative or judicial action, that any question ever arose about it in the mind of the railroad company or in the mind of anybody else.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator from Kansas whether the railroad company authorized to construct either of the roads here mentioned received land grants under any other act?

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir; it did not. It never received any grant from the United States other than this.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, the company did not act under the law at all?

Mr. PLUMB. No; nor under any other law. The company has had no benefit of any action of Congress granting lands.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. Did the railroad company obligate itself to do anything else except to build the railroad as a condition of the grant?

Mr. PLUMB. It was obligated to transport the Government stores, &c., according to the terms of the section I have just read, in consideration of the grant of lands.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now you propose to release the railroad company from that obligation and restore the land to the public domain?

Mr. PLUMB. The Government and the railroad company are to resume their former condition with respect to each other, the Government getting its lands and the railroad company being released from its obligation to transport Government stores, &c., on special conditions.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands whether this grant was given to the railroad company or to the State to aid in building the railroads?

Mr. PLUMB. It was given to the State of Missouri to aid in building the railroad. The land was granted to the State of Missouri.

Mr. CONGER. Was it with the right of the State to assign the land, as has been usual in such cases?

Mr. PLUMB. No; there was no right to assign the land, and the State has never assigned or assumed to assign it. A large portion of the lands is now settled on, and the men are waiting for the perfection of their title until Congress shall pass this or some similar act which shall enable them to go on and get that title, which they can only have a right to by reason of the road not having been completed within the time named in the law.

Mr. CONGER. Has the State ever designated the company which is named in the bill as the party to receive the grant?

Mr. PLUMB. This particular road is mentioned in the act of 1866. The State had no power to designate any other road. The grant was made to the State for the purpose of aiding this particular railroad and no other.

Mr. CONGER. By name?

Mr. PLUMB. By name, the Iron Mountain Railroad.

Mr. CONGER. If it were not for that, I was about to inquire whether the State might not have given to some other company the same land.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. PLUMB. The consideration was limited to the one railroad.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the State never did anything with it. The railroad was located on a certain line, and the reservation of land was made on that line. When they constructed the road it was located a considerable distance away from that line, probably 15 miles, and that reservation of public lands still remains. The railroad company can not claim it, and nobody else can; it belongs to the Government. This bill simply restores the situation as it existed before. The road is not built over the line of this land; it is not built over the line where the land was reserved.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any question other than that between the purchasers, or pre-emptioners, or homesteaders on the line of the road?

Mr. COCKRELL. None in the world except between the General Government and them, and the General Government gives them priority of right.

Mr. McPHERSON. There is one other question which I should like to ask, and which does not appear yet clear to me. Has the railroad company ever had any title to this land?

Mr. PLUMB. They have not.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator spoke of settlers on the land.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill provides that the company shall satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that there is no lien or incumbrance of the lands by it before it is released.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then the settlers upon the land have no title from the railroad company?

Mr. PLUMB. They have no title even from the railroad company. The railroad company has not assumed to deal with reference to the land, but under the supposition that by reason of their failure to construct the railroad on the original line and within the original time the railroad company had no title to the land the settlers went on. They are there now, and they have preserved their rights. That is the reason why the necessity exists for the prompt passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask one further question. Does the bill provide that upon the restoration of the land to the public domain it shall be subject to pre-emption?

Mr. PLUMB. The bill restores it to entry under the public-land laws of the United States, leaving it exactly as it would have been if the reservation had not been made. The bill then provides for giving preference to the men who are already on the land, but who of course can have no status with reference to it now because of the fact that it is under this reservation.

Mr. CONGER. The question is whether this is a part of the public land that must be readvertised and offered for public sale.

Mr. PLUMB. There is no such question involved here. If restored to the public domain now without any further expression, the land would be subject to entry under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Subject to all the land laws, I suppose.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes; the bill restores the land to the public domain and makes it subject to the forms of entry; but it goes further and provides that the men who are now on that land, who are actual settlers, shall have the preference right to purchase; and that is proper, because they are there now, practically as trespassers, by reason of the fact that the land was reserved for the benefit of the railroad company.

Mr. CONGER. I supposed when there has been a reservation of land of this kind, by some decision of the courts it was necessary that they should be again offered at public sale as original public lands of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. If that were true in this case, as it is not, the terms of the bill would especially waive any such requirement as that, because it restores the land specifically and for a specific purpose, that is, for settlement.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VANCE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1116) to regulate distilleries of spirits of a capacity of less than thirty gallons production per day; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COLQUITT asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1117) for the erection of a public building at Macon, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BUTLER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1118) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAWYER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1119) for the relief of John W. Brisbois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1120) for the relief of the heirs and devisees of Dr. Gustavus Horner; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that this bill, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I suggest to my colleague that the bill should go to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. It refers to a Revolutionary claim, and I think it ought to go to that committee.

Mr. SAWYER. I accept the suggestion of my colleague, and will move the reference of the bill, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROOME asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1121) for the relief of Emily J. Fardy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HOAR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1122) for the relief of M. H. Collins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CULLOM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1123) to restore Louis J. Sacriste to the rank of second lieutenant in the Army, and place him on the retired-list; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DOLPH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1124) to provide for ascertaining losses sustained by citizens of the United States in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho Territories and Northern California by reason of Indian depredations in 1855, 1856, 1872, 1873, and 1878; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SEWELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1125) to correct the record and fix the rank and pay of George W. Gile, a lieutenant-colonel in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILSON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1126) for the relief of William H. Manning; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1127) to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire to say in connection with the bill that it is, as I understand, the work of the cattle-breeders' convention in connection with the chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the House, or at least that the bill contains the views of the committee of the Cattle-Breeders' Association and some portions of a bill on this subject which has been introduced into the present and previous Congresses by the present chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1128) for the relief of Theodore F. Hartridge and William G. Christopher, sureties on the official bond of Felix G. Livingston, late collector of customs at Fernandina, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1129) to so amend the internal-revenue laws of the United States as to authorize the removal of distilled spirits from distillery to special bonded warehouses under certain circumstances, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1130) for the relief of the Madison Female Institute, located at Richmond, Ky.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1131) for the relief of Julia A. Read; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1132) for the relief of Anthony L. Woodson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1133) for the relief of Thomas J. Whitman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1134) for the relief of Herman D. Stratton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1135) for the relief of Henry H. Sibley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1136) for the relief of Emery S. Wardwell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1137) granting a pension to Susan J. McKenney; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1138) to authorize the Government of the United States to receive certain lands and property in the city of Erie, Pa., and to establish a home for indigent soldiers and sailors; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. In the last Congress and in the Congress preceding that one, at the request of the National Temperance Union, preferred through its secretary, I introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. At the request of the same association, preferred in the same way as heretofore, I now ask leave to introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution for the purpose which I have named.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 41) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in relation to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. JACKSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of W. C. Marsh be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, there having been no adverse report on the claim.

MEAT EXPORTATIONS.

Mr. BECK. I ask leave to submit an amendment to the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on the 9th of January, and which was up for discussion yesterday, so that it may be printed.

The proposed amendment was read, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

And the committee is further instructed to report what discriminations are made against exports from the United States by the tariff laws of the principal countries of Europe and America, especially France, Germany, Mexico, and Brazil, by reason of commercial or other special treaties or agreements with more favored nations, and to report the causes which led to such discriminations, the efforts, if any, that have been made to remove them, and what legislation, if any, is necessary to place the United States on an equal footing with "the most favored nations." This investigation is not, however, to delay the action of the committee on the first branch of this resolution.

LONGEVITY NAVAL PROVISIONS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to transmit to the Senate the opinion of the Attorney-General of June 22, 1883, on the so-called longevity clauses of the naval appropriation acts of August 5, 1882, and March 3, 1883.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further resolutions the morning hour is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar of Resolutions offered on a previous day.

Mr. FRYE. Is not the unfinished business in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has come for the unfinished business, being the report of the Committee on Rules. The pending question will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Page 45, Joint Rule III.

III.—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

All bills, joint resolutions, or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill or joint resolution has commenced.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule IV was read, as follows:

IV.—GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. No amendment shall be in order to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be to carry out the provisions of existing law, or treaty stipulation, or in pursuance of a resolution of the house having the bill under consideration, unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee.

2. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be decided without debate.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule V was read, as follows:

V.—ENGROSSED BILLS.

Bills, joint and concurrent resolutions which have passed either House, and amendments thereto which shall have passed the other House, shall be engrossed on paper, and attested by the signature of the Secretary of the Senate or Clerk of the House of Representatives respectively, as the case may be.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule VI was read, as follows:

VI.—ENROLLED BILLS.

1. After a bill or joint resolution shall have passed both Houses, it shall be duly enrolled on parchment by the Secretary or Clerk of the House in which said bill or joint resolution originated; shall be examined by a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of said House, who shall carefully examine and compare the enrolled with the engrossed bill as passed by both Houses, and, correcting all errors—if any be found—report the said bill or joint resolution forthwith for signature as hereinafter provided.

2. After examination of any bill or joint resolution by a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of either House, it shall be reported, first to the House of Representatives, where it shall be signed by the Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, and be communicated forthwith to the Senate for the signature of its President or President pro tempore, as the case may be in either House.

3. After a bill or joint resolution shall have been thus signed in each House, it shall be presented to the President of the United States by a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House in which it originated, which fact shall be indorsed on the back of said bill or joint resolution, and be duly attested by the Secretary or Clerk, as the case may be, of the House in which it did originate.

4. The member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills presenting to the President an enrolled bill or joint resolution shall certify to the Secretary or Clerk of the House in which the same originated the date of such presentation, which shall be entered on the Journal of said House.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule VII was read, as follows:

VII.—RESOLUTIONS.

All resolutions which are to be presented to the President of the United States or head of a Department shall be duly engrossed, attested by the Secretary or Clerk of the House adopting the same, and by him be presented to the President or head of a Department, as the case may be.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule VIII was read, as follows:

VIII.—BILLS, JOINT AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS.

1. Each House shall transmit to the other all papers on which any bill, joint or concurrent resolution shall be founded, and when a bill, joint or concurrent resolution which has passed one House shall be rejected in the other, it shall not be introduced or submitted again during the same session without a notice of ten days and leave of two-thirds of the House in which it shall be renewed.

2. When a bill, joint or concurrent resolution, which shall have passed one House, is rejected by the other, notice thereof shall be given to the House passing the same.

3. After each House shall have adhered to their disagreement, a bill, joint or concurrent resolution shall be lost.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule IX was read, as follows:

IX.—CONFERENCES.

1. When a bill, joint or concurrent resolution has passed one House and been amended in the other, it shall be in order for the amending House to at once insist on its amendment or amendments and ask a conference thereon with the other House, or in case it does not so insist, and the originating House disagrees to said amendment or amendments, it shall be in order at the time of such disagreement to move a conference thereon with the other House. If a conference be ordered, the presiding officer shall appoint three members as managers at the said conference on the part of the dissenting House, which action shall be promptly communicated to the other House. If that House insist on its amendment or amendments and agree to the proposed conference, the presiding officer thereof shall thereupon appoint three Senators or Representatives, as the case may be, to represent said House at said conference, which action shall be promptly communicated to the other House.

2. All committees of conference shall meet at the call of their chairman, and shall state, verbally or in writing, as they may choose, the reasons for the action of their respective Houses touching the amendment or amendments in dispute between the two Houses. It shall not be in order for a conference committee to consider or include in their report matter or subjects not in dispute between their respective Houses, nor shall the committee change the text of a bill, joint or concurrent resolution to which both Houses have agreed, unless it becomes necessary to change the text in order to perfect the bill after amendment.

3. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, while either House is dividing, or pending a motion to adjourn, and a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the two Houses what effect the report will have upon the subjects or propositions to which they relate shall accompany every conference report.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule X was read, as follows:

X.—CALENDARS.

During the last ten days of a session, when either House has proceeded to the consideration of business on a Calendar, bills, joint and concurrent resolutions of the other House shall be given precedence, and shall be taken up and disposed of in regular order, unless otherwise ordered.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule XI was read, as follows:

XI.—JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

There shall be a joint committee on the Library of Congress, to consist of three members on the part of each House, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation or matters touching said Library and all matters relating to statuary or pictures or works of art which may come before either House. It shall also superintend and direct the expenditure of all moneys appropriated therefor, and shall perform such other duties as are or may be directed by law or order of the two Houses, and during the period between the expiration of a Congress and the commencement of the next all duties devolving, by law or otherwise, on the Joint Committee on the Library shall be performed by the members of said committee on the part of the Senate of the preceding Congress.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule XII was read, as follows:

XII.—JOINT ADDRESS TO THE PRESIDENT.

When the two Houses shall judge it proper to make a joint address to the President, it shall be presented to him at such place and time as he may designate by the President or President pro tempore of the Senate in the presence of the Speaker or Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives and both Houses.

The rule was agreed to.

Joint Rule XIII was read, as follows:

XIII.—SALE OF LIQUORS FORBIDDEN.

No spirituous or malt liquors shall be offered for sale, exhibited, or kept within the Capitol, or in any room or building connected therewith, or on the public grounds adjacent thereto; and it shall be the duty of the Sergeants-at-Arms of the two Houses, under the supervision of the presiding officers thereof respectively, to strictly enforce the foregoing provisions, and any officer or employé of either House who shall in any manner violate or connive at the violation of this rule shall be dismissed from office.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to offer an amendment. I move to strike out the words "or malt" in that rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD].

Mr. BAYARD. I have no objection whatever to a rule that shall exclude from sale in and around the Capitol building where Congress has control the sale of spirituous liquors. I am entirely in favor of it, and I hope it will be adopted; but the case is different as to the other, the less dangerous and more wholesome malt liquors which are used and used here daily and have been used in the Capitol to the knowledge of every man in it ever since I have been a member of the Senate—I can speak now for fifteen years—without abuse and without danger; and yet I believe that this is the same rule in words that existed before. I am not aware of any change in it.

I am not one of those who believe that a law or a rule which stands upon the statute-book ought to be disregarded. If it is there, it should be obeyed; laws that are not obeyed are simply brought into contempt. I think it is entirely within the control of the presiding officers of the respective bodies to regulate the details of this sumptuary question conducted as a matter of trade. I think it is better far that the actual facts should appear in our rules, and that nothing like concealment should be made upon it. All measures for the invasion of personal liberty are unwise in my judgment, and I do not think they consort very well with the self-governing dignity of a body like this. But believing that the rule will be rather aided by striking out these words, and that the dangers to arise from the use of spirituous liquors will be entirely covered by the rule as it will be left with my amendment, I ask for the yeas and nays upon its adoption.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine why he excludes lager beer and permits wine to be kept and sold and used in the Capitol.

Mr. FRYE. In the State of Maine, under our Maine liquor law, wine would be regarded as spirituous liquor, and it has been so held by the courts over and over again. Even cider that had 3 per cent. of alcohol was held to be spirituous liquor. Besides, this is the old rule of the joint rules exactly, with the exception that the word "strictly" is inserted here, requiring the Sergeant-at-Arms to strictly enforce this rule, and that is done because the rule has not been enforced.

Why, Mr. President, I have seen a restaurant of one of these Houses become an open, notorious, low, miserable groggery. I have seen a man with his pantaloons inside his boots, with his coarse blouse on, standing up at the bar of a restaurant of one of the Houses of Congress and drinking miserable whisky out of a cup.

Mr. VANCE. A tin cup?

Mr. FRYE. Out of a crockery cup; and I have seen whisky ordered again and again. They called it "tea." It was brought on and placed on the table in a cup put into a saucer and called "tea," and anybody, outside or inside, member of Congress or clerk, or a man from the town, could step in and step up to that bar and order his "tea," and drink it out of a cup. Now, to me, whether there is anything wrong about it or not, there is something utterly disgusting about it, something entirely wanting in character and dignity about any such performance.

I did not think about malt liquors or wines when this rule was considered. The only change made was to put in the word "strictly," so that the Sergeant-at-Arms should not have any option about it, but when he knew these restaurants were selling liquor he should stop it forthwith, and if he does his duty, if this becomes a rule by being accepted by the House of Representatives, it will be done.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to question the correctness of the Senator from Maine in regard to the interpretation of this word by the courts of his own State if he feels sure; but I think the law in his State has the word "intoxicating," and it is under that that wine is excluded—not "spirituous."

Mr. FRYE. I beg the Senator's pardon; the word is "intoxicating" in our statute.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly. Both wine and malt liquor contain, of course, some alcohol, and in a statute using the term "spirituous liquors" only malt liquors and wines might be held to be included; but where you say "spirituous and malt," showing that you are not giving it a comprehensive but a limited sense, it seems to me very clearly as a lawyer that that would exclude wine. I would suggest to the Senator, if he wishes to accomplish his purpose, to use the word "intoxicating."

Mr. BAYARD. There must certainly have been some misapprehension in the mind of the Senator from Maine as to the nature of my amendment. There was no suggestion of mine, and there will be none, against the strictest enforcement of the rule against the sale of spirituous liquors in the Capitol. Therefore what induced him to draw the shocking picture of a man disgracing himself, of the Capitol itself being disgraced by the spectacle which he had witnessed, I do not know.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will pardon me a moment. My remarks were not called forth by anything the Senator said or any proposition he made; but the Senator from Massachusetts inquired about this, and I was simply stating that the only amendment made was the insertion of the word "strictly," and I was illustrating the necessity of that amendment by what I had seen. I had no reference to the Senator's remarks at all.

Mr. BAYARD. I am very glad of that, for a law that is not strictly enforced is not enforced, and if it is not enforced it ought not to be on the statute-book. The amendment that I moved is strictly, as I believe, in the line of temperance and good health. That was my own judgment, and quite without regard to my personal share or my personal tastes in the matter. I am strongly in favor of the exclusion of the sale of spirituous liquors from the Capitol. I am not in favor of the exclusion of malt liquors, and therefore I moved my amendment, and on that the Senate can give its vote.

Mr. FRYE. On the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts I am entirely willing to make this rule read "no intoxicating liquor shall be offered for sale," using the language of the Maine liquor law.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will offer that as an amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I withdraw mine and accept that.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out the words "spirituous or malt" and insert "intoxicating;" so as to read:

No intoxicating liquors shall be offered for sale, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this modification? The Chair hears none. The question is on the adoption of the rule as modified.

The rule as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the committee is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. I ask to precede the joint rules by an enacting clause, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the following be the joint rules of the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. Are there further amendments as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SEWELL. I rise to ask a question for information. The last joint rule as now amended allows malt liquors to the exclusion of wine. Is that the intention, obliging everybody to drink beer that wants to drink at all?

Mr. FRYE. Under the construction of our courts of the Maine liquor law, using the same language, it would not allow anything of the kind to be sold.

Mr. SEWELL. Is that the construction the Senator from Maine places on it?

Mr. FRYE. It would be the construction I should place on it myself.

Mr. SEWELL. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. FRYE. The Sergeant-at-Arms may be broader than I am in his views.

The joint rules were reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments, shall the report of the committee on the joint rules as amended be agreed to?

The joint rules as amended were agreed to.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. HOAR. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 25) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Before the reading of the bill at length, which would ordinarily, I suppose, be the proper thing to do next, I wish to say that this bill has the unanimous support of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as it had in the last Congress; and it passed the Senate unanimously winter before last. Under those circumstances I do not propose to debate it, or even to explain it, unless something shall be rendered necessary by some inquiry or discussion initiated by some other Senator. Under those circumstances, perhaps the Senator from California will consider it well enough to let the bill be read and passed before making his motion to go into executive session. If he does, however, prefer to utilize all the time, I shall not interfere with his motion now.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think the bill will lead to discussion; I do not think we can pass it without discussion.

Mr. HOAR. It has passed unanimously heretofore. That is the reason of my belief that it will pass without discussion now.

Mr. MILLER, of California. How long will it take?

Mr. HOAR. It will take five or ten minutes to read it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will consent to have it read, but if it leads to debate——

Mr. HOAR. If there be any consumption of time I shall yield to the Senator's motion at once.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I want the bill to go down to the House as soon as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I am very desirous to expedite the passage of this bill, and yet hesitate upon the rapid reading at the desk, it not having been discussed at all, to let it go without asking the Senator who has it in charge, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, whether this is the precise bill that we passed at the last Congress.

Mr. HOAR. It is verbatim et literatim, unless there has been some accidental change in copying. I believe it to be the same bill without any change whatever.

Mr. BAYARD. Upon that statement, as I voted for that bill before, I am prepared again to record my vote for this.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 844) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 33 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 16, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the attention of members to that part of the Journal about to be read. The vote taken yesterday afternoon on the motion to adjourn was correctly taken, and the result was correctly announced—yeas 80, nays 190—but in making up the record the Chair is advised some confusion occurred in relation to those voting on the second call of the roll, and the Journal as it now stands is evidently incorrect. The Chair will therefore ask the Clerk to read, as part of the Journal, the names of gentlemen voting, in order that the necessary corrections may be made after the Journal has been read.

The reading of the Journal was concluded.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I voted on the second roll-call and did not hear my name.

The SPEAKER. How did the gentleman vote?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. In the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I am recorded as having voted in the affirmative on the question of adjournment. I was paired with Mr. VALENTINE and did not vote at all.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. WEMPLE. I am recorded as not voting. I voted "no" on the question of adjournment.

Mr. GLASCOCK. I am not recorded as voting. I voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The corrections will be made.

Mr. RYAN. I am not recorded as voting. I voted "ay."

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The vote as corrected is as follows:

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 72, nays 185, not voting 63; as follows:

QUARANTINE STATIONS FOR NEAT CATTLE.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back the following resolution, with the recommendation that it do pass:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish for the information of this House a statement showing where and at what places quarantine stations for neat cattle imported have been established, the amount of money expended at each station, what accommodations for the shelter and proper care of said cattle have been provided, the name of the commissioner at each station, and what rules and regulations have been adopted and are now in force in reference to the control and management of imported neat cattle on their arrival at any port of entry of the United States.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SWINE PRODUCTS.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, also, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back the following preamble and resolution, with the recommendation that it do pass:

Whereas Germany and certain other foreign governments have interdicted the importation of the swine products of this country for the pretended reason that said products are not proper and wholesome for food; and

Whereas an invitation on the part of this Government to said foreign governments to send agents here to test said products has been declined, thus indicating that the pretended reasons given for such interdiction are not the real reasons; and

Whereas it is the duty of this Government to act promptly and with energy to resent the injustice done by said charges and to protect these great products from said imputation: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested to transmit to this House, if in his opinion it be not incompatible with the public interests, copies of any and all correspondence had by the State Department with all foreign governments on this subject, together with any and all information that he may have bearing upon this question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. A resolution like that was adopted last Monday week, and I learn the Secretary of State will send a communication to the House on the subject to-day. What is the necessity then for the adoption of another resolution?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The resolution adopted heretofore was not so comprehensive as the one now before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If you will refer to the resolution adopted on my motion you will find it to be more comprehensive.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It was limited, if the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me, to the governments of Germany and France; whereas this resolution takes in all countries and seeks to obtain full information upon the subject.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. So does the resolution which I offered, and in compliance with that resolution I am informed that the Secretary of State will to-day send in a response covering the whole ground.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The RECORD will show that only two governments were mentioned in that resolution, and the information called for referred expressly to them.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me state that the Committee on Commerce, acting through a subcommittee, on last Saturday waited on the President and learned through him, or the Secretary of State, that the papers in response to the resolution and covering the subject-matter referred to in the present resolution will be sent in to-day. I do not know the difference between the two resolutions, but my impression is that the information to be received will cover the entire ground.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is entirely unnecessary, as this is a privileged matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I say that I object to the consideration of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman then raises the question of consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will move that it be referred——

The SPEAKER. It has already been referred.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Under the rule, where objection is made to its introduction it must go to a committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that this is a privileged report from the committee, and comes in under the rule which requires the committee to report back such matters within one week. Does the gentleman make any motion in reference to it?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No; I am indifferent to the matter, as the other resolution covers the whole ground.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. The Committee on Agriculture, to which the resolution was referred by order of the House, in its consideration was aware of the fact that this question had been before the House and had been referred to another committee, but they considered the resolution which has just been read from the Clerk's desk as more comprehensive in its character than the former resolution adopted by the House calling upon the President instead of the head of one of the Departments alone to furnish all the correspondence with any and all governments and all papers on file from any foreign government upon this question. They therefore adopted the more comprehensive resolution, and now submit it to the House for its adoption.

I demand the previous question.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let it be read again.

Mr. REAGAN. Before that is done, if the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask whether there is any reason to believe that there has been any correspondence with any government except France and Germany on this question or with any other Department of this Government.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. We are advised that there is. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that when the report comes here, if it is deemed a full and complete report, there will be no necessity to reply further to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. Upon this resolution the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] demands the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 147, noes 10.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Before the final vote is taken, on consultation and at the suggestion of one or two members, I ask unanimous consent and leave of the mover of the resolution to change a word in the resolution. Where the word "pretended" occurs in the resolution to change it to "alleged."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I wish to say in reference to this resolution——

The SPEAKER. This is not debatable, the previous question having been ordered by the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF A PETITION.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the RECORD corrected. My remarks were supplemented yesterday by a petition presented, to which were subscribed some fifty names, giving force and character to the petition, which it could not have without the names attached to it. I desire that the petition be reprinted and the names be added. There are only about fifty of them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that the RECORD is correct, as the petition to which the gentleman refers was simply read as a part of his remarks, and of course unless the names were also read they would not go into the RECORD.

Mr. WELLER. I supposed they were to be read at the time.

The SPEAKER. Unless they were actually read, however, they would not go into the RECORD.

Mr. WELLER. Then I ask unanimous consent that they be added to the petition, and the petition be reprinted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. COSGROVE and others objected.

GEORGE H. MITCHELL, M. D.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3532) for the relief of George H. Mitchell, M. D.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. GILE.

Mr. KELLEY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3533) to correct the record and fix the rank and pay of George W. Gile, a lieutenant-colonel in the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. YOUNG, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department be allowed a clerk, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

EARNINGS OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. I am instructed to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House of Representatives a statement from the records of his Department showing the gross earnings per annum of each United States marshal, attorney, and clerk, the expense of his office, and the net earnings which have been paid to him each year from the beginning of the fiscal year 1873 to the close of the fiscal year 1883.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MANUFACTURE OF FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3534) to amend sections 3336 and 3349 of the Revised Statutes in relation to the manufacture of fermented liquors; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. WASHBURN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver in bound form to the Secretary of the Interior the volumes of the Congressional Globe purchased from Messrs. Rives.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary shall, from the volumes thus delivered to him, supply to the library of each of the Executive Departments, to the State library of each State, to the Territorial library of each Territory, and to the library of each depository of public documents in the several States designated or to be designated, in accordance with provisions of law, such volumes as are required to complete the sets of Congressional Globes in said libraries.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute the volumes of the Globe remaining after the distribution hereinbefore directed has been made to such libraries in the several States as in his discretion he may select to receive them.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress the names and locations of the libraries supplied with documents under the provisions of this resolution and the number of volumes supplied to each.

Be it further resolved, That hereafter the Public Printer shall deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a sufficient number of bound copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to enable that officer to supply one copy to each library named in section 2 of this resolution; but this shall not authorize the reprinting of any back numbers of the Globe or RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to its present consideration. Let it go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to call his attention to the fact that precisely this same resolution passed the last House and was amended at his own suggestion and the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. It is precisely the resolution that was passed during the last session of the last Congress, providing for the distribution of some old Globes that were purchased of Messrs. Rives & Co., and for which there is no earthly use. They simply lumber up the Printing Office. The resolution requires no new printing and no expenditure of any character.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes! one clause of the resolution provides, as I understand it, for further printing of the RECORD.

Mr. WASHBURN. It does not so provide. The last section is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] himself, providing expressly against that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report that portion of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it further resolved, That hereafter the Public Printer shall deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a sufficient number of bound copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to enable that officer to supply one copy to each library named in section 2 of this resolution; but this shall not authorize the reprinting of any back numbers of the Globe or RECORD.

Mr. BEACH. I would like to have the second section of the resolution again read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, subject to the right to object.

The second section was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I still reserve the right to object to this resolution until I can make further inquiry. From this hasty reading it is impossible for gentlemen to determine whether or not the resolution involves further printing. Is my friend certain that it does not involve an increased amount of printing?

Mr. WASHBURN. The last section is the amendment which was put on the resolution of the last House by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] himself. I assume that the country was protected to the fullest extent from the fact that the amendment was offered by him. But if there is any doubt in regard to it I have no objection to its being referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I prefer that it shall take that course.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Printing.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. SHELLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to report as early as practicable on the necessity of making immediate appropriations for continuing work on important river and harbor improvements until the appropriation for the next fiscal year becomes available, and to make such recommendations as may be deemed necessary to protect the interests of the Government.

NATIONAL-BANK CURRENCY.

Mr. POTTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3535) to maintain the currency against injurious fluctuations by the issue of 2 per cent. bonds and their deposit as security for bank-note circulation and by remitting taxation upon circulating bank notes when secured by deposits of 2 per cent. bonds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE-ROOMS.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire and report to the House at the earliest practicable day whether or not there are sufficient accommodations at the Capitol for the committees of the House; and, if not, where and upon what terms the necessary additional accommodations can be procured.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, considered, and adopted.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN E. WHEELOCK.

Mr. LAMB, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to communicate to this House all the correspondence concerning the alleged arrest, imprisonment, and torture of John E. Wheelock, a citizen of the United States, now resident in the city of Brooklyn, by the Government of Venezuela, in the year 1879, and what steps have been taken to have the said Wheelock's claim acknowledged and paid by the said Government of Venezuela.

The resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. LAMB moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to furnish for the information of the House all information in the possession of that Department as to whether Spain has heretofore, and to what extent if at all, paid the interest stipulated and the 1 per cent. annually on the nominal value of the rent provided for in its treaty with the United States promulgated by the President November 1, 1834, and the instructions issued in conformity therewith.

The resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRAIRIE COUNTY, ARKANSAS.

Mr. DUNN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3536) for the relief of Prairie County, Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. MORSE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department be allowed to employ a clerk during the sessions of the Forty-eighth Congress, to be paid at the rate of $6 per day out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

MARSHALS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish this House with a complete list of the marshals and deputy marshals appointed and employed in the State of West Virginia for the fiscal years of 1882 and 1883, together with information in what service each was so employed, and how much was paid from the Treasury to, or received in fees by, each of such persons; also a detailed statement of all moneys paid to employés and witnesses in behalf of the United States in criminal prosecutions in the Federal courts of that State for said years.

JOHN WILEY.

Mr. SMITH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3537) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Wiley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ERIE CANAL.

Mr. WEMPLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3538) for the permanent improvement of the Erie Canal and maintaining the same free to the commerce of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

REBATE OF TOBACCO TAX.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and it is hereby, authorized to report at any time a bill appropriating such sum or sums of money as may be necessary to pay claimants for rebate of tax on tobacco.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, considered, and adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABSENTEE FOREIGN MINISTERS, ETC.

Mr. DIBRELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House how many and who of the foreign ministers, consuls, or agents of the United States to any foreign country have been absent from their post of duty since the 1st day of January, 1882, the time absent, and the reasons therefor, and whether their salary has been paid them during such absence, and the amount so paid in each case.

ADMISSION TO MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. SLOCUM. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for present consideration the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Antonio Barrios, of Guatemala, and José Victor Zavala, of Nicaragua.

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Antonio Barrios, of Guatemala, and José Victor Zavala, of Nicaragua, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby: And provided further, That in the cases of said Barrios and Zavala the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as this is an unusual proposition, I trust the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] will explain his purpose in offering it.

Mr. SLOCUM. One of the young men whom it is proposed by this joint resolution to admit to the Military Academy is the son of the President of Nicarauga; the other is the son of an ex-President of Guatemala. In the opinion of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of State it is advisable to extend this courtesy to those two governments. The measure will involve no expense to the United States. As to the two sections of the law which it is proposed to suspend, one requires every person admitted to the Military Academy to swear allegiance to the United States; the other requires him to bind himself to serve in the Army. In view of our relations to these South American Republics I hope the resolution will pass without objection, as it involves no expenditure on the part of our Government and is simply a graceful act of international courtesy.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether this resolution has been considered by any committee.

Mr. SLOCUM. It is presented at the request of the Secretary of War; it was prepared by him.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. Res. 113) was introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SLOCUM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REV. WORCESTER WILLEY.

Mr. RUSSELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3539) for the relief of Rev. Worcester Willey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PATENTS.

Mr. VANCE. By direction of the Committee on Patents, I ask unanimous consent to have taken up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1134) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to patents. I think it will not consume any great length of time.

The SPEAKER. What is the position of the bill?

Mr. VANCE. It is on the House Calendar—number 3, I believe, on that Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. SNYDER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3540) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. DORSHEIMER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3541) for the maintenance and support of the Marine-Hospital Service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF INSPECTION FEES.

Mr. DORSHEIMER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3542) on reduction of inspection fees; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FREE RAW MATERIALS.

Mr. DORSHEIMER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3543) to exempt certain raw materials from payment of duty when imported; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

RECORDING OF VOTES.

Mr. STONE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Rules be directed to inquire and report on the expediency of introducing a machine into the House, patented by Mr. Enos, for the purpose of facilitating the counting and recording of votes.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, FORT WORTH, TEX.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 844) to increase the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust before that is done some explanation will be made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the explanation be made, subject to objection.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. By direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency of this House I have reported a bill exactly similar to this Senate bill. I therefore move that the Senate bill be put on its passage instead of going to the Committee on Banking and Currency, because that committee, as I have already stated, has reported a proposition exactly similar to the one passed by the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will state the necessity for the passage of such a bill.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. The business of the place has increased very much, and the Comptroller of the Currency has fixed the amount of its circulation at $100,000, but the Attorney-General of the United States has delivered an opinion that the circulation can not be increased except by legislation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the bill contain any other legislation?

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. Nothing else.

Mr. HOLMAN. We did not hear the explanation made by the gentleman from Texas, and I hope he will state to the House what necessity there is for the passage of any such proposition.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. I have already stated the necessity for this action.

Mr. HOLMAN. We did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. The capital of this bank has been fixed by the Comptroller of the Currency at $100,000. Since the Revised Statutes authorized the Comptroller of the Currency to fix the amount of the capital of national banks the Attorney-General has given an opinion in which he holds that neither the Comptroller nor the bank can increase the capital after it has been once fixed. The business of the town has increased so rapidly that it is necessary to enlarge the capital of this bank, and it can not be done without this legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking up the bill from the Speaker's table for present consideration?

There was no objection; and the bill was taken up, and read a first and second time.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the First National Bank of Fort Worth, located in the city of Fort Worth, in the State of Texas, is hereby authorized to increase its capital stock, in accordance with existing laws, to any sum not exceeding $500,000, notwithstanding the limit heretofore fixed in its original articles of association and determined by the Comptroller of the Currency; and the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized to fix the limit of increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex., at the amount of $500,000.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SHIP-CANAL AROUND NIAGARA FALLS.

Mr. NUTTING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3544) authorizing the construction of a ship-canal around Niagara Falls, in the State of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF CUSTOMS AND INTERNAL-REVENUE DISTRICTS.

Mr. THROCKMORTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of abolishing or consolidating any of the customs and internal-revenue districts of the United States, and report by bill or otherwise.

ARTICLES SUBJECT TO TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. BURNES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be, and is hereby, requested to report to the House a schedule containing, as near as may be practicable, all the items, articles, and commodities now subject to tariff duties, which, in its judgment, are necessities or common comforts in the daily life and labor of the people of this country, to the end that all such items, articles, and commodities may be freed from all taxation or bounty not absolutely required to preserve the public credit of the United States.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEELE. I now demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports.

SPEEDY DELIVERY OF LETTERS.

Mr. COSGROVE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1071) for the more speedy delivery of letters at free-delivery offices and special stamps to insure said delivery; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the following petitions; which were laid on the table, and, the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

The petition of R. W. Winbourn;

The petition of Thomas B. Smith, administrator of the estate of Thomas S. Hardaway;

The petition of George M. Robinson;

The petition of Mary C. Shields;

The petition of Sarah E. Norton; and

The petition of Mrs. Nora Walsh.

BILLS ADVERSELY REPORTED.

Mr. ROWELL also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with adverse recommendation bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. 859) for the relief of Norah Walsh; and

The bill (H. R. 2227) for the relief of Ralph P. Miller.

The call of committees for reports was resumed and concluded.

CLERKSHIP COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to present from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its present consideration the resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the following resolution, introduced by Mr. WILLIS:

"Resolved, That the clerkship of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be, and the same is hereby, declared an annual clerkship, with compensation fixed at $2,000 per annum, and the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay the clerk of said committee out of the contingent fund for the present session compensation at the above rate"— respectfully report that they are of the opinion that this committee should have an annual clerk, but such action can not be had by resolution of the House. We therefore recommend the reference of said resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

We further recommend the adoption of the following as a substitute:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be allowed a clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until June 30, 1884, with compensation at $2,000 per annum."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I think it is indispensable to an intelligent discharge of the duties we are called upon here to perform to have certain information upon this subject which has been called for. I introduced a resolution the other day to find out what is the actual number of the employés of this House. There is not a member, I presume, who knows what the present number is. I find in the appropriation bill of last year that there were two hundred and five on the rolls and fifty-one clerks, and that the employés of the House cost over $360,000 per annum.

Now, I think we should emphasize the fact that we propose to act with intelligence and know what we have. We can not tell what officers we now have; and I therefore move to recommit that report to the committee with instructions to report the present number of employés of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to recommit the report to the Committee on Accounts with instructions to report to the House the number of employés of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not press such a motion as that upon this report. It is a well-known fact that this committee is a new committee to the House. While I may cordially co-operate with him in the object of his resolution, I submit that this is not the proper time to press that question. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have been compelled to meet without any clerk; all of the members have been acting as clerk; business is before the committee every day that requires the active participation of the members and emphasizes the necessity of a clerk, and I hope the motion will not be pressed on this report. There will be other reports upon which he can offer his amendment, and I hope he will not press his motion here.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to state to the House, if we are required to wait until the work contemplated by the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina has been completed, that it will be at least a month, perhaps two months, until the assignment of temporary clerks can be made to committees of the House. This Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as the House well knows, is a new committee, authorized by a partial revision of the rules. There is a necessity that this committee should have a clerk. I apprehend no gentleman will question that, and I hope the resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts will prevail.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to antagonize the resolution reported from the Committee on Accounts, but in considering the question of clerkships for the various committees of the House, which was discussed at some length during the last Congress, we must bear in mind one thing, that the Committee on Commerce, as heretofore organized, was allowed the privilege of naming two annual clerks for service on that committee. It is now well known that for certain reasons which have been made plain the old Committee on Commerce has been divided into two or more committees, and we hear it asserted, or my friend from Michigan asserts, that it leaves nothing much for the committee to do since this division. I do not quite agree with him in that conclusion; but even if that were true, we can allow the old Committee on Commerce to retain one of its annual clerks for its present service, and allow the other, who has heretofore been appointed, to go with the subcommittee or with the committee which was taken out from the Committee on Commerce, the new Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Now, since two annual committee clerks have been heretofore appointed for the Committee on Commerce, I would like the gentlemen interested in that subject to explain why these two clerks can not do the business of the two committees.

Mr. HORR. Perhaps the chairman of the Committee on Commerce would consent that both its clerks should go to this other committee. It seems to me that would be quite appropriate, and it would settle the whole difficulty.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I have no doubt this clerk may be needed. The objection that I have to this report is that it is partial. I think we ought to have all the information before us, so that we may act intelligently. The information I have asked for is as to the number of employés and their compensation, and that information I think is indispensable in the consideration of resolutions of this character. In the hope, however, that the Committee on Accounts will report in regard to that at an early day I will withdraw my objection for the present, but may renew it if similar reports are made before that information is furnished to the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman to withhold for a moment his demand for the previous question that I may make an inquiry. I wish to inquire of the gentlemen in favor of this proposition whether or not it is necessary that this committee shall have an annual clerk? I understand the resolution provides for that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Not at all.

Mr. COBB. Then I have no objection to the resolution.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution reported back will be referred, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Accounts, to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CLERKS FOR COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to make the report which I send to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the following resolution, namely:

"That there shall be appointed as clerks of Committee on Invalid Pensions two additional clerks; that there shall be paid to each of said additional clerks the same rate of compensation, out of the contingent fund of the House, as was paid to each additional clerk to said committee in the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses"— having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The number of bills referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions largely exceeds the number referred to any other committee. In the Forty-seventh Congress more than one-third of all the bills introduced were referred to this committee. The docketing, arrangement, filing, and distribution of so large a number of bills involve a great deal of clerical labor, and this must be done before the work of that committee can be systematically conducted; so then there appears to be a necessity for speedy action upon this resolution. The clerical labor necessary to the transaction of the business of the committee increases after this preparatory work is done, and it is a well-known and indisputable fact that the Committee on Invalid Pensions is, above all other committees of the House, the one involving the most labor.

The interests of those who are demanding remedies of the Government on account of sacrifices of its interests are placed in the charge of this committee, and it is the belief of the Committee on Accounts that the House will wish to do whatever is necessary to make the work of the Committee on Invalid Pensions effective. Influenced by these considerations, and the further fact that in the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses the Committee on Invalid Pensions had three additional clerks, and this resolution asks for two only, who are to be paid at the same rate and in the same manner, therefore the Committee on Accounts recommends the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is the resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. And is it open to debate?

The SPEAKER. It is, unless the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. May I be permitted to say a single word, having had some experience on this subject?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. My recollection is that during the last Congress the Committee on Invalid Pensions wrote and presented to the House about four hundred and thirty reports. I think I am safe in saying that that is more than were reported in the aggregate by any other ten committees of the House. While these reports are not written altogether by the clerks of the committee, they must contribute very largely to that work. The substance of a report may be penciled out by the gentleman who may be the subcommittee on a particular bill, but the report is put in shape at last by a clerk.

In addition to the preparation of reports all the papers in the cases pending before the committee are brought from the Pension Bureau for consideration; and often, I may say in almost every case, this testimony, which is frequently voluminous, must be abstracted for the consideration of the subcommittee by the Clerk.

While we had three per-diem clerks in addition to the clerks of the committee during the first session of the last Congress we found ample employment for all. I think during the second session of a Congress the committee might get along probably with the clerk and one per-diem clerk. But there certainly is no extravagance in asking two for the whole term. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to the adoption of this resolution. I believe the clerks are necessary. All that is required is a little expenditure of $3,000 or $4,000, and in a matter of this kind certainly, under the circumstances, there ought to be no hesitation about it.

Mr. MATSON. I apprehend there will be no opposition to this resolution; I therefore regard it as unnecessary to discuss its merits. But I think it is fair to the House that I should now say that while this resolution calls for but two clerks, the Committee on Invalid Pensions expects to have the aid of one person detailed from the Pension Office for the express purpose of taking care of the valuable papers that are brought to the committee-room to be used in the work of the committee. That person, however, will be paid by the Pension Office, and not by the House.

If that arrangement can be accomplished the number of clerks asked for by the resolution will be found to be ample. As my friend and colleague [Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana] has said, three additional clerks will not be too many; but two will answer, with the assistance which we expect to receive from the Pension Office.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. ERMENTROUT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLARENCE W. DE KNIGHT.

Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following:

Whereas Clarence W. De Knight having been regularly appointed and sworn as a page of the House of Representatives December 3, 1883, and having performed the duties of and served in that capacity from said date to December 10, both days inclusive: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay him out of the contingent fund of the House for the time he served at $2.50 per day.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BREWER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPLOSION AT FRANKFORD ARSENAL.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3545) for the relief of the sufferers by the explosion at the United States arsenal at Frankford, Philadelphia, Pa.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MICHAEL HOAK.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3546) for the relief of the estate of Michael Hoak, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I now insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Mississippi River improvement bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River. By order of the House all general debate upon this bill has been limited to forty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the bill is now open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet. General debate has been limited to forty minutes, with the understanding that thirty minutes shall be allowed to the opponents of the pending bill and ten minutes to those in favor of it. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will it be proper, when the pending bill is being read for amendment, to raise the point of order that it originated in the Senate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not anticipate points of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I give notice that when the proper time comes I desire to raise that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The half-hour allotted to the opponents of the bill may be distributed according to such arrangements as may be made by gentlemen.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER].

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to antagonize any bill before this House which has for its object the improvement of the navigation of any of the great rivers of this country. I do not propose to antagonize any proposition which is intended to lend the helping hand of the Government to those people who suffer from the uncontrollable floods of the great rivers of the West.

But we might as well understand at this time the real question before the House. It was well stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that in this discussion nothing has been said about any proposition to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River, and there is nothing in the House resolution, as it appears on our desks, which has for its object the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River.

Broadly and I believe fairly stated, the proposition contained in the resolution is simply one to appropriate a million dollars from the United States Treasury for the purpose of building up the levees of the Mississippi River. It is nothing more, nothing less. Whatever may be the motive actuating those favoring this appropriation is another thing. Upon reference to the message of the President upon this subject, it will be found that it concludes with the recommendation for "an immediate appropriation of $1,000,000 to continue the work without loss of time, in view of the approach of the flood season, with its attendant dangers." The preamble of the joint resolution reported from the Committee of the House contained these words:

The commission feel that they can not too strongly urge upon Congress the necessities of the case and need of early relief, as the flood season, with all its attendant dangers, is close at hand.

All there is in the joint resolution reported from the committee of the House is the proposition to appropriate $1,000,000 to improve the levees of the Mississippi River and to protect them from the floods.

It has been a struggle to obtain half an hour in this House to discuss a bill which carries with it the appropriation of a million of dollars. A bill of this nature requires and should receive careful consideration, yet we are denied the privilege of an examination of the report of the Mississippi River Commission touching this question.

Who can tell us what that report is? And can any one assure us beyond all peradventure that the millions which have been appropriated for that river, or the millions that are to be hereafter appropriated for it, have not been and will not be controlled by a ring? Can we be assured that this money will be expended honestly? Wherever there is a large amount of money to be expended there are always men, or associations of men, who combine to direct and control the expenditure of that appropriation.

It is an indisputable fact that the Mississippi River Commission believe that the only way to improve the navigation of that river is to raise and protect its levees, and thereby confer inestimable advantages upon the people who own property along the line of the river. If there is any other way to improve the river except by raising its levees, let us find that out. If to improve the navigation of the river we must raise its levees, let us understand the question just as it is and without any hidden inferences. If that is indisputable, then it opens another phase of the question: May we not be able to improve the river by dredging? Has that question been well settled? If so, let us understand it, and be able to act intelligently. For one I am not convinced that the river can not be dredged and improved by that method.

When this matter was under consideration on a former occasion our brilliant friend from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD], who is always bright and always earnest, made use of the following words:

I am in favor of voting not only one million dollars to improve the streams of the South, but twenty millions if it be necessary to accomplish the advantage of the people. We have a Treasury here to-day governed by New York influence that holds in its vaults a store of millions of dollars—ay, a hundred millions—of surplus revenue, that is kept there for the sole purpose, in my judgment, of advancing the financial interests of New York and Pennsylvania. I say that this House to-day is in the control of the South and the West, and thank God for it!

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I would like to have a little more time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Yesterday, in the course of some bright remarks which the same gentleman uttered on the same topic we find this emphatic language:

Now, beyond that question, what is our duty? What is the duty of this House? It is to unlock the vaults of the national Treasury.

This certainly is a broad platform to stand upon, but it may be too liberal. It is no doubt true that "Westward the course of empire takes its way," and the gentleman may glory in a combination between the West and South to control the country. But he should not forget the enterprise which has gone there from the North and the East, which has helped to develop the vast resources. Might does not always make right. Withdraw the "New York influence" from some of your Southern and Western enterprises, and see how soon they will fall to the ground. Withdraw New York capital, which you are constantly asking in the West and South, and see how quickly you will regret it.

The Mississippi River is not the only river in the United States—not the only water way. Do not let us forget the great lake system of the North, which has its principal outlet through New York State, and through which nine-tenths of the commerce of the Northwest flows.

The gentleman alludes to "New York influence" as the cause of the immense surplus in the Treasury. I will admit that New York has placed the largest part of that surplus in the Treasury, and I am glad she is able to do it. She has also built the greatest canal on the continent through which the surplus growth of the West finds outlet, and she has maintained that great water way without aid from the Government. More than that, she has made it free, and the immense products of the fertile West go through her valleys untrammeled to the sea.

I am not so liberal as my friend from Colorado, especially when we can not see the end from the beginning. When we have poured $50,000,000 into the Mississippi River we have no assurance that it will be in any better condition for navigation than it is to-day.

But our liberal friend who is willing to vote for thirty millions for the Mississippi, who wants the Treasury vaults unlocked and the coveted surplus distributed, comes from a State which is the subject of a little clipping I have seen. It is said that during the sitting of the Legislature of that (or some other) State, after a large number of appropriations had been made, a member arose and said: "Mr. Speaker, how much money is there left in the treasury?" The speaker made a computation and answered, "About $100,000." "Then, Mr. Speaker," said the inquirer, "let's rake her."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been reported to the House from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The ostensible object of the expenditure is the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. Now, I think it is not well either to deceive ourselves or to attempt to deceive the people. If this expenditure were really necessary for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River, I apprehend there would be very little objection made in this House to the passage of the bill. But while the improvement of navigation is the ostensible object, the primary object of the entire work of the river commission is to take care of flood waters and prevent overflow. Were this not the real object I do not believe any board of engineers would recommend the plan of improvement adopted by the commission. I will go further and say that if the sole purpose was to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River I do not believe any engineer of distinction in the world would recommend the plan of the commission.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not say that I should be opposed to a reasonable appropriation, the object of which was to take care of the flood waters of the Mississippi and that by a system of levees, if I were satisfied that Congress had the constitutional power to enter upon such a work. But, sir, I am unwilling to vote an appropriation ostensibly for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Mississippi River when it is well known that from Memphis to New Orleans at any rate the Mississippi is navigable at all times, at all stages of water, and at all seasons of the year. Any vessel that can get up to New Orleans can go to Memphis.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is mistaken. There are three or four reaches of disturbed navigation below Memphis and above New Orleans.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. So far, Mr. Chairman, as this appropriation is intended for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River I say I certainly have no objection to it; but I maintain that the real purpose of the appropriation is to carry on works recommended by the Mississippi River Commission throughout the whole length of the river; and that involves what? Not years, but decades of years of time. Not one million dollars, not ten million dollars, nor one hundred million dollars only, but to carry out the system of jetties at the mouth and a system of levees upon the banks of the river no one can tell what will be required. And when it has all been done I fear the danger from floods will have only been increased.

I for one am opposed to emptying the Treasury of the United States into the Mississippi River to no purpose, or on the mere theory of a commission. We were told yesterday by the gentleman from Arkansas that the question of plan of improvement had been settled; that the method recommended by the Mississippi River Commission was one which could no longer be questioned; that the commission had mastered the laws of hydraulics, the laws governing the floods of the Mississippi River, and could control them. I beg to read a few extracts from a very late report on the improvement of rivers in Europe, where plans very similar to that adopted by this commission have been tried, by Professor Janicke, an engineer of the very highest standing, in a work on the Improvement of Non-Tidal Rivers, translated by Col. W. E. Merrill:

Theory and practice must always be the two indispensable guides for engineers; but in the case now before us, we are unwillingly obliged to confess that no theoretical and practical rules have yet been laid down that lead to fixed conclusions. Notwithstanding the remarkable researches of many learned men, hydraulics, which seeks after the physical laws governing water in motion, and particularly that branch of the science which studies the movement of water upon the irregular beds of rivers, has not yet succeeded in expressing in exact mathematical formulas the phenomena which we must necessarily understand in order to put to practical use the principles of pure science. As to experience, as far as relates to the greater number of works of improvement, it hardly exists at all. I speak now of experience confirmed by results.

This is what the same author says about trying to improve the navigation of a river and at the same time carry off its flood waters:

It is evident that the same methods can not at the same time satisfy such requirements as are in part opposed to each other, for the method which will gather together and carry off any excessive volume of flood water may often affect disastrously the conditions required for navigation, and vice versa.

That is the case with the Mississippi River. To improve navigation is one thing and to take care of its flood waters another, and they require the adoption of very different methods.

He goes on to say:

The history of the regularization of rivers, both in Russia and in Western Europe, hardly shows us anything but failures.

Here is an example which the author gives of an experiment on the Volga:

Before any work was done between Tver and Rybinusk, boats could navigate the Volga with a draught of 13 verchoks (22½ inches); to-day, after works costing millions, their draft of water is 14 verchoks (24¼ inches). And that is the total result thus far obtained! Moreover, it must yet be added that this result is only reached by the help of periodical flushings, obtained by means of the dam on the Upper Volga.

This is the result of the applications of the jetty system to the Volga, and I believe ours with the Mississippi will turn out in much the same way.

Here is what the same high authority—and I believe there is none higher in Europe—says of the attempt to determine in advance the results of any system to regularize, as he calls it, a river:

From what precedes we now see how difficult it generally is to determine in advance the results which may ensue from ordinary works for the regularization of rivers, and we may affirm that in the present state of the science, and of our practically acquired knowledge, no conscientious engineer in devising a system for the regularization of any river whatever will dare hold himself responsible for its success.

And yet we are told that our commission has so thoroughly mastered the whole subject, and know so well the laws governing the flow of the Mississippi, that they can tell beforehand just what the result is going to be.

Mr. DUNN. But this appropriation is not to improve the rivers of Europe or Russia.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No, sir, but in the United States; and I apprehend that the laws which control rivers in Europe apply also to rivers in the United States under similar circumstances.

In a later pamphlet the same author says:

This regularization by contraction—

And that is the method recommended and attempted for the Mississippi River—is seductive at first sight, because it seems exactly to meet the necessities of the case. It is also seductive by its simplicity, but in reality it is a bastard system, which has only one undeniable merit, that of being readily defended.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, we may expend hundreds of millions of dollars on jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi, carrying the river farther and farther out into the Gulf, and in building levees along its banks until we have raised them a hundred feet, and we will only have increased the dangers from overflow. The bed of the river will follow the surface up. The river will raise its own bed if confined between levees until it flows on a ridge made higher and higher as levees are raised, and overflows will become more and more dangerous.

I believe that Jefferson Davis was right when he said the leveeing of the Mississippi River to protect the lands would in the end prove to be a measure for the destruction of the lowlands of the Mississippi. Believing the method itself to be entirely faulty, and believing that this appropriation is to be used mainly for the construction of levees—for carrying out a bad system—I am opposed to the bill, while I am not opposed to an appropriation as a means of improving the navigation of the Mississippi River.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will yield now for eight minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, we are called upon to act hurriedly on this subject, before the report of the Mississippi River Commission has been laid before the House in print for our information. By referring to the statement of my colleague [Mr. WILLIS], made yesterday, as it is in to-day's RECORD, you will find that this legislation is based on the recommendation of the President of the United States, and on a manuscript report of the Mississippi River Commission which would make about a thousand printed pages. Mr. WILLIS said:

> The President of the United States, by a special message, has referred this subject to the consideration of Congress. The Mississippi River Commission has made its report, upon which the message of the President is based. By order of the House both of those documents were referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. A subcommittee was immediately appointed by that committee, who have had the report of the Mississippi River Commission under their careful consideration for the past three or four days. That report embraces about 1,800 printed pages.

Now that is a remarkable statement of fact. But it is true that this House has nothing but the recommendation of the President and that of the committee, which is based upon the recommendation of the President, and a thousand pages of matter yet in manuscript before that committee, which they have only had for three or four days.

Now, sir, I have not forgotten that two years ago the President recommended to the House an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the Mississippi River and half a million of dollars for the Potomac flats, near this city. And I have not forgotten that the President, when we prepared a river and harbor bill carefully, after months of labor, night and day, vetoed the entire bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors and gave this as his reason:

> I feel the more bound to withhold my signature from the bill because of the peculiar evils which manifestly result from this infraction of the Constitution. Appropriations of this nature, to be devoted purely to local objects, tend to an increase in number and in amount. As the citizens of one State find that money, to raise which they in common with the whole country are taxed, is to be expended for local improvements in another State, they demand similar benefits for themselves, and it is not unnatural that they should seek to indemnify themselves for such use of the public funds by securing appropriations for similar improvements in their own neighborhood. Thus as the bill becomes more objectionable it secures more support. This result is invariable, and necessarily follows a neglect to observe the constitutional limitations imposed upon the law-making power.

I am compelled to hasten. The point I make is this: that the President bases his recommendation on the report of the commission, and the committee bases its recommendation on the recommendation of the President, while the report of the commission is not yet in print. We are asked to hurry up this bill for what? For labor on the Mississippi River? Not at all. In my humble opinion it is in the nature of a deficiency bill, and if we had an itemized account from the War Department it would show some startling facts.

I find, sir, by looking at the reports of the Mississippi River Commission (Executive Document No. 32, Forty-seventh Congress, second session, page 17), that $491,552 were expended on Plum Point reach. For what? For labor on construction? No, sir. Only $13,889 went for such labor. I find on Lake Providence reach $364,456 were expended. For what? For labor on construction? No, sir. Only $10,676 were expended for such labor there.

Mr. HORR. Where is the rest of it?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Out of my eight minutes' time I shall not occupy the attention of the committee to show what the rest of it was used for. Here is the report; the gentleman can examine it for himself. It did not go for labor on construction; the gentleman may be sure of that. It went for surveying and to junketing trips along the river; it went to build boats and into all sorts of expenditures. But the point I make, Mr. Chairman, is simply this, that if out of an expenditure of $856,000 only $24,500 went for labor on construction, and since it is estimated that it will take $33,000,000 to complete the project, I want to ask how many billions of money will be actually required to complete the whole line of the Mississippi River improvement as contemplated? Figure it out for yourselves, gentlemen, at your leisure, remembering that Captain Eads admitted before the Committee on Commerce in 1882 that a mistake of $2,000,000 had been made in the estimate by the levee commission of 1874 relative to closing up gaps in the levees. They estimated for $2,000,000, but $4,000,000 would be required.

There is a very popular opinion in this country, and I must avow that I share it in part, that the veto of the President in 1882 was not in the interest of cheap transportation, but in the interest of the railroad kings in this country. Moreover, if the President expects to control the Chicago convention on the 3d day of June next by bidding for Southern votes in his recommendation of the Mississippi River scheme, I think, sir, that he had better look a little sharp.

I desire to call the attention of this committee, however, to another fact, that the combination referred to by the President in 1882 has manifested itself already in this House. He recommends the Hennepin Canal this year. Two years ago he recommended the Potomac flats and the Mississippi River business. This year he recommends one million for the Mississippi River as a sort of entering wedge for that gigantic scheme; then he goes one better, and recommends the Hennepin Canal. You will find, Mr. Chairman, that the friends of the Hennepin Canal and of the Mississippi River improvement will be standing side by side in the contest, with this difference, that the men in favor of the Hennepin Canal have possibly always been in favor of internal improvements by the Government, while the friends of the Mississippi River scheme have been on the Democratic side of the question, and been for eighty years the opponents of internal improvements until the prospect of a two-billion-of-money scheme has won them all over. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I simply take the floor at this time for the purpose of saying that I believe it will be demonstrated in the future that this Mississippi River improvement plan is the colossal waste and extravagance of the age. I do not care if in the improvement of the navigation of the river it should result in reclaiming all of the inundated lands along the margin of the river—that is, if such shall prove to be the result of the plan intended in good faith for the improvement of the navigation of the river. Indeed, as I have had occasion to say once or twice already upon this floor in the discussion of this and kindred measures, I hope such may prove to be the result of any plan that may ultimately be successful in making its navigation complete. But I have said that I believed it would be demonstrated that this is a vast waste and a tremendous extravagance, because I do not believe it is within the power of science by any manner of construction of embankments to confine the waters of the river within a narrower channel, to either improve the navigation of the river or secure from inundation the lands adjacent to it on either side.

Years ago I have myself seen the Mississippi River when it seemed to have no banks on either side. I was convinced, as I think every intelligent gentleman would be who has witnessed it in those days of flood, that it was not in the power of science or within the limits of the possibilities of the Treasury of the people of this country to levee the Mississippi River within such limits as will protect the riparian owners; and it is singular to me that this system adopted by the Mississippi River Commission is intended to improve the navigation where there is too little water, and also to continue the same plan when there is too much water. Now I can understand perfectly well that where the river is shoal, where the bed is wide, where the water is shallow, by confining its waters by narrowing the channel you may improve the navigation; and if this system of levees or embankments, or whatever you may call it, was confined to such portions of the Mississippi River, I would have some faith in its ultimate success. But what is the truth? As was said by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], and I think I may say from my own knowledge of the Lower Mississippi River, for eight to ten months in the year there is abundance of water all the way from the city of Memphis to the city of New Orleans.

Indeed, the trouble that is experienced on the Lower Mississippi River is that there is too much water. And yet it is assumed here that an appropriation is to be made to make more navigable a river which is already too much so. What you gentlemen want—and you might just as well tell us so—on the Lower Mississippi River is not to improve its navigation when there is difficulty in getting your boats along over its sand-bars; but you want an improvement that will confine the waters of the stream within a channel when there is too much water there and when your lands are inundated by it. And the Mississippi River Commission has adopted a plan to diminish the volume of water by attempting to confine it within narrower limits; when anybody, whether he is a scientist or otherwise, who knows anything of the laws of hydrostatics, knows that what you want when you have too much water is to get clear of it; and you may say as much as you please about Captain Cowden being a crank and all that, my belief is that the relief you seek can only be got by the outlet system, tapping the Mississippi River when there is too much water and drawing it off the surface.

The time was when the Lower Mississippi country was not inundated as it is now. And why? Because when the river was at flood the water escaped into your bayous and your lagoons and your lakes, and they were filled with water. Nature had made the outlet. It went when it left the river into these places, where it remained. But by the system of levees adopted by the States you endeavored to confine the river within its embankments; and a muskrat or a crawfish making a hole in the embankment, after a while the waters waging their war in that direction cut your levees, and your country became inundated. In the mean time, while in this way you rescued these low places, the result is they become filled, and now when your waters escape there is no place for them to go except all over the country, and you are inundated there.

You have got to go back to the plan nature originally provided, to make some way by which these waters may escape from the river. It may be necessary to sacrifice some portions of your lands, but not to the extent they are now being sacrificed by these inundations of the river.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish the committee would indulge me for two minutes more.

The CHAIR. It is impossible for the committee to extend the time, the limitation having been fixed by the House. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is recognized.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield the time allowed to the friends of the bill to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know when I have listened to an address more plausible, more natural in the character of its views and in the order of their presentation and yet in my humble judgment more thoroughly impregnated with error, than that of the distinguished gentleman who has just occupied the floor. He speaks, Mr. Chairman, about our giving to the river its original character and condition and of our then enjoying the consequent protection. Then, sir, you must go back to the entire territory in the north of the Mississippi Valley and restore all the forests to the soil. Does not the gentleman know that the universal history and tendency of rivers is to deteriorate and degenerate as civilization advances? Does he not know that floods are precipitated upon the lower river now in a way that was not the custom in the early history of that stream? Sir, the troubles that are precipitated upon the lower river have their origin far more in the cultivated lands of the whole Northwest and in the valleys of the Ohio and the Missouri than they have in the conditions that exist from Cairo down.

The gentleman from Indiana and others who spoke upon this question are profoundly impressed with the idea that the real germ and gist of this whole thing is levees for the protection of land. This, Mr. Chairman, is no new question before this House. We have had report after report from a most eminent scientific commission. This matter began in 1876. For three years it was considered in Congress and discussed by scientific men; in 1879 this commission was originated. Four reports have been submitted by the commission indorsing this system as indispensable to the improvement of navigation. Three consecutive Presidents also have in turn urged this measure upon Congress, Mr. Hayes, Mr. Garfield, and Mr. Arthur; and for years Congress has been guided into great and just preparatory expenditures by these united counsels. Now, this bill calls for a part of what is needed this year. Two committees in the Senate have just examined into the merits of the bill, and they have unanimously reported in its favor. Two committees of the House of Representatives have just examined into it, and they have unanimously reported in its favor. And the Senate has just unanimously passed the bill over which we have had so much contention.

It is admitted that mattresses are an indispensable part of river improvement; it is admitted that jetties are an indispensable part of river improvement; and it is admitted by all of these eminent men whom we have commissioned to examine particularly into this matter that levies or channel dikes, which are nothing more than jetties made of earth on the bank instead of piles in the water, are an indispensable part of the only true system of the improvement of the navigation of the river. Do we mean to impeach the integrity of their statements? Do we mean to set our judgment against that of the united scientific investigation of the entire country? Do we mean to say now in view of this unanimous indorsement of these measures coming down through a line of Executives, through a line of Congresses, and through an unbroken line of scientific investigations, that we who confessedly have not examined into it know more about it than all of them together; and in the very flood-time of confidences and the best assurances of success shall we roll back the whole progress of this river's improvement and wreck the fair prospects of ultimate success?

We have never complained of tardiness of results, and now upon the first occasion of success are we going to discharge all the practitioners we brought into the case?

Here comes one gentleman citing figures. Does he expect that this commission is going to work without first purchasing its plant? Is it to their discredit that they build boats upon which to construct mattresses; that they buy pile-drivers; that they buy tugboats; that they make these large expenditures which you might expect and of reason must demand? And other gentlemen find fault because cooks are employed for the men thus engaged. Must they not eat? Engineers and clerks are employed. Must there be no organization?

The discrepancy between the money spent and the number of laborers in sight is easily explained. A large part of this work is done by contract. It is by contract that the stone is obtained; by contract that the willows for the mattresses are obtained; by contract that the land dikes or levees are built; by contract that the piles are obtained, and it is by machinery that they are put into the ground.

Now we know perfectly well, taking the assurances of these gentlemen who have examined into this matter, that if you leave this work in an uncontinued state, if you leave this commission with empty hands, when exigencies arise, from the character of the soil and the nature of the stream, the river can destroy in a few weeks the outlay of millions of money and of years of toil.

There was a time when the Gulf of Mexico extended to Cairo, very much as Hudson's Bay extends into the northern part of this continent. All of the bed below Cairo upon which the Mississippi flows is a made bed. There is no analogy between that and the rocky banks and beds of the streams in the uplands.

We know that the Mississippi River is really a system of lakes from Cairo down, and in a strict sense it is not a river at all; but, as Mr. Calhoun said, it is an inland sea. There are thirty-three reaches or lakes between Cairo and New Orleans. It is a succession of lakes and portages; and at the upper end and at the lower end and all through the whole extent of these lakes, reaches, and portages we find exactly the same phenomena and difficulties to contend with that Captain Eads overcame at the mouth of the river, where it makes its last departure into that great lake, the Gulf of Mexico. Bars are formed at the upper and lower ends and all through these lakes or reaches; for the river, almost human in its actions, after exhausting its energy in the bends, drops the huge loads from its Titan arms as it spreads out to rest over the broad expanse below.

As to the practical results to commerce, are gentlemen ignorant of the fact that a statement was made by a convention of merchants assembled in Saint Louis that the increased insurance because of these bars in these reaches or lakes amounts to more than ten millions of dollars annually over the sum which would be required if this work were completed? This is one practical demonstration of the necessity of this work. The tonnage now creeping through these frequent dangers amounts to over 4,000,000 tons per annum. Not only can the $10,000,000 of extra insurance be saved, but this tonnage can be doubled, and the freight charges, now often 50 per cent. less than that of the railroads to the seaboard, can be reduced yet a large percentage more.

I believe that this House did not yesterday care even to debate this question. The debate came on in a gradual way, and, as my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] described it, in a somewhat regretable way. But it has come. It is with diffidence that I make the closing argument upon the main bill for my committee, and it is with regret that I recognize the expiration of my time.

Now as to the fault findings and criticisms of gentlemen on this floor, who admit that they have not investigated this subject, I hold that the action of the Senate and its committees, the action of the House and its committees, the recommendation of the President, and the action of the commission through successive years, is a sufficient reply to what they have said.

As I surrender the floor I desire to say that I wish the tongue of the gifted Garfield could be again heard here upon this floor in advocacy of this measure to which his far-seeing sagacity caused him to render such efficient support. I would revive the aspirations of nearly all of the great statesmen of our history, who saw in the ultimate improvement of the 50,000 miles of navigable streams in the Mississippi Valley, streams of which this great river is the main stem—the whole covering the grandest country and making the grandest system of free commercial intercouse on earth—God's best assurance of happiness, of liberty, and of union to this people.

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. How much time is that?

The CHAIRMAN. There is one minute remaining.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not desire to take the floor for one minute.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I ask that the general debate may be considered as closed.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate having been closed, the bill is now open to amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the money hereby appropriated (except so much thereof as it shall be necessary to expend in preventing the works in progress on other portions of the river from waste and injury) shall be expended in the continuation and completion of the works on some one reach of the river now in progress of improvement as established by the commission, to the end that the proposed improvement of one of the reaches of the river on which works are in progress shall be completed at an early day and the plan of said commission for the improvement of the navigation of the river fully tested. The reach to be so completed shall be designated by the commission, and report of such designation made to Congress at the earliest practicable period.

Mr. HOLMAN. I base this proposition on the opinion expressed by the Chief of Engineers, General Wright, who in testifying before a committee of Congress at the last session used the following language:

It has always been my view that only one reach of the river should be attacked first, say the Plum Point reach. That was the worst reach in the river.

It always seemed well to me that Congress should appropriate money enough to make a fair test upon that reach, and to wait until the results there were sufficiently known before attempting anything beyond.

This proposition is simply based upon the judgment of the Chief of Engineers. The river, as the committee will remember, is divided by the Mississippi Commission into reaches of varying lengths, from fifty miles to one hundred and more. The two reaches in progress of improvement and on which several million have been expended are the Plum Point reach and Lake Providence reach. Plum Point reach has had expended upon it up to this time $1,250,000. There will be required to complete that reach perhaps $3,839,000 more. I take it for granted that if Congress shall adopt this proposition the work on the Plum Point reach will be prosecuted by the commission to an early completion. Then Congress and the country can determine from the result of this completed work whether it is proper to proceed with further expenditures upon the plan of the commission.

There has been expended for the construction and repair of levees up to this time (if the reports are correct) $1,350,000 of the last appropriation of $4,100,000. Without stopping to discuss now the question whether the levee system is necessary to the improvement of the river, or the power of Congress to appropriate money for the construction of levees to protect private property, permit me to say that by adopting a single reach—a reach of from fifty to one hundred miles—long enough to illustrate fully the working of the plan, it will not be necessary to resort to the experiment of the levee system, for the building of levees has not heretofore been confined to the portion of the river under improvement. On the contrary, if the proposition I submit shall be accepted, it will involve simply the expenditure of money in the improvement of navigation and nothing beyond. I am not willing for one to appropriate large sums of money to be spent indefinitely and everywhere upon that river under a plan which competent engineers regard as an experiment until a fair test is made of that plan. If that test shall establish the practicability and efficiency of the plan of the commission to improve the navigation of the river, then further appropriations can be made with confidence and safety; then, I think, Congress, without any hesitation or fear of failure, might proceed to improve the entire river from Cairo to the Gulf.

The vast region of country on the Mississippi River between Cairo and the Gulf is not the region especially or mainly interested in the navigation of that great river. It is a question affecting the navigation of the Ohio River, the upper Mississippi, and their great tributaries, and the interests of the great States on their borders. It is the commerce of the great States northwest and northeast of the mouth of the Ohio River, as well as of the great States on the Lower Mississippi seeking an outlet to the Gulf, that are interested in improving the navigation of the Mississippi. That commerce is not so greatly embarrassed as might be supposed from the views expressed by gentlemen here. But the great river undoubtedly admits of great improvement, and reasonable appropriations undoubtedly should be made for that purpose, even large appropriations. But here is a gigantic system: the river is divided into stations, and the improvement of one of them, testing the entire plan, will determine whether it is the part of wisdom that the vast sums proposed to be expended in improving the navigation of the Mississippi River should be expended upon the system now being tried—a system which in the nature of things must be, until fully tested, an experiment. Other plans have been proposed. Let us test fully and fairly the plan of this commission, and if it is found to really and permanently improve the navigation of the river, the country will justify the expenditure of even the large sums proposed.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. It is assumed by gentlemen who favor this appropriation that the plan proposed by the Mississippi River Commission has not only been fully indorsed by the House but that its success has been demonstrated. And they also attempt to close the controversy by asserting that the engineers who originated this plan are "the best in the world," using the language employed yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Now, it is unfortunate for us that in this matter failure has had no chroniclers. We might have learned very important lessons if we had only had some committee of this House to exhibit the frequent instances in which the plans of these distinguished engineers have proved failures. I do not doubt their capacity. I am not attacking their judgment. I am only assuming that the Mississippi River is too large for the science of the day. If I am not mistaken, distinguished engineers once hit upon a plan by which, as was supposed, they could deepen the Gulf of Mexico at Galveston. They supposed that, if they would only dip out the quicksands they would get a greater depth of water. They forgot that quicksands, like water, will seek a level. It was about as impossible to deepen the harbor at Galveston by taking out the quicksand as it would have been to lower the waters of the Gulf by dipping with a tin cup. After we had dumped something less than half a million of dollars in Galveston Harbor, even these distinguished scientific gentlemen came to the conclusion that their plan was a failure.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman will allow me to say that there never has been such a plan proposed at Galveston.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Well, whether I have stated the plan correctly or not, I have stated the result correctly; and so far as the practical question is concerned that is the same thing.

Mr. OCHILTREE. There has been two feet increase of water there within the last three years.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I suppose that when the Gulf is "on a high" the depth of water increases. I remember that at one time the waters of the Gulf were about three to six feet deep on the island; but I do not know that that was the result of any scientific engineering on the part of these distinguished men of the War Department.

Now, it is a mistake to assume that the scientists of the country are in accord upon this plan. If I am correctly advised this very plan of improvement was once passed upon by a board of distinguished engineers of the War Department, and they disapproved it. Before this commission had adopted it, before it was attempted to be put into operation at all, it was discussed and disapproved by gentlemen of science.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have no time to discuss some other questions in this connection, I desire to close by saying that I expect this bill will pass. Indeed I am not sure but it ought to pass. This is an experiment. I have made my prediction. It may be that I am not a prophet. I hope I am not. I sincerely hope that this plan may accomplish all that its friends anticipate. I am willing to see the sum of $1,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of testing the plan. I hope it will be appropriated. I should not have made these observations if there was not connected with this appropriation a further expenditure of fifty or perhaps one hundred million. Before we make any such expenditure let us test the plan.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]; and I have sought the floor for the purpose of challenging and correcting the exceedingly erroneous and incorrect statement made on yesterday by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. He said:

Now, sir, this statement is without reference to the two hundred and fourteen laborers that I find upon the Blue Book. Taking into account their services, the $72,000 paid to them, the yearly expenditure of this commission, without reference to the other sums expended for labor, material, &c., used in building embankments, revetments, dams, mattresses, or anything of that sort is $550,790. And in addition to that you must add the monthly pay of the military officers upon the commission. I was not able to ascertain accurately what that was, but it is something in the neighborhood of $15,000, making the annual expenses of the commission for personal services, without including sums paid to persons called "laborers," more than $525,000.

I read from the RECORD of to-day. He deliberately makes the statement that the Mississippi River Commission is guilty of the grossest extravagance, and has spent the enormous sum of $525,000 per annum, exclusive of the sums expended upon the works of improvement of the river. This is a sweeping charge, and was made with the appearance of authority and great assurance. It made an impression upon the House; indeed, sir, it deceived some members of this House, and, if allowed to go uncontradicted, is calculated to deceive the country. We all know that the laws absolutely forbid any officers of this Government from expending any money or to contract any liability whatever in excess of the appropriations made for the particular purpose by Congress, and if this commission have done so they have violated the law and should be punished.

I will read from the last sundry civil appropriation act making appropriations for the current fiscal year (22 Statutes at Large). The paragraph for the Mississippi River Commission is as follows:

For the Mississippi River Commission as follows:
For salaries and traveling expenses of the commission, office expenses, and reduction of work, for continuation of surveys and gaugings of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, for permanent gauge stations and borings and for publication of maps and results, $150,000; and an itemized statement of the expenditure of this sum shall be included with the annual report of the commission to Congress.

One hundred and fifty thousand dollars! Not for fine cooks and clerks and riotous living, as that gentleman would have us believe, but for "salaries, traveling expenses of the commission, office expenses, and reduction of work; for continuation of surveys, and gaugings of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; for permanent gauge-stations and borings, and for publication of maps and results;" and they are required to render annually, and do render, itemized accounts of their expenditures. That annual itemized account is before us. The one of last year I have here before me, showing that their expenditures were only $140,000, and that there was at the end of that fiscal year an unexpended balance of $35,000, which has gradually accumulated during the four or five years of their existence. Sir, upon this state of facts from the records and official reports comment is unnecessary.

I will not believe that he deliberately intended to deceive the House, but rather I will believe that he was himself misled and deceived by the delusive appearances of the Blue Book, which does not pretend to give any account of sums of money expended, and that he fell into this great blunder simply from want of careful investigation.

But, sir, be the source of his error what it may, being found utterly without foundation, it taints all he said with suspicion of error and forces distrust. There is no more foundation for his charge that this is a great levee scheme for protection against overflows and not for the improvement of navigation. The original law creating the commission and authorizing this great work to be undertaken declared that it was to "give ease and safety to navigation." Every bill that has ever passed making appropriations for this work has provided that no part of the money appropriated should be used for any purpose except "to improve navigation." No one ever advocated one of these appropriations for any other purpose, and his charge that it is for levees, for protection merely, is equally unfounded as his first charge. The commission have nothing to do with the expenditure of money for the construction of works. That is given exclusively to the Secretary of War. He places engineers of the Army in charge of the work. They conduct it as all other river and harbor improvements are conducted by them, and they give itemized accounts of all their expenditures.

Sir, all the statements of the gentleman from Iowa are thus shown to be equally reckless and without foundation.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] said he found nothing in this bill now before the House looking to the improvement of the river; that it was all for levees.

Sir, that gentleman seems to be equally as unfortunate or reckless as the other to whom I have just paid my respects. Evidently he has not even read the bill nor heard it read. There is an absolute prohibition in the bill of any use of money except for improving navigation. I will read the bill.

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Mississippi River, which said sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, created by an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters," approved June 28, 1879: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be used solely for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and no part thereof shall be expended with the view to the improvement of private property.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DUNN. No, sir.

A MEMBER. It says "with a view."

Mr. DUNN. Or for that purpose. This commission have concealed nothing from this House or the country. They have submitted a plan of improvement of navigation as an entirety, and what they ask is to be allowed to go on—not with a part of that plan, leaving it exposed to destruction because of its incompleteness, but to go forward with all the plan as a whole. They have not recommended the adoption of part of the plan, but all of it as an entirety. They would not be willing to be responsible for any experiment with part of their plan. We should accept it as a whole or reject it altogether. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who we all know has always steadily opposed this measure, asks that the work be now confined to one reach. There are six or seven reaches of disturbed navigation for which the commission have asked appropriations. Four of them are below Memphis. There are two hundred miles of disturbed navigation, in the aggregate, included in these reaches.

The effort of the opponents of this measure a year ago was to limit the improvement to two reaches. That was yielded to by the friends of the measure; and it was the motion of the same gentleman then. Now they ask to limit it to one, and await proofs of the success of the experiment as they call it. We have waited the year, and with the report before us come "confirmations strong as proofs of Holy Writ," and "yet they are not happy." As proofs increase and multiply their doubts thicken; and the more the plan of the commission succeeds the less they want done. In the exercise of a wise discretion in the selection of a plan of improvement the commission have chosen that which will do the most good and accomplish the most complete success.

Do the opponents of the measure desire that plan chosen which will do the least good and fall short of success?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who are opposing the passage of this bill seem to have conjured up a specter. They have argued this question from beginning to end as though we were asking for an appropriation for levees. There is not one word in the bill on the subject of levees. Sir, when the time comes those who are friendly to levees will be willing and ready to meet the gentlemen who are opposed to appropriating money for the building of levees. We claim this great Mississippi Valley contains at least one-half of the wealth and intelligence of the United States, and that whatever affects their welfare affects the welfare of the other citizens of the United States; and you do anything that will endanger the development of the Mississippi Valley, and you prevent the development of the United States.

We claim, or I shall, at least, as one of the friends of that measure claim, that under the general welfare clause of the Constitution, and also under that other clause which grants to Congress the right to regulate commerce between the several States, we have the right to ask and that Congress has the right to grant appropriations of money to build levees upon that river. And like the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD], all the citizens of the Mississippi Valley will be in favor of appropriating not only one million, not thirty millions, but if necessary one hundred millions, of money to reclaim that vast and fertile region which is tributary to the wealth and power of this land. And, Mr. Chairman, if you refuse to pass this bill you endanger all that has been already done, and subject the people of this country to tremendous loss thereby. I have the honor to represent a district in Mississippi which has become somewhat historical, the well-known "Shoe-String" district, extending for over four hundred miles along the banks of the Mississippi River. I have seen the work of this improvement from its inception and during its whole progress up to this time; some portions of it I have seen every day, some parts of it every week, and other parts every month. There has been a vast outlay to accumulate the outfit or plant for the Government along the river which this appropriation is asked to protect and to hold the advantage which the Government has already obtained in the work so far done. Sir, if you refuse this appropriation all that work must go for naught. There has been a friendly and magnanimous disposition shown here by members on both sides of this House. I am satisfied the majority is going to pass this bill, and I feel like thanking Democrats and Republicans alike who have given it their support. Continue this work upon the Mississippi River. Continue these appropriations until you ascertain whether or not it is a mere experiment or whether it will result in success, and I say to all of you that it will do more to cement and harmonize this Union than if we were at war with half the nations of the earth.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, while that clock is making five minutes it will be impossible for me to reply in the course of this debate as I had hoped to reply to the vagaries, the inconsistencies, the false ideas, and the misconceptions of gentlemen who have spoken on this subject before this committee. I can now but address myself to the amendment pending before the committee.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] who has just addressed the committee is a little bit inconsistent. Last year I spent some months with him in the investigation of this whole question. He went into that investigation hostile to the improvement; and while the overwhelming testimony of the engineers and of the vast majority of the practical men of the country sustained the plan and workings of the Mississippi River Commission he remained unconvinced. He is still consistent in his hostility to the measure, but a little inconsistent now in the desire he has expressed to confine the appropriation for this work to one single reach of the river, for last year he joined in a report that it should be extended to two of the great reaches of the river.

What is the object of this appropriation here so hastily sought? I can not stand here and answer the arguments that have been made to the effect that it is intended for levees alone. Why, sir, the bill answers and refutes that itself. The very language of the bill is that "no portion of the money appropriated shall be expended for the protection or improvement, in any manner, of private property." Why, have gentlemen looked at the bill at all? Have they examined to see what its terms are? Are they aware of the fact that not one dollar of it is to be expended for any other purpose than the protection and prosecution of this great work, a greater than which this great Government has not in progress and never had? Confine it, if you will, to one point on the river, and you impair the brain and the thought and the action of that commission, and you will hold it responsible for failure. This you would do at the suggestion of men who are not sufficiently familiar with the great principles of engineering to build a flutter-wheel or to understand the mysteries of a coffee-mill. Confine it, then, to one reach of the river. In six weeks comes the resistless flood. Then this vast expenditure of money and time for plant, upon which so much labor and money and brains have been expended, will be swept away or injured, not at one point alone, but everywhere along the whole course of the river where the work has been progressing. Not alone will the destruction occur at Plum Point, but at Providence reach, at Memphis, at Vicksburg, and at the mouth of the Red River, where the commission has been laboring. All the works will be injured, and yet the hostility of the gentleman from Indiana, and those led by him, would have all of this plant and material subjected to waste and destruction in a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy inconsistent with the dictates of common sense or the most ordinary views of statesmanship. Sir, that commission in its composition embodies in it the best talent of this country in engineering principles. Ay, sir, I will tell the gentleman from Indiana that there is not an abler engineer here in this whole country than those that are engaged in this great work. You have formulated the law creating that commission; you surrendered this great river throughout all its length and breadth to the control of this commission. You told them, "Go and solve this problem; doubtful theories, conflicting theories, have been advanced, and we could not agree upon what is best to be done." In response to the clamor that came, not from Louisiana, not from Mississippi, not from Arkansas, so much as from the great and growing Northwest, asking for a free and untrammeled pathway to the sea—in obedience to that you created this commission, gave them the whole subject-matter in charge, and now you propose to fetter their brain, to unnerve their arm, and tie them down where the property of the Government is being wasted by the coming flood. Gentlemen, where is your sense, where is your statesmanship, to entertain such a proposition?

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Certain messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. GIBSON. I renew the pro forma amendment.

I regret very much that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who professes to be a friend to an experiment such as his amendment relates to, should have seen fit to attack this bill in the manner in which he has attacked it. If the action of the commission is to be regarded as a mere experiment, if all that has been done is to be regarded as proving nothing, then the whole foundation of the action of the River and Harbor Committee, the whole foundation of the action of the President, the whole foundation of the action of the Senate, and the whole foundation of the action of the Mississippi River Commission rest upon nothing.

If this bill is passed, why should this expenditure be confined to one particular point? If there are any works there to be saved, if there are any national interests there to be preserved, they ought to be preserved at all points as well as one. The facts in this case are that two points have been selected by the Government of the United States, and these have been improved in pursuance of the law. Why should the House now say that one-half of that work shall be thrown away and only the other half be preserved? If one-half is entitled to be protected, certainly the other half is, and the reasons advanced by gentlemen upon the other side, that this money has been expended not in labor but upon other things, will not support any such position as that taken by the gentleman from Indiana.

It is true that thousands and thousands of dollars have been expended under the head of labor in a way that does not appear to suit the ideas of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE]. But any fair and honest man looking at the report of this commission will see that every solitary dollar that has been expended in preparing to do this work must have been expended before any labor could have been expended upon it. Now, is the House to stand still and allow the floods or the waters in their ordinary condition to wash away or to destroy all this work, or are they to stand still and allow the very plants, the steamboats, &c., purchased there by the Government to rot away? While we are improving only one point the works at the other point will not be preserved, the plant there will be destroyed, and we will then have to make further appropriations to build that which we now have, instead of an appropriation simply to preserve it. If the argument is good for any appropriation at all, it is good for the whole; and if it is not good for the whole, it is not good for any.

I hope gentlemen will meet this matter in a fair, honest, and manly way; that if opposed to the improvement they will vote against it, and if they are in favor of it they will not undertake to kill the bill by insidious amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. This appropriation is certainly asked for at an unusual period of time. We are asked to vote this money, as has been well said, without the information before us upon which it is assumed the President of the United States acted, and upon which doubtless the Committee on Rivers and Harbors acted in reporting this bill to the House. And therefore, sir, it is well that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana should be adopted; that we should confine the expenditure of this money to one of the places upon which the Government has expended the money in the past.

When this improvement was first sought after and when the appropriation was first made for it we found in the bill restrictions that the money should be expended only for the purpose of improving navigation; and there was at least a hint in the bill that none of it should be expended for the levees. When the last appropriation was made, substantially the same language that was incorporated in the first bill was used. But this bill comes here without any restrictions as to the expenditure of the money. At least they are in so mild language that the utmost latitude will be allowed to the commission.

It has been said here on the floor that all the engineer strength of the country pronounced that this plan which has been submitted by the commission is a success. I say, in answer to that assertion, that the engineer force of the country has, with great unanimity, stated that this money ought to be expended at one point. It is true that some of them have recommended the extension of it to two points; and if we were discussing here a large appropriation and not an appropriation which is in its terms a deficiency, I would say extend it to two points. But when this is, as I have stated, an appropriation really for the current year, not for the next year, an extraordinary appropriation, I say without the facts before us we should adopt the suggestion which has been made by eminent engineers, that the appropriation should be devoted to one of these points on the Mississippi River.

We have a report from a committee of this House upon this subject. And, sir, I remember when that committee undertook to discuss this question upon a previous occasion it was at least insinuated that it did not make a proper examination. I desire to call the attention of this committee to the names of at least three members of that committee of a former House that investigated the subject. It is true that my friend from Indiana was upon that committee. An eminent gentleman from Massachusetts, Governor Robinson, was upon that committee, and a more eminent man, whom you have honored by placing in the Speaker's chair, was upon that committee. In the report submitted by the majority of the committee it was recommended that all the money should be expended on Providence reach and Plum Point reach; that all the appropriations made for this great work should be expended on these two reaches. Then, I say the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Indiana does not propose too much when it proposes that this extraordinary appropriation should be devoted to one of them.

It has been said here that we propose to let the property of the Government be destroyed. Not so. If I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], he proposes that enough of this money shall be expended to preserve the property of the Government; ay, enough of it to preserve the works as far as they have progressed. But so far as new works are concerned, you shall extend them only upon one of these reaches.

If the purpose of gentlemen on the other side is not for the protection of the lands along the Mississippi River, with incidental improvement of the navigation, I ask them to accept the proposition which has been tendered to them by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], so that we can demonstrate by practical experience whether this money is being or will be wasted, and whether we can, by the plan which has been adopted by the Mississippi River Commission, aid in the improvement of that great river. I am entirely willing for one to vote all the money necessarily required for purposes of improving navigation, but I am not ready, I am not willing, to vote money solely and only for the purpose of protecting the alluvial lands along the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the time for debate upon the amendment to the amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. GIBSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I renew it. I am inclined to regard the opportunity for discussing the pending proposition as mainly one for gentlemen to show their ability to entertain. I have not regarded with the least anxiety any evidence to prevent the passage of the bill.

The President tells us, in his special message on this subject, that this appropriation is absolutely necessary. We have a commission organized by authority of Congress for the purpose of making this expenditure. The Mississippi River improvement contemplating the present work was inaugurated earnestly in the Forty-third Congress. The improvement began at the mouth of the river by the expenditure of twelve or thirteen millions of dollars, and that improvement, as far as it has now gone, has revolutionized the commerce of this country and affects the commerce of the world.

This is not merely a sectional matter; it is one of great national importance, affecting the producer and consumer here and abroad. What has been the result of deepening the mouth of the Mississippi River so that vessels drawing 26 feet can come up to New Orleans? It has made New Orleans the second export city of this nation. New Orleans today exports more of the products of the country than either Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, or any of the Pacific cities. Heavy articles of freight are naturally seeking the cheapest routes to market.

We formerly sent all our products to market over the Alleghany Mountains by steam. We are now sending large amounts of the products of the Northwest down the Mississippi River by means of cheaper water transportation.

What is the use of gentlemen speaking against this mode of improving the navigation of that river? The mouth of the river was deepened in this way by Captain Eads. He took large willow baskets, filled them with stone, and sunk them in the river banks, making levees. Who cares how you improve the navigation of this great national system, provided it is done, done quickly, and done well?

What has been the effect of the improvement of the Mississippi River by deepening the channel at its mouth? It has compelled the Canadian Government to improve the Welland canal system, so as to give an outlet for the products of the great West through the Saint Lawrence system. That compelled New York to take the tolls off the Erie Canal to save her commerce by the lakes. What has been the result? It has been to bring down the cost of transportation, so that we can continue to compete with the system of water transportation in Russia and with a system of railroads which are being constructed from the Indian Ocean in British India to reach the grain fields of the temperate zone of that country. They raise there half as much wheat as we do in the United States; 240,000,000 bushels last year. There is a world-wide struggle going on between the two English-speaking nations as to which shall furnish the bread for the markets of Europe. A reduction on the East Indian railway system of 18 cents a bushel on wheat was made last year, with a view to competition with the States and Territories of our country. Great Britain desires to get her grain from her dependencies instead of buying it from us. They strive to keep pace with our commercial development by a systematic national policy. It is not a good time for us to hesitate about whether we shall improve navigation by raising the banks of a river or by deepening its channel.

If you by negative votes here prevent the appropriation of money to continue this work on the Mississippi River on the system which has been followed, the result will be that you will give our great competitor such an advantage as we may never get over. The contest is between the prairies of the great West, with their intelligent workers and fine machinery, and the temperate zone of India, with its primitive implements and untutored labor, as to which shall furnish breadstuffs to the markets of Europe and meats and dairy products to the world. One hundred and twenty thousand miles of railway require the corrective power of lake, canal, and river to moderate rates. The grain wave has moved into the Mississippi States and Territories, that are the great productive centers at present.

We are now engaged in a system of internal improvement that not only allows us to carry on this competition, but enables the Northwest to send many millions of dollars' worth of our products down the Mississippi River every year. The last ten years' development of our commerce have brought us cheaper transportation for our products, moved the western farm nearer the seaboard and enhanced its value.

We are now sending to the Southern States accessible to the Mississippi and its tributaries and bringing up lumber that is especially suited to the wants of the manufacturing West. We also bring up iron, iron ore, and cotton, and manufacture them in the State of Iowa and other Western States. The South has much to sell that the West needs. They buy heavily from the West. We want everything done that possibly can be done to enable us to carry on the development of our commerce that every year becomes more universal in its character, and of our lands, not only along the Mississippi River but in the whole West.

The whole basin of the Mississippi River is becoming unified in its requirements and more national in its development; the whole great valley is interested in this improvement. It means also cheaper bread and meat to the Eastern manufacturer. The land lying on every stream running into the Mississippi River is interested in it. Wherever in the world our commerce goes, there this improvement is felt.

I have not thought that there was any disposition to prevent the passage of this bill; criticism will be in place on the regular appropriation; amendments will only perplex and delay. No gentleman has favored us with an objection serious enough in its character to require special attention.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. Before the vote is taken on the pending amendment I wish to call special attention to one or two features of it. And preliminary to the statement I desire to make, I wish to say that I take this to be the most important amendment to be offered to this bill. Before attempting its brief discussion, I desire, with the permission of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], to ask him a question. That is, whether, if this amendment prevails, he will vote for this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think that is a parliamentary question.

[Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I take it for granted——

Mr. HOLMAN. No; the gentleman can take nothing for granted——

Mr. WILLIS. I take it for granted that the gentleman desires to aid us in the discussion of this subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I represent a constituency as much interested in the actual improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River as the gentleman's; and he can take nothing for granted by my silence as to how I will ultimately vote on this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not believe this question should be prejudiced by whatever answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] may make. I favor the gentleman's amendment, and I certainly shall vote for the bill if it prevails.

Mr. WILLIS. I am very glad the gentleman has acted as a proxy for the gentleman from Indiana in answering my question. My object in asking it was to ascertain whether this amendment came from the friends or opponents of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as I have advocated it, I have done so as a friend of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, either this appropriation of $1,000,000 ought or ought not to be made. If it ought to be made, its claim to favorable action rests solely upon the fact that it is an emergency appropriation. If it be not true that the plant of the Government and its works now in progress are jeopardized by an impending flood, by this prospective spring rise, then the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the President of the United States, and the Senate of the United States have been mistaken in supporting this appropriation. The whole argument of the friends of this immediate appropriation rests upon those facts.

If the gentleman from Indiana had presented his amendment last year it would have been timely. He did present a similar amendment. What was it? That amendment limited the appropriation of money to two reaches, Plum Point reach and Lake Providence reach. The friends of the Mississippi River at that time claimed that there were seven or eight reaches which ought to come under the consideration of the Mississippi River Commission; but the opponents of the bill claimed then, as they claim now, and with more authority then than now, that this work was an experiment; and they succeeded in passing an amendment limiting the appropriation to two reaches upon the Mississippi River.

Now let us look at this question as business men. Suppose we had been discussing the propriety of building a house with four rooms or with two, and had finally concluded to build a two-room house. Suppose those two rooms were half completed, and the winds and rains of heaven were beating in upon them. Suppose then some one should suggest that we had better surrender one of those rooms and let it go completely to destruction. No sensible business man would be governed by such an argument. Yet that is the identical proposition which the gentleman from Indiana now asks this House in its sober judgment to adopt. He asks Congress to surrender work already in successful progress upon two of these reaches, and, to the destruction of hundreds of thousands of dollars of valuable plant, let go the experiment and confine the work to only one of those reaches.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have sought the floor to correct a misapprehension of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS]. He misapprehends my proposition. It does not in any way propose to permit any of the works already in progress to be injuriously affected. While providing that the appropriation shall be expended in work upon a particular reach, my amendment expressly reserves so much of the appropriation as may be necessary to preserve from waste and injury works in progress on other portions of the river. This amendment, which has been offered after consultation with other gentlemen on the floor, proposes by no possibility any injury to any interest on the Mississippi River, but simply that the large sums appropriated from the Treasury shall be concentrated upon one work on one reach of the river until it shall be completed, so that from the result of this completed work Congress and the country may know whether the plan of this Mississippi River Commission will justify the further large appropriations proposed.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. I would prefer that it should not come out of my time, but go on.

Mr. WILLIS. This commission reports to the House that upon both these reaches the water has been deepened—at Plum Point twelve feet and Lake Providence fifteen feet; that the work is a success even in its incomplete condition. Why should the gentleman want to surrender this work?

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is usually fair and honorable in debate; but instead of asking a question, for which I yielded, he has made a statement upon a subject not embraced in the official reports. I have sources of general and current information on this subject as well as the gentleman from Kentucky. His people are a river-going people and so are mine. The people of my district are no less interested than his in the navigation of the Mississippi River. I am only insisting on reasonable prudence in the appropriation of public money. I am only asking that a plan involving millions of money shall be subjected to a reasonable test.

Believing as I do that the plan of the Mississippi River Commission is as yet but an experiment, I am not willing to vote millions from year to year without any effort to give it a reasonable test.

If this bill provided that until this system has been put to a fair test on one of the reaches, sixty or a hundred miles in length, the money should be expended in such manner as to prove the practicability of the system, that the work of constructing and repairing levees shall not be a part of the system, but the money expended in good faith to promote the interstate commerce of the Mississippi Valley, the commerce that binds together the States of the Union—if the expenditure of money were subject to these reasonable limitations, in order to determine by the ultimate results the soundness of a system promising to involve vast millions of money, I should feel it my duty to vote for the bill.

I ask the gentleman now whether he is willing, as a Representative of the State of Kentucky, as I am of Indiana, that this money shall be confined exclusively to the improvement of navigation and not used for the purpose of reclaiming lands from inundation?

Mr. WILLIS. I answer the gentleman in the exact words of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But let me say——

Mr. WILLIS. Let me read just the proviso to the bill. It is as follows:

Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be used solely for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River, and no part thereof shall be expended with the view to the improvement of private property.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend knows under that language, in substance, $1,350,000 of the $4,100,000 last appropriated have been expended in this way. Will the gentleman strike out the last clause?

Mr. WILLIS. No; I can not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I mean the last part of the last clause.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, with others I have gone over this whole ground and won it in a Republican House of Representatives. I do not propose to go over it again, but merely to ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MORRISON. In the two and a half minutes allowed me I have no time to speak of the importance of improved navigation on the Mississippi River to my section as well as to the whole country. But I must be pardoned for saying that the long-promised home market has not come to us. For in the year last past we in Illinois have exported, besides a considerable portion of other products, about 30,000,000 of bushels, or more than one half of our entire wheat crop. And by reason of this river we reach the markets of the European millions at greatly reduced cost.

Before the organization of the Mississippi River Commission large sums of money were expended to improve navigation; but the improvement made was not commensurate with the money expended. Since then something—very much—has been accomplished and our products go cheaper, surer, safer, to the sea, whether they go by river or rail.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] means by his proposition or amendment that no levees shall be built to protect the lands of any one, and will so amend his proposition, I will vote for it.

Mr. ELLIS. So will I.

Mr. GIBSON. So will I.

Mr. MORRISON. If that is all he intends to accomplish by it, he ought so to amend it. If, on the other hand, it is needful in order to improve the navigation of that river that levees shall be built, to that extent, and to that extent only, do I favor, support, or advocate the building of levees. For that purpose and to that extent it is as legitimate, as just and wise, to accomplish the purposes by building levees as by any other means not more economical. If there is some better and more economical way, let us know what it is.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] accept that proviso?

Mr. MORRISON. Who are the best judges and who is best informed on the subject and of what is needful to improve navigation of the river? The commission appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, or the six or seven excellent gentlemen we sent down the river on a pleasure-trip to look at it? I do not question either the intelligence or the purpose of these gentlemen. I respect both.

But I submit that the members of the river commission are better advised on the subject because of their training before and their better opportunities for informing themselves since their appointment, if not before. A majority of the commission is made up of men skilled and trained in the Army and Navy, and whatever may be said of either the Army and Navy, both are as good as anything else we have in the country—the officers are as honest as any other class of men. Like other men, they can hardly be wholly free from local influences.

The commission was not so made up as to have on it men from different sections, representing different interests, that they might so perform their duties that each might help the other to put money in his purse. This commission was not packed, that each might help the other at the public expense to protect his field, his town, or his land. They have no fields or lands to protect which could induce them to make traffic of their positions to help each other to unwarrantable profits. Such commissions have been made, and I have heard none of the intelligent gentlemen of this examining committee rise in their places here and condemn or disapprove its misdeeds. The river commission is entitled to a fair and further trial. It has done well; it has done more in the work of improving the Mississippi River than has been done by all other agencies we have employed. Still I am not and have never been very partial to commissions of any kind. Next to conference committees Congressional commissions as a rule are more prolific of personal and private jobbery and public plunder than any other legislative methods or instrumentalities yet discovered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] has seen fit to question the statement I made yesterday in regard to the amount of the pay-roll of the Mississippi River Commission, and he has cited as authority an appropriation act in which there is an item, as I understood his reading, of $150,000 for this purpose.

Mr. DUNN. That is all which has been appropriated and placed at their disposal. They can not expend any more.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman says they can not expend any more than $150,000. I am willing to concede they can not legally expend more than that sum.

Mr. DUNN. Here is their itemized report.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand. There is no question between the gentleman and myself as to authority.

Mr. DUNN. I shall ask to have this printed when you are through.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hold in my hand the Official Register of the United States, containing a list of officers and employés in the civil, military, and naval service on the 1st of July, 1883.

In volume 1, on page 373, begins a list under the title of the Mississippi River Commission, and follows for eleven of the closely printed pages of this volume, giving a list of the names and the compensation paid to the persons in the employ of that commission. The aggregate monthly compensation paid to all the persons on that pay-roll is $49,232.50. That includes 216 persons known on this report as laborers. To these the sum paid monthly aggregates $6,700, leaving over $43,000 paid monthly to those persons in the employ of this commission other than laborers, and making a total, as I stated on yesterday, of more than $500,000 a year exclusive of the salaries of these officers whose names I find here belonging to the Army of the United States, and whose compensation is not given and which does not therefore enter into this computation.

Now, sir, I can not say whether during each day in the year these men have been employed by the Government or the commission; but I know that their names are here on this roll, with the compensation allowed to them, and I have accurately stated the aggregate of the amount. I have taken the trouble to classify them and show the amount paid to each class, and the aggregate of the sums so paid is as I have already stated. The gentleman from Arkansas is therefore mistaken in supposing that the authority he cites is a contradiction of the position I have taken. It is nothing more than this, sir, that it raises an imputation—the two things together—against the commission whose special champion he seems to desire to be on this floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, it has been said so frequently here that many of the members of this House, especially those from the Mississippi Valley, desire the construction of levees for the protection of the alluvial land along the river only that I feel it somewhat incumbent upon me to repel that charge. I am perfectly willing to state and candidly admit that if that were the question alone we have courage ample to make the petition to that effect. But in accordance with the plans of the Mississippi River Commission, under which we are now acting, that is not the proposition, and is not contemplated by the friends of the Mississippi River improvement. The only request we make is that that system shall be continued. If we are to make any improvements at all, it would seem proper to make them in the light of the experience which has been already derived from the works of that commission; and we ask this appropriation now under the urgent recommendation of the commission itself and of the President to meet an emergency.

With reference to the argument of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who, I fear, is no friend of that great river nor of the people who ship their freights by it, I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, the maps of the commission, showing the works on the Plum Point and Providence reaches, and indicating that these works have resulted as their theories predicted they would result, in success, as far as they have gone. On Plum Point reach the water has been deepened from 5 feet to 12 feet and for many miles; at Providence reach for sixteen miles where the water was 5 and 6 feet deep it has reached an average depth of between 15 and 16 feet by the scouring process carried on in its channel.

In considering that river and its improvements we must not confuse it with clear-water streams or of streams with bottoms of rock. It is a river peculiar in itself; a stream carrying vast quantities of sediment, and its bed is alluvial soil. These works, sir, are in a state of progress. Stop work on one of them and the work already done will be placed in danger, if not ultimately destroyed, and its good effects lost. Stop work on both, and you will imperil all that has been already expended. The treatment of that river was long considered and by many eminent men, and many methods were devised whereby a successful solution of the great problem could be reached of making it navigable and safe at all periods of the year. The Mississippi River Commission ordered by this House determined that the treatment must be not local but constitutional. It must not be confined to any one point, but the whole of the river should be taken under control. What benefit, let me ask, would it be to the commerce of that river or the great valley if you make deep water at one bar while the bar immediately below would form an obstruction to the navigation which you had secured above it?

Imputations have been made by gentlemen upon this floor on the expenditures of the commission. The members of that commission, Mr. Chairman, can never be affected by utterances of that nature. They are men of too high character, of natures too exalted, to need any defense at the hands of any man. But the law itself puts them beyond the reach of any such charge. In relation to the appropriation it provides:

Which said sums shall be expended by the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission.

In connection with this improvement, sir, it has been said here that—

You may improve this river as far as you please, as much as you please, and the corn of the West will not go in great quantities to the city of New Orleans for European shipment until you change and reform the commerce of this country, and make New Orleans a great entrepôt as New York now is, so that there may be vessels there to be either laden with corn at nominal freight rates or to go back in ballast to European ports.

Mr. Chairman, I have before me a pamphlet entitled "Competition in transportation, with special reference to competition between the Mississippi River and the trunk railroads extending from Saint Louis to the Atlantic seaboard;" also the annual report of the Treasury Department on the foreign commerce of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883. From these I obtain the following figures:

Receipts of grain in New Orleans by the Mississippi River was in 1875 777,127 bushels. At this time the jetties were in process of construction, and were completed about 1879, when their effect began to appear on commerce. The following year, 1880, we find New Orleans receiving by river 22,992,544 bushels of grain, valued at $20,143,379.

This, Mr. Chairman, is obviously the result of the opening of the mouth of that stream.

Shipments from Saint Louis to the East during the calendar year of 1880 amounted to 1,325,004 tons; and to the South, mostly by river, 1,492,216 tons. Does this look as though New Orleans would not be a great shipping place?

A comparison of freight rates indicates the reason for the vast increase in the grain shipment to New Orleans. Freight rates on bulk corn in February, 1881, were 9 cents per bushel, and in June of the same year were only 5 cents per bushel; whereas the "all-rail routes" to New York from Saint Louis January 1 to April 18, 1881, were 24½ cents per bushel. The saving by Saint Louis to Liverpool by the Mississippi River is shown to be 11½ cents per bushel as compared with the all-rail routes.

It has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as I understood him, that the Mississippi River is navigable all the year round between Saint Louis and New Orleans. It was found, as is stated in the volume first mentioned above, that during the nine years from 1865 to 1873 the condition of river navigation below the city of Saint Louis was as follows:

Average number of days less than 4 feet	34
Average number of days over 4 and less than 6 feet	52
Average number of days over 6 and less than 8 feet	103
Average number of days over 10 feet	136

Thus it will be seen that vessels drawing 10 feet or more could navigate the river not exceeding two-fifths of the year.

The work from which the foregoing is taken also states:

The enjoyment to the full extent of the advantages afforded by the Mississippi River requires the employment of steamboats and barges of large size and drawing when loaded about 8 feet of water. At times, however, the river falls so as to admit only of the employment of boats and barges loaded to draw not more than 4 feet. This greatly increases the cost of transportation. The actual cost of transportation in vessels drawing only 4 feet is said to be nearly twice as great as when loaded to 8 feet.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is a notorious fact, and known to all this country, that when the water in the Mississippi is high freights to the sea are low, whether by river or rail, and when the river is low they are high. The great trunk lines of railways have sliding scales, governed mainly by the rise and fall in this river, which is but a great national free canal dividing our continent from north to south.

The plans proposed are threefold, as I understand them, resulting in one system, which is to confine the water in the bed of the river and cause it to scour down its sand-bars, thereby to deepen and rectify its channel. To accomplish this the commission tells us that the system of bank protection, jetties, and levees is the true one. If this plan, while improving the navigation of this great stream, gives also incidentally protection to millions who dwell upon its banks, I am sure no man loving his country and appreciating the philosophy of the work can object.

The value of levees to this work is indicated by the following note which we find in the report of the commission:

I concur in the foregoing report of the commission, with the single qualification that the value of levees as a factor in the improvement of the channel, in preventing the wide dispersion of flood-waters, is not affirmed in the report in sufficiently positive terms and with that clearness and prominence to which in my judgment it is entitled.

Q. A. GILLMORE,
Colonel of Engineers and Bvt. Maj. Gen., U. S. A.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent, and hope the gentleman from Kentucky will yield to me, to have printed in the RECORD this itemized statement of the report of the Mississippi River Commission, showing their annual expenses for the years 1881–'82. The regular annual appropriation for the commission is $150,000. This is the last itemized report that has been printed, and is a sample of the annual reports. I ask consent to have it published in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

PROGRESS OF SURVEYS AND EXAMINATIONS.

Pursuant to the requirements of the third section of the law organizing the commission, and in accordance with the programme outlined in the report of March 6, 1880, surveys and examinations have been continued during the past year. The report of November 25, 1881, noted the progress made in this branch of the commission's work to October 10, 1881, from which date to December 1, 1882, further progress is now reported.

Gauges.—Daily readings have been continued at the stations established by the commission, which, with readings collected from other sources, have been collated and plotted for comparison and study.

Triangulation.—No field work has been done since last report. The work previously executed has been partly adjusted and reduced.

Precise levels.—A line 90 miles in length has been run to connect the levels of the Coast Survey at Carrollton, La., with the tide-gauge on the Mississippi Sound, the establishment of which was noted in last report and which has since been in continuous operation. A line has also been run from Keokuk, Iowa, northward along the river to a point opposite Clinton, Iowa, a distance of about 170 miles. The final reduction of 450 miles previously run has been made in the office.

The completion of the series of tide-gauge records and the determination of mean Gulf level therefrom, which will require but a few months, will make available the data necessary to determine with accuracy the elevations above Gulf level of all points along the Mississippi River from Clinton, Iowa, to New Orleans, a distance of more than 1,600 miles.

Final topography and hydrography, the former, embracing a strip of land averaging nearly a mile in width on each bank of the river, has been completed from Saint Louis landing to a point about 10 miles above Vicksburg, a distance of 255 miles; from Warrenton, 8 miles below Vicksburg, to Thrasher's Point, a distance of 25 miles, and from Natchez to Hutchins's landing, a distance of 18 miles, making a total of 298 miles of river surveyed. Charts of the river (scale of $\frac{1}{10000}$) from Saint Louis Landing to Arkansas City, and from Greenville to Lake Providence, 27 in number and covering 160 miles of river, have been plotted in the office.

The preparation of the preliminary chart (one inch to a mile) has been continued, ten sheets having been drawn, making fourteen in all, and eleven published, extending from Cairo to Saint Louis landing, 360 miles. The charts of the Mississippi River from Donaldsonville to the passes, 175 miles, have been reduced to the same scale in six sheets, of which five have been published. The reduction was made by the Coast and Geodetic Survey at the expense of the commission.

Observations.—Daily discharge measurements were made from December, 1881, to December, 1882, at Paducah, on the Ohio River, and at Columbus, Helena, Hay's landing, and Red River landing on the Mississippi River. The parties engaged in this work were also charged with special studies of the effect of the flood on the bed and channel of the river. The value of these observations is very much enhanced by the fact that the flood which occurred during their continuance was of unprecedented magnitude.

In conjunction with the above work three parties were sent over the river from Cairo to Baton Rouge at the top of the flood, to obtain the fullest and best possible data as to the escape of water from the river by flow over banks and through outlets and crevasses, and also to investigate the amount and direction of the discharge through the swamps. The final reduction of the observations of last year on the Upper Mississippi and a part of the above mentioned has been made in the office.

High-water marks and slope.—Two parties are now in the field, one engaged in determining elevations of the floods of 1881 and 1882, the other in determining the slope of the river at the present low water from Commerce Cut-off to Natchez, a distance of 400 miles.

Trans-alluvial levels.—The flood of last year compelled a suspension and retarded the completion of the lines designed to give needed information as to the heights of the alluvial bottom lands and their reservoir capacity. The party is again in the field and will probably complete the lines during the present season.

In addition to the usual financial statement, itemized statements of expenditures from the appropriations of June 30, 1879, June 16, 1880, and March 3, 1881, will be found below.

The following papers relating to the work of surveys and examinations are submitted as appendices to this report:

Appendix A.—Annual report of the secretary of the commission upon the field work of surveys.

Appendix B.—Report upon, and final results of, secondary triangulation from Helena Island to Greenville.

Appendix C.—Report upon, and final results of, precise leveling from Friar's Point to Greenville and from Cairo to Columbus.

Appendix D.—Report upon observations at Lake Providence, Louisiana, from November, 1879, to November, 1880.

Appendix E.—Report upon observations at Carrollton from December, 1879, to November, 1880.

Appendix F.—Results of observations at six stations on the Upper Mississippi River from October, 1880, to October, 1881.

Appendix G.—Report upon field work of topography.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise, that I may ask the House to limit debate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move an amendment, that the committee rise and report the instructions which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill under consideration be reported back to the House with a recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, with instructions not to report it back until the Secretary of War shall furnish this House with an itemized account of the expenditures for the improvement of the Mississippi River and levees along its banks from July 1, 1879, to January 16, 1884; also, inform the House whether the urgency of the demand for this bill has not arisen from expenditures in excess of the sums heretofore appropriated by Congress for the purpose of the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to inquire whether the proposition which has just been read is a debatable one.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not debatable. A motion to rise is not debatable.

Mr. ELLIS. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELLIS. Can the propositions be separated? I mean the proposition to rise from the proposition to instruct.

The CHAIRMAN. A division of the question can be made.

Mr. ELLIS. Then I ask a separate vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky on the left [Mr. WHITE]—no question being raised as to its admissibility—would naturally be taken separately from the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] on the right.

Mr. ELLIS. That is what I wish to get at.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE], that the committee rise and report back the bill with the recommendation which the Clerk has just read.

The question being taken on Mr. WHITE'S amendment, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 36, noes 170.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Mississippi River appropriation bill; and pending that motion, I move that all debate upon the pending amendment and all amendments to the bill be limited to five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why does the gentleman say "on all amendments?"

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know of any others.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer one other amendment to the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I confine the motion to limiting debate on the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Mississippi River appropriation bill; and pending that motion the gentleman moves that all debate upon the pending amendment be limited to five minutes. The question is first on the latter motion.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1038) making appropriations for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumes the consideration of the Mississippi River appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON. It would give me great pleasure to have a little more time than five minutes, because I may be attacked elsewhere for the vote I give here in favor of the improvement of the Mississippi River.

I give my vote on constitutional grounds in favor of this improvement. I give my vote in favor of this measure, because I believe that it is for the improvement of the navigation of the river and not for the reclamation of the lands of the proprietors.

Whether this bill will operate as favorably as its friends suppose I am no more certain than the gentleman from Indiana. Possibly he and I will agree in that, yet we will hope that it will be successful. I have not voted—I never have voted when a member of the other branch of the Federal Government—to ask the money of the people, to "unlock the Treasury of the people," to use the words of my friend from Colorado, and squander it all over the little rivers and harbors of this country. I shall never vote to do that.

Now, as to the amendment of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as an original proposition it would receive my vote, but as a proposition made to-day I can not vote for it. Last year it would have been proper. Last year was the time to confine this work to one great reach, and that would have been eminently proper. But as I understand it there are improvements upon two or more reaches of the river. There are plants of the Government in this place and that place and another place. Now, then, it would be in my judgment great folly—I say it with all deference and without meaning or intending to injure my friend's feelings—it would be great folly to undertake to expend this money upon one point alone; and therefore I oppose that amendment, and hope it will be voted down and all other amendments that may be offered that will tend to cripple this policy which we regard as important for the improvement of this great river.

Mr. WILLIS. I now call for a vote.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. Is it competent for me now to offer an amendment to this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending, offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. BELFORD. Then if the gentleman will allow me I will move to strike out the last two words, because I wish to make some remarks in reference to speeches made here to-day. I ask the consent of the committee to occupy its time for five minutes on my amendment, for I can not get any in any other way.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate has been closed on the pending amendment; but an amendment to the amendment will be in order.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The five-minutes' debate allowed by order of the House upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point of order is that an amendment to the amendment is in order, and will be open to debate. I therefore move to strike out the last word, my object being merely to say one thing.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that I will be allowed to say (although not directly on the point of order) that while I did not answer my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] when he asked a question which I did not think parliamentary as to how I would vote in the contingency named, still, not wishing to occupy a position of any uncertainty on this subject, I deem this proposition of so much moment, in view of the vast interests involved in the expenditures of the future and the general importance of the subject, that I should feel it my duty to vote for the bill if the pending amendment should be adopted. That is all I wish to say, and therefore I will not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to raise a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw it, having said all I wanted to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to overrule the point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. It has required twenty minutes for my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to ascertain in his own mind whether he would vote for the pending bill if his amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order on the pending amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN; and upon a division there were—ayes 134, noes 150.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. ANDERSON called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLIS and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 100, noes 132.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of members of the committee to the rule of the House against smoking in the Hall. Many gentlemen have complained to the Chair that that rule is broken. The Chair will have the rule read for the information of members of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause. (Rule XIV, clause 7.)

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That said money appropriation be expended upon what are known as Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches, except so far as may be necessary to preserve the property of the United States and preserve other work already commenced, but not to further extend the same."

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe that the last House was unanimous, at least substantially so, in favor of the limitation upon the use of the money which might be appropriated to these two reaches. I have had occasion to allude to the report which was made by the special committee which investigated this subject, and I think I am right in saying that that committee was unanimous in recommending that the money appropriated should be expended on the two reaches named in my amendment. I believe that those members of the committee who dissented from the majority upon other matters concurred with the majority upon this proposition.

It seems to me that the friends of the Mississippi River, if we are willing to give them this money, can not object to having it applied at the two points only to which the expenditures already made have in the main been made.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Gentlemen who are so active in urging the passage of this bill throw out the insinuation that those who are opposed to it do not understand it. We certainly are very much obliged to them for giving us not only their understanding of the bill but also our understanding of it.

It may be true that an amendment embracing three lines came here from the Senate, but it does not appear in the printed bill upon our files. Nevertheless that does not alter the proposition which I laid down, that this bill in its purpose and its spirit has for its object the constructing of levees along the Mississippi River.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend will permit me to say that we are now considering a Senate bill.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I understand that; but notwithstanding the amendment put upon that bill by the Senate, I claim that the ultimate object of the bill is what I have stated.

Now, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] put this matter rightly when he asked, Shall we have improved levees as an adjunct of the improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. KING. I never made any such proposition as improved levees, but levees to improve the river and protect commerce.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. If the object can be reached in no other way, why not say so frankly and stand there? The gentleman from Michigan tells the House that he has investigated this matter fully and that it is an experiment. The gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of this Committee on Rivers and Harbors, says that the occasion is an emergency. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] says, shall we have improved levees as an adjunct of the improvement of the Mississippi River? The gentleman from Arkansas says there is nothing in the bill except a provision for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. Remember, whatever sum we appropriate the Mississippi River Commission will have charge of it. Remember, moreover, that the commission considers that to improve the Mississippi you must raise the levees, not dredge the river. The President says the floods are coming. The preamble to the joint resolution which we are considering says the floods are coming. Nothing is said about the improvement of the navigation of the river. If the bill is intended for improvement solely, why not say so? If it is intended to provide for an emergency—the floods—why not say so? I would vote for it under either proposition. But if it is for the improvement of the river, with incidental protection of the levees along the river, why not say that? The resolution is drawn very much after the pattern, "Long enough for any man and short enough for any boy." You pay your money and take your choice.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I took occasion the other day to remark that the Treasury Department was under the domination of New York interests. I am beginning to believe to-day that the House is under the same domination, as we have my amiable friend from New York [Mr. COX] in the chair, the distinguished gentleman to my left [Mr. HISCOCK] addressing the House, and another gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] availing himself of two occasions to do so.

I desire to say that this bill ought to pass, that this money ought to be appropriated. The policy of this Government with reference to appropriations for rivers and harbors began in 1802, when we appropriated $30,000. Then the Democratic party came into power and announced the great doctrine that this Government should not enter upon the work of internal improvements. In the last Congress we appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River $8,705,000. We went before the people as a broad, a liberal, a generous party, and the Democrats all over the country assailed us and attempted to prejudice the people against us. I hope it will be demonstrated to-day that the Democratic party, instead of being the friend of the West and the South, is their bitter and determined enemy, so far as regards the advancement of their prosperity.

What is this Mississippi Valley? In its very bosom are 14,000 miles of navigable rivers. In its bosom live thirty millions of the people of this great nation, the people who are contributing to its wealth and advancing its prosperity in every direction. There is not a railroad in the whole United States capable of transporting its commerce. As was remarked by the gentleman from Michigan in the last Congress, if we should build a railroad around the world and put a car on every hundred feet of it we could not transport the commerce of this Republic. And here with a locked-up Treasury, with a hundred millions of idle capital under the watchful care of the generous gentleman from New York, we have spent two days higgling over the question whether or not we will make an appropriation of $1,000,000 to secure the homes of the people in this great Mississippi Valley where thirty millions of them reside.

I say that since the beginning of this Government 95 per cent. of the appropriations made by Congress have gone for the benefit of Pennsylvania, New York, and New England. I call upon my Southern friends and my Western friends to demand that in the distribution of the money that we contribute to the Treasury we shall have our just and equal share.

Mr. POTTER. I rise to renew the amendment which was withdrawn, and to say that in my judgment it is time to heed the caution that comes from the chief engineer of a great work, by which it is proposed to enter upon a plan of improvement or to commit the country to a plan of improvement which may end in the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars and at last in injury to the very people and territory that it is sought to benefit.

If I understand the recommendation of the chief engineer it is that the money expended shall be upon such part of this work as shall test fairly and fully, not by some temporary and partial success, the great plan of improvement to which we are now by this amendment, at least in part, to commit the country.

In my judgment, sir, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to prevail. I can not possibly see how the friends of this improvement, and I am one of the friends of this improvement, should not vote for that amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to my colleague sending me over into Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. POTTER. I beg my friend's pardon. I say, when the chief engineer of the work gives you caution it is time to heed that caution. I have never known an engineer—such is the love and the fascination of engineering—I have never known an engineer to give a caution such as comes from the chief engineer of this work that was not grounded in sound reason.

Mr. KING. Allow me to say to the gentleman——

Mr. POTTER. And I venture the prediction if this work shall go on——

Mr. KING. Allow me——

Mr. POTTER. Not now.

Mr. KING. The chief engineer has nothing to do with the work. It is under the commission exclusively, except the expenditure of money. All moneys are drawn in the usual way through the War Department. I should like to know where the gentleman gets that report of the Chief of Engineers. He has made no such report.

Mr. POTTER. I do not propose to be interrupted now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have heard from the friends of this improvement, from the beginning to the end, the argument that this is recommended by the unanimous engineering talent of the country. That has been so claimed from the beginning to the end, and I reply to that that the chief engineer of this work himself says that the improvement should be confined to a part of the work until the plan can be fully tested. I claim that is sensible, that it is reasonable, that it is a proper limitation to put upon this appropriation, and I call upon those who are friendly to this great improvement to accept that limitation. Let it be done, and let it appear this plan of improvement can be successful, and the entire country, every part of the country, will vote to carry on the work, and will not be appalled by one hundred millions or more.

But, sir, let us not commence this improvement, let us not commit ourselves to a plan of improvement against which the chief engineer of the work himself cautions us, and especially when we remember that in the nature of engineering—when from the very nature of engineering, such is the attraction to engineers, that it is impossible for them to enter a caution like this unless there is sound reason for it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that the House is already thoroughly informed on the subject-matter of this amendment and of all other amendments. My friend from New York who has just taken his seat has made a speech based on a misapprehension. The Chief of Engineers has no control over this appropriation. It is not expended under him. It is entirely within the control of the Mississippi River Commission, and I say to him that commission has unanimously reported in favor of this appropriation.

Mr. ELLIS. Will my friend from Kentucky allow me to say a word?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLIS. I call the attention of the honorable gentleman from New York to all of the testimony of General Wright, not to a garbled portion, not to the part which will suit the convenience of the opponents of this bill, but to all of it, and what is it?

Several MEMBERS. Read it.

A MEMBER. What has that to do with it?

Mr. ELLIS. It has much to do with it, as the gentleman will see.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It was alleged that the Chief Engineer had nothing to do with this.

Mr. ELLIS. Let me go on. Here is the way General Wright talks:

Question. Your observations, then, led you to believe that the work in progress by the commission is in the right direction, and so far justifies the object of its creation?

Answer. I certainly think so.

Q. Can you state any particular feature of the work at Plum Point or Providence reach where the object of the creation of the commission and its work seems to be answered—where the results seem to respond to it?

A. So far as these works intended for the contraction of the river have progressed they seem to be effecting their object. They are only partially carried out, and of course full results have not been obtained. The works for the protection of the banks are also in progress. These works are the same as those applied at other points in the river above Cairo and in the Missouri River, where they have proved successful. Perhaps I should say further that one ground of my confidence in the character of the works for the contraction of the river, and for the protection of the banks that are now in progress, is that they are the same as have been applied notably on the river between Cairo and Saint Louis, where they have been entirely successful.

Q. They have been entirely successful there, have they?

A. They have been entirely successful.

Q. Has not this same system of works been applied to works on the Missouri, where the same feature of shifting channel and currents moving upon the banks and the sudden formation of bars presented themselves as in the Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir; the works are of the same character.

Q. Have these works stood, sir?

A. Wherever completed. In certain cases they have failed, where want of appropriations has prevented their being finished before a rise in the river.

Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say with reference to the amendment of the gentleman from New York that it is embraced in the existing law, is referred to in the very bill we are now discussing, and if we pass this bill the money appropriated under it is expended as the bill itself states, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, created by the act, &c., approved June 28, 1879.

I ask now that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me answer the gentleman by saying that if it is entirely clear that my amendment is embodied in the existing law to which he refers, and I am frank to say that I have grave doubts upon that subject, it will do no harm to attach to this bill the proviso which I have sent to the Clerk's desk. I have examined the law to which he refers, and I do not believe that that will limit the expenditure of this money in the manner I have suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3531) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill named; and pending that, I move that all debate upon the bill and amendments thereto be limited to five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman in charge of the bill will yield to us, in favor of the amendment which I have offered, ten minutes. Certainly we have not attempted to obstruct the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to the gentleman from New York that fully two hours to one in the debate on this bill have been consumed by the opponents of the bill as compared with the time taken up by its friends. Upon yesterday, when I made the motion to limit debate, some gentleman on that side suggested that several members desired to be heard in opposition to it, and in accordance with that request I withdrew my motion and allowed the debate to run. We have now been discussing it for two days, and I think the committee is fully informed upon the subject.

Mr. HISCOCK. But it is now half past 4 o'clock, and there is no intention of obstructing the passage of the bill. All that we ask is a fair and full discussion, and now we want ten minutes on this side upon the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I will accept the proposition of the gentleman from New York to limit debate upon the bill and amendments to ten minutes.

Mr. ELLIS. How is that time to be apportioned?

Mr. HISCOCK. We have ten minutes in favor of the amendment.

Mr. HUNT. The time should be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. Gentlemen on that side can consume as much time as they please. We ask simply ten minutes on our part.

Mr. ELLIS. Let the time be divided equally, or let us give ten minutes to those opposed to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. We want only ten minutes altogether.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand the gentleman from New York to say that he does not propose to obstruct a vote upon the bill after ten minutes' discussion upon his amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Oh, no; ten minutes to discuss the amendment of the gentleman from New York. There may be other amendments.

Mr. GIBSON. Then I do not consent.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask only ten minutes in favor of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that to be conceded by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WILLIS. My motion was to limit the debate upon the bill and amendments to five minutes. The gentleman from New York suggested ten minutes, to be consumed in favor of his amendment. I accepted that proposition.

Mr. WASHBURN. Limiting debate upon all amendments to ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The only motion that can now be made under the rule is to limit debate upon the pending amendment or paragraph. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that all debate upon the pending amendment or paragraph of the bill be limited to ten minutes, with the understanding that that time is to be controlled by the advocates of the pending amendment.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending amendment is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield five minutes of the time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I must say upon reflection, and I do it after careful consideration, that I think the friends of the Mississippi River improvement ought to accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York. This amendment is directly in the line of what I understand to be the object we are attempting to reach. In the bill framed by the committee in the last session of the last Congress, which passed the House but did not pass the Senate, we had substantially this same proposition. It was inserted, as I now recollect it, for this reason: many members of that House, and I find not a few of the same way of thinking here to-day, looked upon this great undertaking as a simple experiment, and some of them as a very doubtful experiment.

Now, it was thought best to subject two of the important reaches of the river to the test and apply the bulk of the appropriations to them until they should be completed, and then, if they proved a success, there would be no further objection to the other large improvements and appropriations that would follow. If they proved a failure, we would ascertain that fact before we had expended any more money than was absolutely necessary. The two reaches selected in that bill are the same ones named in the amendment now under discussion, and I understand that the commission for the past year has devoted most of its time and attention to those reaches.

I speak as a friend of the Mississippi River; I speak as one who is not afraid of the bugbear of levees. I believe that stream will never be improved, as I said yesterday, until it is perfectly leveed on its banks. But people doubt that; there is a great deal of feeling in the country upon that question. It is the real cause of objection to this bill here to-day. Why not, then, accept this amendment? It will not interfere in the least with the great work being carried forward to completion.

I opposed the amendment of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] because he sought to confine the work to simply one reach. I desire the commission to go on with their entire plan, and I thought his amendment tended to defeat the real object of this bill. I sometimes think my friend from Indiana makes and moves amendments simply as a congenital habit. I have sometimes thought that if he had had the power he would have moved to amend himself when he was created. [Laughter.] But knowing, as I now do, the gentleman's beauty and perfection of character, had it been in my power I would have opposed that amendment as strenuously as the one he offered to this bill. [Continued laughter.]

But this amendment of my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is in the line, I think, of good business common sense. It does not hamper this great work; it permits the commission to improve and take care of the Memphis Harbor, the New Orleans Harbor, the Vicksburg Harbor, or any other work on the river which requires attention and care during the time that this $1,000,000 is being expended. Now, I say to my friends who favor this great enterprise, is not that proposition a fair one? Accept it, and we can pass this bill, in my judgment, in five minutes. I hope that you understand my motive. I have been compelled to say this simply because I believe that it is in the interest of this great work, and believing that, I must express my earnest convictions; and let me simply add that I do hope the gentleman with whom I have worked so long and pleasantly in our endeavors to inaugurate this improvement will concede this much to many members here who really favor this appropriation but think this limitation necessary. Of course I shall vote for the bill in either event, but shall feel pleased to have the amendment carry, and shall vote accordingly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Remarks have been made upon the floor here at least by one gentleman—and I do not care to be more particular than that—to the effect that New York is opposed to internal improvements; that New York is in favor of locking up the Treasury. Now, sir, New York is in favor of internal improvements. New York votes millions of her own money for internal improvements, and New York is willing that money shall be taken from the Treasury for internal improvements; but she wants to know that this money is to be expended for internal improvements and is not to be expended for the benefit of private property. The proposition which is now tendered is to test the plan, to pick out the two places upon which the most money has been expended, to devote this money to completion of the work at those places, and if it proves a success no New York member will stand in the way of liberal appropriations for the commerce and for the navigation of the Mississippi River.

But what we want, sir, is to have it demonstrated that this is not a great scheme for the benefit of the alluvial lands that are on either side of the Mississippi River. And I say to you gentlemen on the other side that when you oppose this amendment, when you leave it so there is a chance to have it said that this money may be scattered from one end of the Mississippi to the other to strengthen her weakened levees, you are affording reasons and grounds for our questioning the object of the bill and of the appropriation. As has been well said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR], test the work, test the plan, and if the work and the plan prove a success, there will no longer be objection on this floor, either in this or in any future Congress, to give such money as may be needed for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

I say to you, on the other hand, if your object be the improvement of these alluvial lands, then defeat this amendment. It proves that you are unwilling to have the plan tested, that you are unwilling to have time enough elapse, if you please, to let the people fully understand whether this plan may be a success or not. It means that you propose to put through legislation and get money here, as I said at the outset, protection to lands being the main purpose and the improvement of navigation simply incidental to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], which the Clerk will read.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 135, noes 152.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 104, noes 110.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River, had directed him to report the same back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. COX, of New York, further reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3531) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River, had directed him to report the same back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the question will first be on the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the Senate bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order now to move to commit the bill with instructions to the committee to report it back with the amendment which I proposed in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the gentleman from New York has the right to make that motion pending the motion for the previous question or after the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move to commit the bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, with instructions to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Provided said money appropriation be expended on what are known as Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches, except so far as may be necessary to preserve the property of the United States and to preserve other work already commenced and not to further extend the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon adopting the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question being put, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIS. Pending that I move that the House adjourn. I understand the Hall is desired to-night for a caucus.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] can not make that motion while the House is voting.

The SPEAKER. The House was not voting. The gentleman from New York had demanded the yeas and nays, and then the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moved that the House adjourn. The demand for the yeas and nays will of course be pending if the House should now adjourn.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: Papers relating to the claim of Charles M. Cunningham—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the pension claim of Josiah Elkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: The petition of Thomas F. Smith & Miller, and Charles M. Smith, for compensation for legal services performed by order of the supreme court of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUCHANAN: Papers relating to the improvement of the Chattahoochee River below Columbus and between West Point and Bolton, in the State of Georgia—severally to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, paper relating to the establishment of a post-route in Georgia—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BUCKNER: Paper of Herman T. Hesse, relating to the reorganization of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Papers relating to the claim of Stewart College, Clarksville, Tenn.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLARDY: Memorial of the Ladies' Seamen's Friend Society of the port of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the passage of a law requiring the masters of American ships to pay and discharge in foreign ports such sailors as desire to be paid and discharged—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COBB: The petition of Abraham Gimble and other citizens of Vincennes, Ind., for an appropriation to pay the tobacco rebate—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DARGAN: The petition of citizens of South Carolina, for an appropriation to continue the improvement of the Great Pee Dee River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 17, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 113) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive, for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, Antonio Barrios, of Guatemala, and José Victor Zavala, of Nicaragua; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ERIE MARINE HOSPITAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a letter from the secretary of state of the State of Pennsylvania, dated November 26, 1883, inclosing a duly authenticated copy of an act of the Legislature of the State entitled "An act to provide for the preservation, use, custody, and disposition of the marine hospital at Erie, and making an appropriation for the repair of the same," approved July 5, 1883, and tendering to the United States Government, on behalf of the governor, in pursuance of the provisions of the act, the said marine hospital for use as a soldiers and sailors' home.

The papers having upon their receipt been referred by me to the Secretary of War, I inclose also his letter of the 12th instant returning the same, together with a report of Capt. Edward Maguire, Corps of Engineers, dated the 10th ultimo, giving a description of the property referred to, and expressing his views as to its adaptability for a soldiers and sailors' home.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 16, 1884.

THE HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Scretary of the Interior, dated the 11th instant, suggesting further action by Congress in the matter of granting leases of bath-houses and bath-house sites at the Hot Springs reservation, Arkansas.

The subject is presented for the consideration of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 16, 1884.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the message and accompanying communication be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and printed. It relates to a matter in which the United States is particularly interested.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, submitting reports from Col. G. Weitzel, Corps of Engineers, of the results of surveys, under his direction, of certain portions of the Delaware, Susquehanna, and Brandywine Rivers, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 113) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Antonio Barrios, of Guatemala, and José Victor Zavala, of Nicaragua, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the American Public Health Association in favor of an appropriation for a fire-proof building for the Army medical museum and library of the Surgeon-General's Office, located in Washington, D. C.; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented three resolutions adopted at meetings of the American Public Health Association in favor of the enactment of a law prohibiting foreign defective and criminal people from coming into the United States, &c.; which was referred to the Select Committee to Investigate and Report the Best Means of Preventing the Introduction and Spread of Epidemic Diseases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents to the Senate the memorial of WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG, now a member of the House of Representatives, on the subject of statements contained in papers accompanying a report from the Secretary of the Interior of the date of the 13th of December, 1883, relating to the transfer by the Texas Pacific Railroad Company of its land grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, in which the memorialist, referring to one of the papers connected with the transaction, denies all imputations contained in those letters, and asks that an investigation may be had. This memorial being in the nature of an answer to certain printed documents which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, the Chair thinks it should properly be printed and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I have this morning received a memorial from the Astoria Chamber of Commerce, of Astoria, Oreg., praying for an appropriation of $500,000 for the improvement of the entrance of the Columbia River.

The question of the improvement of the Columbia River is a matter of great importance, not only to the people of Oregon and of Washington and Idaho Territories, but to the commerce of the entire world. I have already introduced into the Senate a bill making an appropriation of the amount specified, $500,000, for the commencement of the work upon that improvement, and, if it shall be the pleasure of the Senate, at some future time I shall submit some statistics in regard to the commerce of the Columbia River and the Northwest, and some facts in regard to that most interesting portion of our country which, in my judgment, demand that the necessary appropriation for the commencement of that work should be immediately made.

The Columbia River in magnitude is the second river in the United States. It drains an area of 395,000 square miles, and with its tributaries extends for thirteen degrees in latitude and twelve degrees in longitude. It is navigable, with interruptions, for 725 miles, and its navigable waters extend to within 450 miles of the navigable waters of the Missouri. This vast empire, in extent, of 395,000 square miles has vast resources which have but begun to be developed, and yet, as this memorial will show, the commerce of the Columbia River is already great and is being rapidly increased. The memorial itself is brief, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon presents a memorial on the subject of the improvement of the Columbia River and asks that it may be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be reported.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Astoria Chamber of Commerce, of the city of Astoria, State of Oregon, respectfully petition your honorable body to make an appropriation of $500,000 to improve the entrance to the Columbia River in accordance with the recommendations and plans embodied in the report of a special committee of the board of engineers of the United States.

In urging that this work may be undertaken as speedily as possible this chamber calls your attention to the following important facts:

The commerce of the Columbia River is now increasing at a ratio of 25 per cent. annually, with a probability of a still greater increase.

During the year 1883 the entrances and clearances at the custom-house at Astoria were as follows:

Deep-water vessels, under register in foreign trade, arriving (both foreign and United States vessels), 110; tonnage, 118,076. Departing, 81; tonnage, 82,608.

Entrances coastwise, 339; tonnage, 488,594. Clearances, 318; tonnage, 463,716.

Value of imports brought over Columbia River bar in 1883: Domestic, $27,668,787; foreign, $1,177,404.

Value of exports for same year: Domestic, $6,212,512; foreign, $6,178,869 (lumber exports not included).

Your memorialists respectfully submit to your honorable body that, in view of its present as well as future commercial importance, the improvement of the Columbia River bar is the most necessary work contemplated in the Northwest.

We would especially call attention to the fact that the present state of the Columbia River bar is detrimental to the interests of American ship-owners.

Nearly all foreign vessels are iron, and American, wood. To be profitable to the producer, the grain of this coast, in view of the length of the voyage, must be carried to a foreign market in large vessels.

No vessel can now cross the Columbia River bar under the most favorable circumstances drawing over 22 feet. The large American vessel drawing 23 feet to 26 feet feet can not, therefore, load to her full capacity, but is compelled to clear with no more freight than the British vessel drawing from 20 to 22 feet. Shippers are obliged, therefore, to employ foreign vessels to carry our produce to Europe.

Of the 81 vessels clearing from this port, foreign, with grain, in 1883, only 12 were American bottom. Most of the vessels leave outward bound in the winter months, when the bar is roughest, and frequently have to wait for weeks for a smooth bar. This delay is solely due to want of proper depth. No lightering can be done here outside the bar, as is done in some other ports.

Your memorialists deem the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia to be a work of national importance, not simply because during the year just ended 838 vessels, with cargoes aggregating over $41,000,000 (to say nothing of the value of the vessels), have crossed and recrossed its bar, but also on account of the vast area of tillable lands that surrounds the headwaters of its numerous tributaries, which are as yet almost unsettled, but which will be occupied in the near future.

A sufficient depth of water is wanted and can be obtained on the bar to allow vessels drawing 26 feet to cross without delay in order to meet the requirements of commerce.

In conclusion, your memorialists respectfully ask that this be made a special appropriation, as the appropriation made for the improvement of the Columbia and Willamette Rivers is not construed by the United States engineers to include or apply to the mouth of the river.

Passed the chamber December 28, 1883.

Attest:

E. C. HOLDERS, Secretary.

Mr. HOAR. In addition to the printing in the RECORD, which will be the result of the reading of the memorial at the desk, I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I present a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Saint Albans, Vt., officially signed, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Vermont that such petitions, he is informed at the desk, have hitherto been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well; I have no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. INGALLS. I present a petition numerously signed by residents of the District of Columbia, praying that a woman deputy warden may be appointed at the jail of the District. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I also present certain affidavits and other papers relating to the claim of Isaac A. Meyer, for whose relief a bill has been introduced and referred to the Committee on Claims. I move that these papers be referred to the same committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of William H. Gill, of Texas, praying compension for property taken by officers of the United States: which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAYARD. I present a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Delaware, which was sent to me with a request that I should present it to the Senate, respecting the regulation of the liquor traffic. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Delaware that similar petitions have hitherto been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BAYARD. I am content with that reference, although I consider that, as a question affecting the revenues of the country, the Committee on Finance is the proper committee to take charge of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will of course entertain a motion of the Senator from Delaware to refer the petition to the Committee on Finance. Does the Senator from Delaware desire the reference to the Committee on Finance?

Mr. BAYARD. I presume from the appearance of this petition that it is one of a circular nature, which is sent everywhere; it is in print, and seems to be filled in, in each case, with the same handwriting; and if the reference of similar petitions has been made to the Committee on Education and Labor, perhaps they, having taken consideration of it, can deal with it quite as well as the other committee named. It had been my judgment, not hearing that any other similar petitions had been so referred, that a matter which touched so seriously the revenues of the country ought to go to the Finance Committee; but if other petitions of a similar kind have been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, I am content with that reference.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that the bill which passed the Senate at the last Congress was reported by the Committee on Finance, and a bill in the same terms is now before that committee which I suppose will be reported at an early day. At the same time if there is any other committee that really desires this subject, I have no objection to their having it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred, if there be no objection, to the Committee on Education and Labor. It is so referred.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Hampshire, officially signed, representing 1,200 members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Maine, officially signed, representing 20,000 members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of the Good Templars of the State of New York, officially signed, representing 27,000 members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 42) authorizing certain officers of the Navy to accept presents from foreign powers; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1115) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes relating to the recovery of damages for the infringement of patents, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1139) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1140) for the relief of Lieut. George W. Kingsbury; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLAIR. At the request of the National Temperance Society I ask leave to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. 1141) to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1142) to establish a board of interstate commerce, prescribe its duties, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. SEWELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1143) for the relief of Rebecca Burdsall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1144) granting a pension to John W. Wright; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1145) to confirm the title of the residents thereof to the town or community grant of the town of Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for the allotment and disposition of the lands in said grant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1146) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Annapolis, Md.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1147) to complete the military record of Alexander Fisher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1148) for the relief of William B. Moses; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1149) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1150) granting a pension to Julia A. Ross; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1151) to amend section 4400 of the Revised Statutes so that vessels under five tons burden and for private purposes and not carrying passengers for hire shall not be subject to license; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALKER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1152) to incorporate the United States Gas, Electric Light and Fuel Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1153) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the rightful owners the contents of certain boxes deposited in the Treasury Department by the Secretary of War; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask the reference of the bill with the accompanying papers to the Committee on Finance. I would state in connection with it that I introduced a similar bill in the last Congress for the purpose of restoring to certain parties in my State some articles of silverware and other articles that had been deposited by the Secretary of War in the vaults of the Treasury for safe-keeping soon after the war. In an examination of the boxes at that time I found quite a number of articles with the names of the owners on them, which are of no earthly value to anybody except to the owners themselves, among others some miniatures, photographs, and things of that kind. The Secretary of the Treasury did not think at that time that under the bill which passed the Senate he had the authority to deliver those boxes. This bill, I hope, is full enough to justify the Finance Committee to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to restore all those articles, and I will ask my friend the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] if he will be kind enough to take charge of the bill, as he did the other bill, and have the articles restored to these poor people. I move that the bill with the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1154) to increase the pension of Anne S. Mellach; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1155) to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national banking associations; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to have the bill read at length. It is very short.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That upon a deposit of any United States bonds bearing interest in the manner required by law, any national banking association making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations in blank, registered and countersigned, as provided by law, not exceeding in amount the par value of the bonds deposited: Provided, That at no time shall the total amount of such notes issued to any such association exceed the amount at such time actually paid in of its capital stock; and that all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1156) to secure reasonable rates of transportation to the people over railroads aided by the issue of United States bonds and public lands; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It may be proper that I should state that this should be considered as a substitute for a bill which I inadvertently introduced instead of it a few days ago. The House bill was presented for reference in this body, and upon examining it I preferred to make some amendments and incorporate them in a new bill, but in the haste I took the House bill instead of the one which I had prepared for that purpose. The House bill provided for the system of roads that had received United States bonds. I can see no reason why the same regulation should not extend to all railroads of that nature, whether they were aided by United States bonds or by public lands.

I do not say that this is the best bill that can be offered on this subject, but it is presented with a view of inaugurating some proceedings on behalf of Congress, which alone can reach this system of railroads, to meet the demand on the part of the people that they shall have some regulation of this kind. When Congress inaugurated and chartered these roads it supposed that it was providing for the very thing which we are seeking to do to-day: that in providing for a northern, a central, and a southern line to the Pacific it was establishing a system of roads which would form a natural competition. But the result has been that there is a combination on the part of the roads which has defeated what was supposed to be the wise purpose of Congress; and now, when the railroads year after year are partitioning, as they call it, their territory, when they divide it and make a partition of that great empire nearly as perfect as was the partition of Poland, it becomes the duty of Congress to interpose and protect the people, who are asking at this time that they shall be protected from the unjust, oppressive, and despotic extortion of this line of railroads. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1157) to appropriate $24,000 to complete the navigable channel through Romley Marsh, in the State of Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BOWEN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of H. A. W. Taber be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. BAYARD, it was Ordered, That the papers on file with the Secretary of the Senate relating to the Sopori land grant be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

On moting of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be authorized to have printed for its use the testimony and views submitted on the subject of the bill (S. 698) to authorize the construction of additional steel vessels for the Navy.

THE NUESTRA SEÑORA DE REGLA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, that order of business will be closed.

Mr. MILLER, of California, rose.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to get the permission of the Senator from California to call up a bill that I do not think will excite any debate. It is the bill (S. 652) to carry into effect the decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York in the case of the Spanish ferry-boat Nuestra Señora de Regla. It is an old matter that has been hanging now for some three or four years.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I shall not object if it does not lead to discussion. If it leads to discussion, I must interpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be reported for information.

The bill was read; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report with the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee reports, the Chair is informed, an amendment. Is there a written report?

Mr. GARLAND. There is no written report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let there be an explanation made of the bill after the amendment is reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-one," it is proposed to insert "to the claimant and appellee therein named or its legal representative;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to make proper payment to carry into effect the decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, bearing date December 10, 1883, in the case of the Spanish ferry-boat Nuestra Señora de Regla, her tackle, &c., illegally seized by forces of the United States in 1861, to the claimant and appellee therein named, or its legal representative, with interest from the date of said decree.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to inquire, if there is no report from the committee on that subject, what is the date of the judgment and whether the time for an appeal or taking the case up has passed?

Mr. GARLAND. Over twenty years ago this boat was seized and condemned in the district court of New York. The case was brought to the Supreme Court, and the decree of condemnation reversed in an opinion reported in 17 Wallace. In the proceedings there some further questions were raised, and the case was brought again to the Supreme Court of the United States, and at its last term preceding the present they finally disposed of the case in the following words, which I will read:

Upon the facts in this case there can be no doubt of the propriety of such an allowance for the extraordinary detention of the vessel before she was delivered up for adjudication, especially since she was detained for the express purpose of use by the United States. And as to the amount of the allowance, there is no opportunity for discussion. The United States are willing and actually contracted to pay $200 a day for her use, &c.

Going on and stating the facts and different dates—

Our conclusion is that damages should be allowed as follows:

For unnecessary and unusual delay in proceeding to adjudication, 175 days at $200	$35,000
For value of vessel	30,000
In all	65,000

To which add interest, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, from the time of the order of restitution, June 20, 1863, until the decree.

The decree of the district court is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to enter another decree in accordance with this opinion.

I hold in my hand the other decree entered by the court below based upon this decree of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CONGER. And from that the case has not been taken to a higher court again?

Mr. GARLAND. There was no further appeal, and in fact no ground for it, for the district court simply follows the decree of the Supreme Court in so many words. The bill was amended by the committee to conform to the precedents heretofore made in allowing payments of this character with the interest. There are three precedents.

Mr. CONGER. I would inquire whether it is customary to allow interest upon a claim of this kind for damages?

Mr. GARLAND. The Supreme Court say they are entitled to 6 per cent. from 1875, from the day of the seizure.

Mr. CONGER. The bill provides for paying interest since that time?

Mr. GARLAND. From that time on until the recovery, whenever that may be. The Senator will find the precedents in volume 16 of the Statutes at Large, the case of the Sybil, the case of the Volante, and the Dashing Wave.

Mr. CONGER. From what committee does the report come?

Mr. GARLAND. From the Judiciary Committee, unanimously.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I did not object to the consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Arkansas at this time, although I was strongly tempted to do so. The Committee on Claims has reported twenty or thirty bills favorably that are now on the Calendar; and I think it is doing an injustice to those bills and the persons interested in them to pick up other bills on the Calendar and have them considered out of their order. I hope that we shall hereafter proceed regularly under the new rules and dispose of the business on the Calendar in accordance with those rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the new rules will not be in force until Monday next. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a request from the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] to be presented to the Senate, that he be excused from further service upon the Committee on Commerce, and in accordance with his request I move that he be excused from further service upon that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to excusing the Senator from California from further service upon the Committee on Commerce? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PENDLETON. I now move that the President of the Senate be authorized to fill the vacancy on that committee.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 686) to fix the time for holding the district court in the district of Maine at Bangor; and

A bill (S. 844) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SLATER a member of the Committee on Commerce, in place of Mr. FARLEY, excused.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 4 hours and 36 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 17, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 686) to fix the time for holding the district court in the district of Maine at Bangor.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT ERIE, PA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a copy of a letter from the secretary of state of the State of Pennsylvania, dated November 26, 1883, inclosing a duly authenticated copy of an act of the Legislature of that State, entitled "An act to provide for the preservation, use, custody, and disposition of the marine hospital at Erie, and making an appropriation for the repair of the same," approved July 5, 1883, and tendering to the United States Government on behalf of the governor, in pursuance of the provisions of the act, the said marine hospital for use as a soldiers and sailors' home.

The papers having, upon their receipt, been referred by me to the Secretary of War, I inclose also a copy of his letter of the 12th instant returning the same, together with a copy of the report of Capt. Edward Maguire, Corps of Engineers, dated the 10th ultimo, giving a description of the property referred to and expressing his views as to its adaptability for a soldiers and sailors' home.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 16, 1884.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 11th instant, suggesting further action by Congress in the matter of granting leases of bath-houses and bath-house sites at the Hot Springs reservation, Arkansas.

The subject is presented for the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 16, 1884.

SUSPENDED PRE-EMPTION ENTRIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting a list of suspended entries of public lands under the pre-emption laws; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LABOR STATISTICS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Superintendent of the Census, in response to the resolution of the House asking him to submit the report of Joseph D. Weeks, special agent in charge of statistics on wages and manufacturing industries; which was referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

GOLD AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in response to the resolution of the House calling for information in relation to the use of gold and silver certificates; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land claim of the town of Albuquerque; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

SAINT MARY'S CANAL, MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with inclosure, containing a draught of a bill for the government and control of Saint Mary's Canal, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION CONTEST—POOL VS. SKINNER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House papers in the contested-election case of C. C. Pool against T. G. Skinner, of the first Congressional district in North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Elections, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, for to-morrow, on account of business of importance.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, asked and obtained leave for the withdrawal from the files of the House papers relating to the claim of A. A. Low & Brother, for the payment of lost coupons on United States bonds; no adverse report.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3547) to amend an act approved February 24, 1879, entitled "An act to create the northern judicial district of the State of Texas and to change the eastern and western districts of said State, and to fix the time and places of holding courts in said districts;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TANNING EXTRACTS.

Mr. MORSE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 3548) repealing all duties on extract of hemlock and other barks used for tanning and placing the same upon the free-list; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

INDEX OF CLAIMS.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to continue the preparation of a digested summary and alphabetical list of the private claims presented to the House of Representatives, so as to include the unfinished portion of the Forty-seventh Congress and the Forty-eighth Congress; and the expense of performing the said work shall, under the direction of the Committee on Accounts, be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

STAR-ROUTE INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. BEACH. I ask consent to submit for present consideration the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, requested to transmit to this House all reports and papers of every kind and nature whatever referring to the star-route investigation made by special agents of the Post-Office Department to the Postmaster-General during the year 1881.

Mr. REED. Where does that resolution come from?

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I think it should go to a committee.

Mr. BEACH. It can be referred to a committee; but I would like to have it go on record that the objection came from the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to say that I do not object to the purpose of the resolution, but think that, like other smaller matters, it should be considered by a committee before adoption by the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is disposed of.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. WEAVER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3549) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within five miles of the town of Decatur, in the county of Burt, in the State of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICO.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back without amendment the following resolution; which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House any correspondence with the Mexican Government relative to the claims specified in the fifth section of the act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, and to inform the House if any payment or payments have been made on said claims; and, if so, at what date and of what amount.

2. Also, any letters from the Mexican minister at Washington or other correspondence or information in possession of the Department of State relating to the new condition of things created in Mexico since the railroads projected for communication with the United States, and all statistics and other data as to the present condition of our sister republic.

3. Also, any correspondence with the Governments of Mexico and Guatemala in reference to the boundary question between said republics, and any offer on the part of this Government to mediate on the same.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLARENCE W. DE KNIGHT.

Mr. GREEN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Clarence W. De Knight, for services rendered as page, the difference between the pay of a folder and that of a page from January 11 to June 30, 1882, the amount being $86.64.

CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

Mr. AIKEN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education be, and are hereby, authorized to employ a clerk.

REPORTS OF TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. KEIFER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 114) providing for the printing and distribution of the reports of the Tenth Census; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. KEIFER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 115) providing for the sale of public documents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 116) fixing the time when the pay of certain clerks to committees and other employés of the House of Representatives shall begin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ELLIS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the committees will be called for reports.

Mr. KEIFER. Unless there be some general wish to have the committees called this morning, I will move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands there are a few reports to be made.

Mr. KEIFER. I withdraw the suggestion.

REBATE OF TOBACCO TAX.

Mr. MORRISON. The Committee on Ways and Means, to which were referred certain resolutions calling for information as to the amount required to refund taxes on tobacco and cigars, have directed me to report the same back with a recommendation that they lie on the table, as the information proposed to be called for by the resolutions is already in the possession of the House in the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read, and, if there be no objection, laid on the table.

The following resolution, introduced on the 10th instant by Mr. FIEDLER, was read, and laid on the table:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to communicate to this House what amount of money is required to pay the rebate of taxes due to the dealers on unbroken packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco, cigars, &c., and when such information has been received the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, instructed to provide by bill or otherwise an appropriation necessary to discharge the obligation of the United States Government.

The following resolution, introduced December 11, 1883, by Mr. DEUSTER, was also read, and laid on the table:

Whereas the Forty-seventh Congress passed a law revising the tariff-list, whereby it was provided that a rebate, amounting in the aggregate to several million dollars, should be paid by the United States Government to the manufacturers and dealers in certain articles, notably tobacco, cigars, &c.; and

Whereas no provision was made by the Forty-seventh Congress in the form of an appropriation to repay the taxes thus required to be repaid to the manufacturers and dealers in the articles aforesaid; and

Whereas it is charged that a syndicate exists that is taking advantage of this neglect on the part of the Forty-seventh Congress to appropriate money to pay the rebate aforesaid, charging an exorbitant commission therefor, knowing that the Government will repay the rebate in full: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives with information as to the amount of money necessary to be appropriated in order to meet the demands against the Government on account of the rebate aforesaid.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hands several bills which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor before the division of that committee. I am instructed by the Committee on Education to report them back and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Education.

There being no objection, bills and joint resolution of the following titles, heretofore referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, were referred to the Committee on Education:

A bill (H. R. 11) to donate, in trust, the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands to the States and Territories to aid in the support of common schools;

Bills (H. R. 25, 645, and 1454) to aid in the support of common schools;

A bill (H. R. 1087) to establish schools in Alaska;

A bill (H. R. 1625) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey, by deed, to the board of education of the district of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., a lot of ground (numbered two in block B), with the buildings thereon; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 21) to donate one telescope, not in use, to Parson's College, Fairfield, Iowa, for scientific and educational purposes.

GRANDCHILD OF AUTHOR OF DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 999) granting a pension to the sole surviving grandchild of the author of the Declaration of Independence, with amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER submitted the views of the minority; which, by unanimous consent, were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the following cases; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of James N. Hunter;

The petition of Allen J. Holliday; and

The petition of Philip R. Jones.

Mr. FERRELL, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the following cases; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Richard L. Andrews, administrator of M. H. Battle, deceased;

The petition of Simeon S. Barrett;

The petition of Ransom Thompson;

The petition of E. P. McNeal;

The bill (H. R. 862) for the relief of Sidney Ballard;

The petition of Reuben B. Bass;

The petition of Peyton S. and John T. Warren; and

The petition of Lizzie Hamilton, administratrix of Charles D. Hamilton, deceased.

GEORGE P. WEBSTER.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. 2011) for the relief of George P. Webster; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OWNERS OF SCHOONER TWILIGHT.

Mr. GEDDES also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back joint resolution (H. Res. 33) to correct clerical errors in the resolution referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Twilight to the Court of Claims; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

The call of committees was then concluded.

STAR-ROUTE CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported back the following resolution, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to furnish the House of Representatives with copies of all correspondence between the Department of Justice and the Post-Office Department touching the prosecution of persons charged with frauds in connection with the star-route mail service, and a statement of the names of individuals found to be indebted to the United States and the amount of the indebtedness of each in consequence of such frauds, and also an itemized statement of the expenditures in the Post-Office Department from the 4th day of March, 1881, to the 1st day of January, 1884, in the investigation and prosecution of such frauds.

Mr. CALKINS. Of course I have no objection to the resolution except that there is a committee for the investigation of expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and it would seem that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice are calling for expenditures in the Post-Office Department in connection, as I understand the resolution, with that committee. I suggest whether it does not trench on the ground of another committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. CALKINS. I have no objection to it myself, but only call the attention of the House to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state in explanation that it is the duty of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to examine into the accounts and expenditures of that Department and also as to the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States, and this resolution relates to that branch of the public service which is required to be looked into, that is, the enforcement of payment of amounts due to the United States. It therefore is a subject properly coming under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL WOODIN.

Mr. SHELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3550) for the relief of Daniel Woodin, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. SCALES, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution, with amendment:

Resolved, That there be printed —— copies of the President's annual message for the use of the House.

Mr. SCALES. The committee recommend that the resolution be amended by filling the blank with "25,000." The estimated cost of the work is $225.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MICHAEL A. SMITH.

Mr. SMITH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3551) for the relief of Michael A. Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATES OF JAMES AND WILLIAM VANCE.

Mr. HANCOCK (through Mr. THROCKMORTON), by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3552) for the relief of the estates of James Vance and William Vance; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REAR-ADMIRAL SAMUEL P. CARTER.

Mr. CALDWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3553) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Samuel P. Carter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the further consideration of the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union made on yesterday; and the question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to commit the bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with certain instructions.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me for a moment to offer a resolution.

Mr. WILLIS. I will yield for a moment.

UNION AND CONFEDERATE NAVAL RECORDS.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to offer a short resolution of inquiry and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the House what progress has been made in the compilation of the Union and confederate naval records of the war of the rebellion and what steps are necessary to secure their speedy publication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMMEDIATE APPROPRIATION FOR MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. WILLIS. I now call up the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the question upon the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to commit this bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with the instructions contained in the resolution, upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; fifty members voting therefor.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KING. I do not think the House clearly understands the question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will the Speaker please explain the exact condition of the pending question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already twice stated the question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Several members around me have not been able to hear the question, and ask for information upon it.

The SPEAKER. The roll is now being called upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, which is to commit this bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with instructions to insert a proviso restricting the application of this appropriation to the improvement of Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches of the river.

Mr. GIBSON. But the resolution embraces still more, and I ask that it be read for the information of the House.

Mr. CALKINS. After the call of the roll has commenced it is too late to have the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. It is too late if objection is made.

Mr. CALKINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 161, not voting 42; as follows:

Mr. WILLIS. I move to dispense with the reading of the names on this vote.

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the names.

The names of those voting were then read.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. HITT and Mr. BELMONT, on all questions from January 16 to the 17th inclusive.

Mr. LAMB and Mr. HOLTON, on the vote on Senate bill 1038.

Mr. THOMPSON and Mr. HOUK, on this bill.

Mr. BROWNE of Indiana and Mr. DIBRELL, for this day.

Mr. TALBOTT, who would have voted "no" on the pending amendment, with Mr. HOLTON, who would vote "ay."

Mr. BROADHEAD and Mr. SPOONER, on the pending question.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. PETTIBONE.

Mr. MONEY with Mr. WADSWORTH, on all questions from January 17 until further notice.

Mr. BUCHANAN and Mr. RAY of New Hampshire, from January 15 to the 18th inclusive.

Mr. EVANS of Pennsylvania and Mr. TUCKER, until further notice.

Mr. DAVIDSON and Mr. VALENTINE, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I am paired on all political questions with my colleague Mr. BLACKBURN, and if I could feel assured by any gentleman on that side of the House that he would vote in favor of this bill, I should still let my pair stand and not vote upon it.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no authority for saying how my colleague would vote. I believe fully that he would vote "no" on the motion of the gentleman from New York if he were present, but I have no authority from him to make the statement.

Mr. CLARDY. I desire to announce that my colleague Mr. BROADHEAD is detained from the House on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Pending that, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My inquiry is whether it would be in order at this time to move to commit the bill with instructions; or if not now, whether that would be in order after the previous question shall have been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the rule of the House it is in order to move to commit with or without instructions pending the demand for the previous question or after the previous question has been ordered on the passage of the bill. The Chair so stated the rule yesterday evening. Thereupon the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] moved to commit with instructions. No point of order was made upon the motion, and the Chair has submitted it to the House and the House has voted upon it. The Chair supposes the gentleman from New York was intending to make his motion under that rule which was stated; but as to that the Chair is not informed, and he can only administer the rules as he finds them. The question is now upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The question was decided in the affirmative; and the bill was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I now move, the previous question having been ordered, to commit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not been ordered nor has it been demanded on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I now move that the bill be committed to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with the instructions which I send to the desk.

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that only one such motion is in order and that the House has exhausted its privilege in that direction.

Mr. KEIFER. Do I correctly understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] as making the point of order that a motion to commit with or without instructions after the previous question has been ordered is not in order?

Mr. WILLIS. The point I make is that only one such motion is in order, and one such motion having been voted upon, the privilege is exhausted.

The SPEAKER. Only one such motion is in order after the previous question is ordered on the passage of the bill or while the demand for the previous question on the passage of the bill is pending. But the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] yesterday afternoon was made immediately after the bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and while the question was on ordering it to a third reading, and that was a motion that might have been made before this rule was adopted. As the Chair understands the new rule, it was simply intended to enlarge the privileges of the members on the floor in this respect by giving to them the right to make this motion after the previous question had been demanded or had been ordered on the passage of a bill, members always having had the right under the parliamentary law to move to commit with or without instruction before the bill had reached that stage.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Kentucky had made his point of order before, as against the motion of the gentleman from New York, I think it would have been well taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so intimated this morning.

Mr. WILLIS. At the time the motion of the gentleman from New York was made I had demanded the previous question.

Mr. DUNN. That is my recollection.

Mr. WILLIS. And the Speaker then stated that the motion of the gentleman from New York could be entertained at that time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read what was said yesterday in response to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. The Speaker stated the rule to the gentleman from New York exactly as it is, as gentlemen will see by the reading of what took place yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order now to move to commit the bill with instructions to the committee to report it back with the amendment which I proposed in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the gentleman from New York has the right to make that motion pending the motion for the previous question or after the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. "On the passage of the bill." But the gentleman from New York made his motion nevertheless, and no point of order was made against it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the demand for the previous question had previously been made.

The SPEAKER. It was on the third reading of the bill, not on the passage of the bill. The Chair thinks that under the rule he is obliged to hold the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] as now in order, although there was probably a mistake made yesterday afternoon.

The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill under consideration be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, with instructions not to report it back until the Secretary of War shall furnish this House with an itemized account of the expenditures for the improvement of the Mississippi River and levees along its banks from July 1, 1879, to January 16, 1884; also, inform the House whether the urgency of the demand for this bill has not arisen from expenditures in excess of the sums heretofore appropriated by Congress for the purpose of the improvement of the Mississippi River, and until the report of the Commission on the Mississippi River shall be distributed to the members of the House of Representatives.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, there were—ayes 26, noes 117.

Mr. WHITE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 2 members voting therefor.

So the motion to commit with instructions was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I believe that under the rule one hour is allowed for debate. I do not propose to occupy any time myself at present, but will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG].

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt whether under the rule there is an hour allowed for debate in this instance. This is not a bill reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, of which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is chairman; but it is a Senate bill, which has been taken from the Speaker's table by action of the House and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was reported back to the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] as chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair thinks that under the rule there is not an hour for debate.

Mr. YOUNG. I supposed I would be allowed to say a few words.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered by the House.

Mr. YOUNG. I will ask permission of the House to have printed in the RECORD some remarks upon this subject.

Mr. ELLIS. And I will prefer a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit those requests to the House after the bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. REED. I ask that the rule be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule which has been referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening. (Rule XIV, clause 3.)

Mr. REED. The point to which I referred was whether the yeas and nays must be taken on the passage of this bill. I would inquire what the Speaker decides on that point?

The SPEAKER. This is not a general river and harbor bill.

Mr. REED. The rule on page 179 of the Digest is this:

Upon all general appropriation and revenue bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the yeas and nays shall be taken on the passage of such bills in the House and entered upon the Journal.

That is clause 6 of Rule XXI, and seems in terms to cover the pending bill, unless the Chair should decide that it is necessary to have a bill appropriate for more than one river or for more than one harbor, or unless this bill shall escape the yeas and nays upon the ground that it is for the improvement of levees and not for the improvement of rivers. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I quite concur with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that it is desirable to have the rule which he has read apply to such bills as this. I am the more anxious for that because I think this is a wise indication that hereafter we shall have the Mississippi River appropriation bill separated from the general river and harbor bill.

Mr. REED. I must not permit the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to commit me to the idea that I think it wise to call the yeas and nays on all appropriation bills. If I were to frame a rule upon the subject, I doubt if I should be willing to vote for this one; but it being in existence, it seems desirable that it shall be enforced.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. In support of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has said, that the rule requires the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of all bills of this character, I desire to read a clause in the Constitution from page 10 of the Digest.

Mr. ELLIS. I would inquire of the Chair what is before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] makes the point that it is the duty of the Chair under the rule to direct the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of the pending bill, or rather he propounds the inquiry whether it is the duty of the Chair to direct the yeas and nays to be taken.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELLIS. Then I will demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better have the decision of the Chair on this point.

The SPEAKER. This is an important matter, because what is done now will perhaps be adhered to hereafter as a precedent. The Chair is willing to hear what gentlemen may have to say upon the subject.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. In support of the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] I was about to quote from the Constitution:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

The House having refused to wait until we can get the items of the account from the War Department, I think the best thing the country can have is a yea-and-nay vote on appropriating this million of money.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there can be very little doubt as to the meaning of the language employed in the rule, although at the time the rule was adopted it may have contemplated only general bills appropriating money for rivers and harbors, because the custom has been heretofore general to pass such appropriations all in one bill. The language of the rule is very clear.

Upon all appropriation and revenue bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the yeas and nays shall be taken on the passage of such bills in the House and entered upon the Journal.

The Chair is therefore disposed to hold that under this rule it is his duty to direct that the yeas and nays shall be taken upon the passage of the pending bill. If any gentleman doubts the correctness of that ruling, the Chair would be very glad to have the question decided by the House itself.

Mr. RANDALL. I think there can be no difference of opinion on that subject, and unless some one does object the ruling of the Chair may as well be considered the unanimous opinion of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall this bill pass? and upon that question, under the rule of the House, the yeas and nays will be taken.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 216, nays 64, not voting 40; as follows:

LEAVES TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] desire leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the bill just passed.

Mr. WELLER. I ask that the same courtesy be extended to me.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request of these three gentlemen will be granted. [See Appendix.]

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] indicate what disposition he desires to have made of the House bill reported on the same subject as the bill just disposed of?

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that it be laid on the table.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3531) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, communicated proposed joint rules for the two Houses adopted by the Senate, and in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 25) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon;

A bill (S. 353) to repeal section 1 of the act entitled "An act making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain Railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas," approved July 4, 1866, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 652) to carry into effect the decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York in the case of the Spanish ferry-boat Nuestra Señora de Regla.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 844) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex.

MYRON E. DUNLAP.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs without amendment the bill (H. R. 1389) for the relief of Myron E. Dunlap; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. In the absence of any motion of higher privilege, I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

PATENTS.

The first business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1134) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to patents.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4887 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4887. No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent hereafter granted be declared invalid, by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented in a foreign country, unless the same has been introduced into public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application; but every patent hereafter granted for an invention which has, prior to the filing of the application for said patent, been patented in a foreign country, shall expire seventeen years from the date of the foreign patent, or if there be more than one, seventeen years from the date of the earliest foreign patent, and in no case shall it remain in force more than seventeen years; but all applications hereafter made for patents for inventions previously patented in a foreign country, upon the invention of the same person, shall be made within two years from and after the date of such foreign patent, or if there be more than one, from the date of the earliest foreign patent. No patent granted for an invention which had, prior to the grant of such patent, been first patented in a foreign country, and which has not expired at the date of the passage of this act, shall be declared to be invalid by reason of its not being so limited on its face or in its grant as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the shortest term; but this act shall in nowise renew, revive, prolong, or extend any patent heretofore granted."

Mr. VANCE. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred bill H. R. 1134, submitted the following report:

Section 4887, Revised Statutes, provides that all patents which have first been patented in foreign countries shall expire with the foreign patents, without regard to the life of the foreign patent. The bill seeks to remedy a wrong upon American inventors. In many foreign countries any one can take out a patent who gives information. An American inventor files his papers, in some instances files an application for a caveat, and then hastens to England to get ahead of any one there. His case may be in interference in the United States for two or three years. In the mean time his patent is running out abroad. The life of a patent abroad is, England, fourteen years; France, five, ten, or fifteen years, optional; Prussia, fifteen years; Russia, three, five, or ten years; Spain, five, ten, or fifteen years; Holland, five, ten, or fifteen years. It will thus be seen that an American patent may expire within from three to five years.

The effect of the bill will be to carry out the contract made with the inventor and give him a right to his patent for seventeen years, without regard to its life abroad.

We recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Speaker, the report made by the committee correctly sets forth the facts in regard to section 4887 of the Revised Statutes. According to the law as in force at this time a patent first obtained in a foreign country expires in this country at the date of its expiration abroad. Our law on this subject is not uniform with that prevailing in other countries. As has been stated in the report, the effect of the law is unfriendly, unkind, and unfair to American inventors. In England, for instance, any one can take out a patent that gives information. I believe that is so in other foreign countries. In our country the inventor has to swear he is, or believes himself to be, the inventor. He applies to the United States for a patent, and goes abroad, to Canada, England, or other points, to obtain his patent in order to prevent any one else getting ahead of him.

The life of a patent, as has been already stated, is only fourteen years. In Austria a patent runs one year, with the privilege of extension to fifteen years. The courts have decided here that a patent first obtained abroad expires in this country on the short term; that is, if a patent has been taken out by an American citizen for one, three, five, or ten years, the American patent expires in one, three, five, or ten years, as the case may be. I have a case before me in which the patent absolutely expired in one year. The United States Government had made a contract with the inventor that his patent should extend for seventeen years, yet under the effect of this section of the statute the man had his patent only for one year, as the courts have decided that the American patent must expire with the first date of expiration in a foreign country, although the patent may be renewed there.

In the case I speak of the American inventor applied for a patent in Canada and received it, and the case went to interference and was delayed. The court decided his patent must expire with the remaining year that was left. According to the effect of the act as it is now the American citizen takes out a patent here and does not take out a patent in a foreign country, so that the whole world uses his patent free outside of America.

An objection has been made of this kind, that if the foreign patent is extended for ten years, then the American people would have to pay tribute on that patent during that extension of ten years when the world outside would have it free. On the other hand, if the inventor does not take out a patent the whole world would have it free for seventeen years outside of the United States. It works a hardship on the American inventors, and, as we all know, we owe much of our prosperity and success to the system of American patents. It is to the honor of this great country that it has protected men who had brains enough to bring forward inventions like the electric telegraph, the telephone, and a thousand other equally valuable improvements which might be mentioned. I speak in behalf of American inventors, therefore, when I ask the Congress of the United States to follow the recommendation of the Committee on Patents in the bill which is now pending, and which comes before the House with the unanimous sanction of that committee, to change this section of the law so that the American inventor may have his right to his patent as others, whether he has taken out a patent abroad or not.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to consume any more of the time of the House, as I presume the members thoroughly understand the question and are ready to vote upon it.

Mr. MAYO. Let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether this touches in any way books published in this country?

Mr. VANCE. It does not; but merely refers to patents, and has nothing whatever to do with books. It is not a copyright affair at all. It merely seeks to put every American inventor upon an equality, which I think is only right. I have letters from all over the country on this subject, but I think it is unnecessary to take up further time of the House on this subject.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the principle which underlies the patent system is undoubtedly right, namely, that an inventor is entitled to a reward for his genius and labor. I certainly would be among the last who would desire in any way to interfere with the just reward to the American inventor.

I have no doubt this bill will pass, and I rise not so much to oppose it as to call the attention of the House to the fact that perhaps three-quarters of the monopolies of this country are fortified behind the patent system of the United States. I wish to have it clearly understood that so far as I am concerned I am heartily in favor of giving to the American inventor such a period of time as shall give him a full and generous reward for his labor and genius, but on the other hand I am also in favor of drawing a line between that policy and a policy which would crystallize monopolies for which the consumer at last must pay.

I regret exceedingly that I have not had time to collect some information in regard, say, to Bessemer steel patents, or to patents on cotton machinery, or upon paper processes, or upon iron, or upon the manufacturing processes all the way through. There might be collected information which would challenge the attention of the gentlemen in this House, which would challenge the attention of the whole country to this great interrogation point: whether there be not in the abuse of the patent system something to be looked after as there is in the altitudinous branch of the tariff system? And that is the only point I have in making these remarks to-day. And there occurs to my mind just a single case which I shall mention. Years ago there were patents taken out upon the instruments for transmitting telegraphic messages upon the Morse system. Just what the facts are I do not know and will not undertake to state; but my impression is that investigation will show that the ability of the Western Union Telegraph Company to wear out its opponents has rested upon the question of patent upon the Morse machines. And to-day you have in that company a monopoly which is controlling the transmission of the intelligence of this country to an extent that is simply alarming.

You perhaps noticed, as shown by a statement in yesterday's press, that a speech had been delivered on the floor of the United States Senate advocating the establishment of a postal telegraph by the United States Government; that the Inter-Ocean of Chicago, which for three years has leased a wire from the Western Union Telegraph Company, had transmitted that speech, and that the Inter-Ocean had published the speech; that thereupon the use of the wire was withdrawn from the Inter-Ocean by the Western Union. Why? Because it is alleged that there is a contract between papers receiving messages by the Associated Press, or at least over the Western Union, that they shall not advocate any measure which may be inimical to the monopolistic purpose of the Western Union Telegraph Company; and if this be true, there you have, in the nineteenth century, in a nation of 53,000,000 of Americans, demanding their intelligence fresh every morning from all about the globe—you have this whole nation in the grasp of one man owning the majority of the stock, so it is alleged, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, manipulating that intelligence, doling out precisely what he pleases that the country may read in the morning, and withholding that which is inimical to his interests. In other words, you have Mr. Jay Gould throttling the telegraph system of the United States, and when you come to look into it you will find that your patent system had something to do with it.

Mr. MAYO. I rise to a point of order, that no gentleman has the right on this floor in making a speech to turn his back to the Speaker. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Out of the abundant regard that I have for the Speaker, I apologize fully.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I only call attention to this as an illustration of this proposition, that it may be well for us to look at the effect which a too liberal system as to patents may have upon the prosperity of this country. I am willing to put American inventors upon a level and equality with each other, but I am frank to say that I would a good deal rather strike out "seventeen years" and insert "seven years" as to the length of time when any patent shall run; and I am afraid so far as this bill is concerned that its effect will simply be to raise higher that wall which some day must at least be reduced, if nothing more.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas has managed to make a very loud explosion with a very little powder. He admits that he has not spoken to this bill; that what he has said has nothing to do with the measure now pending before the House.

The term for which patents are issued by the United States Government is seventeen years. If an inventor—a United States inventor—desires to take out a patent for his invention in Canada, as well as in the United States, he makes his application at the same time perhaps in both countries. The granting of the letters patent is deferred for some reason in the United States until after the Canadian patent has been granted. The term in Canada for which patents are granted is originally five years; so that under the operation of the laws as they are now enforced with reference to patents, when his letters patent in the United States are taken out instead of getting them for seventeen years they expire at the end of the five years for which he has obtained them in Canada. It is, as the chairman of the committee observes, to remove this injustice that this bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Patents. Hereafter, Mr. Speaker, should occasion arise, the Committee on Patents will be happy to discuss the question of patent law as connected with monopolies with the gentleman from Kansas, but not now, as it is not necessary on this bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to ask my distinguished friend from North Carolina in charge of this bill some questions as to the effect of it, since it seems to have been somewhat inartificially drawn, if he will permit me.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; I will be very glad to inform the gentleman.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does this have the effect of extending any existing patent?

Mr. VANCE. It does not, sir, extend any.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does it have that effect in any individual case within the knowledge of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. VANCE. It does not. I do know of a case that is affected by it; but that has nothing to do with the bill further than any other patent that has been granted by the Government.

Mr. COX, of New York. I asked that question for the simple reason that I desire to enter my protest wherever I can against the extension of any patent beyond the term fixed originally by the Government.

Mr. VANCE. I am glad to say to the gentleman from New York that we carefully avoid doing that. The bill itself says that it shall not extend the life of any patent now in existence.

Mr. COX, of New York. Has the gentleman from North Carolina any objection to a proviso in the nature of an amendment to that effect providing that no existing patent and no patent hereafter shall be extended beyond the time fixed by law?

Mr. VANCE. That is already the law.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then there can be no objection to having it on the bill.

Mr. VANCE. Except that there is no necessity for re-enacting a statute already in existence.

Mr. TALBOTT. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to one thing in this bill. It says:

> No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent hereafter granted be declared invalid by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented in a foreign country.

You do not qualify by saying "the inventor." Suppose the inventor obtains his patent first in a foreign country, you leave it for any person in this country to get the invention and patent it whether the inventor or not. I do not think that is the intention of the Committee on Patents. You should provide against that in this bill.

Mr. VANCE. The words the gentleman has quoted are exactly the words in the existing statute. We have not changed the statute except in the manner pointed out, the statute now saying that the patent shall expire at the same time with the patent obtained abroad.

Mr. TALBOTT. Then the statute is not clear.

Mr. VANCE. The gentleman can at any time introduce a bill to correct the statute in that regard.

Mr. WOOD. I should like to have the bill again read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] yield the floor?

Mr. COX, of New York. I wanted to propose to the gentleman from North Carolina an amendment, which I ask him to accept.

The SPEAKER. Meanwhile the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] asks that the bill be again reported.

The bill was again read.

Mr. TALBOTT. Is the bill still open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has proposed an amendment, which he has not yet sent to the desk. There can only be one amendment to that amendment while it is pending. The gentleman from New York will send up his amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I propose as an amendment, to come in at the end of the bill, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Add to the bill the following:
> "Provided, That this act shall not apply to any patent now in existence or application now pending, nor have the effect of extending the time of the duration of patents under the existing law."

Mr. VANCE. I think the gentleman from New York should omit the clause relating to applications now pending. Surely it looks like prejudging men to make a provision of that kind. I ask the gentleman to omit that from his amendment and let the law in that respect remain as it is now; or if the gentleman does not agree to modify his amendment, I move to amend it by striking out those words. I think it is wrong to exclude applications now pending.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to avoid possible or probable litigation, and I offer the amendment, thinking that the bill ought to look to the future merely.

Mr. VANCE. That is what it does exactly.

Mr. COX, of New York. And that it shall not apply to patents now in existence or to applications now pending.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Without this proviso the bill will cover patents now applied for, and it is as important to avoid them as to avoid those already in existence. I quite agree with my friend from New York.

Mr. VANCE. We have no information that there are such cases now pending.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If there are none pending the proviso will hurt nobody.

Mr. VANCE. Still, if there be such an application, by passing a proviso of that kind you hurt the man's case.

Mr. COX, of New York. Pending cases should fall under existing statutes. Why not let applicants stand under the law as they found it when they filed their applications? I propose to have no nunc pro tunc proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] proposes to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] by striking from it these words, "or application now pending." The first question is on that amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. VANCE. I call for a division.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let the amendments be again reported.

The amendment offered by Mr. COX, of New York, and the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. VANCE were again read.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 62.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I propose my amendment shall go in on line 29, after the word "term." And then I propose to add at the end of the bill the words "or applied for;" so that it will read:

But this act shall in nowise renew, revive, prolong, or extend any patent heretofore granted or applied for.

The SPEAKER. That will be a separate amendment after this is disposed of.

Mr. RICE. It seems to me that the amendment moved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is unnecessary. As has been stated, the sole object of this bill is that the American inventor who applies for a patent on his invention in a foreign country as well as in this may have his invention patented in this country for the term provided by our laws, to wit, seventeen years; and that the patent shall not terminate, as the courts have held it now does, at the expiration of the term of the foreign patent, which, by reason of the long processes of our Patent Department, may chance to have been issued to him before the United States patent is issued to him.

As has been stated, the term of a patent in Canada is but five years; the term in the United States is seventeen years. Now, if the patent chances to be issued in Canada before it is issued in the United States, what reason is there that the life of the American patent should expire at the end of five years instead of at the end of seventeen years? That is all this bill seeks to provide, that the patent granted here shall live for the term which the laws of the United States provide and not expire at the end of the term of the foreign patent.

As to patents which have already been applied for, applications now pending, why should not the patents in those cases when granted continue for seventeen years as well as patents that may hereafter be applied for? I do not see that the amendment moved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is necessary at all. I do not see that any interests will be endangered by the passage of this bill, but on the contrary justice will be done and equality will be afforded to all.

If the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] desires any amendment of the bill, it seems to me that all he desires would be accomplished by adding to the bill the words "or already applied for," and the remainder of his amendment might be omitted. I hope, however, that the gentleman will not insist upon his amendment, but allow the bill to pass as reported unanimously by the Committee on Patents of this House and as it was unanimously reported by the Committee on Patents of the last House.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to amend the amendment so it will read as follows:

That the provisions of this bill shall not apply to any pending case or litigation in the courts.

Mr. VANCE. That is totally unnecessary, because the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] provides that this act shall not apply to any case pending in the Patent Office, and it certainly could not apply to cases where the patents have already been granted, for the bill itself provides for that.

Mr. CALKINS. Does the gentleman make the point of order that the same amendment is already pending? If he does not, I make that point of order.

Mr. WOOD. It is not the same amendment as the one now pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment to the amendment is in order, it not being the province of the Chair to decide whether or not the same provision is substantially contained in the amendment already pending. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is not in the same language as the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and is not so broad. If adopted as a substitute for that amendment, of course it would displace it.

The amendment of Mr. WOOD was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. COX, of New York, was then agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. The amendment just adopted is to come in after the word "term," in line 29 of the printed bill. I propose now to further amend the bill by adding to it these words "or applied for."

Mr. VANCE. Does not the amendment just adopted cover that?

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not know but it does, but this will make the language of the bill more homogeneous.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. COX, of New York, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. Now let that portion of the bill which has been amended be read with the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

No patent granted for an invention which had, prior to the grant of such patent, been first patented in a foreign country, and which has not expired at the date of the passage of this act, shall be declared to be invalid by reason of its not being so limited on its face or in its grant as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent; or if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the shortest term: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any patent now in existence or application now pending, nor have the effect of extending the time of the duration of any patent under existing law, but this act shall in nowise renew, revive, prolong, or extend any patent heretofore granted or applied for.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move to further amend the bill by inserting after the word "patented," in line 9 of the printed bill, where it occurs the second time, the words "by the applicant;" so that it will read:

No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent hereafter granted be declared invalid, by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented by the applicant in a foreign country, &c.

My amendment is intended simply to remove the uncertainty which may result from the present language of the bill; to prevent any person not the original inventor from taking out a patent for some invention patented in a foreign country.

Mr. VANCE. I do not know that I have any objection to that amendment; but the law already provides that a patent can not be taken out in this country by any one except the inventor, and the applicant must swear that he is the inventor.

The amendment of Mr. TALBOTT was then agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. After the first amendment, adopted on motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], the word "it" should be substituted for the words "this act" in line 30 of the printed bill. And I do not see the necessity of the phrase "prior to the grant of such patent," in lines 23 and 24 of the bill, in view of what follows, "been first patented in a foreign country."

Mr. VANCE. That is intended to reach another branch of the subject. The patent obtained abroad may not have upon its face the statement of the fact that it was first obtained abroad, and the Government may not be aware of that fact. This provision is to the effect that the patent in this country shall not be invalid on that account.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then I will move to amend the last clause of the bill by substituting the word "it" for the words "this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary.

PATENTS.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1134) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to patents.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, this subject of patents has grown to be so important on account of the universal application of patents to almost everything in use from the cradle to the grave that in my judgment no step ought to be taken in this matter until the House has had due time to consider thoroughly the effect of any bill or amendment which may be offered. For the purpose of giving the House further time to consider this bill in all its bearings, I move that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. VANCE. The Committee on Patents examined and reported upon this question at the last session. It has been reported upon time and again to my personal knowledge, as I have been a member of the committee. If the House should now send this bill back to the committee we shall beyond doubt report it again just as we have already done. Hence this motion to recommit is utterly unnecessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] by instructing the committee to consider the propriety of incorporating in the bill the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That in an action against any person who shall have purchased in the open market and used any article covered by any such patent, and which shall have been manufactured in violation of the rights of the patentee or assignee thereof, the measure of damages, if it shall appear that the defendant purchased such article without notice that the same was manufactured in violation of the rights of the patentee or assignee, shall not exceed the cost in the open market of the article so purchased and used.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] move that the committee be instructed to insert this provision in the bill or merely to consider it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee be instructed to report this proposition as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. RICE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. A bill substantially the same in effect and language as this proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is now before the Committee on Patents. I think that bill is in exactly the same language. I desire to ask therefore whether this provision, which is the substance of a pending bill now before the committee, can be offered in this way.

Mr. VANCE. Does my colleague on the committee [Mr. RICE] make a point of order?

Mr. RICE. I do.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not aware that there is not any such bill pending in the House. I drew this proposition while this bill was under consideration. There may be any number of bills containing the same idea.

Mr. CALKINS. The bill which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] refers to is I presume the bill which was read here the other day, when I asked unanimous consent to have it considered and passed. I have no objection, of course, if the point of order be overruled, to having the amendment of my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] made a part of the bill now before the House, but I would prefer to have him adopt the language of my bill as originally drawn.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] send up the bill to which he refers?

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit, as a proposition of order, that when a point is made that a proposed amendment to a bill is the same in its provisions as another pending bill, the only way of determining that question of order is by an examination of the bill which is stated to be identical with the amendment.

Mr. CALKINS. I only ask my colleague to make his amendment cover the same ground as the bill which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no doubt that my colleague has the matter in much better shape.

The SPEAKER. A point of order of this kind always involves a question of fact, which of course the Chair cannot decide until he is furnished with the information afforded by the bill with which the proposed amendment is stated to be identical in substance. The Chair has now before him the bill which, as he understands, is referred to by the gentleman making the point of order. The Chair thinks that the two propositions are not substantially the same. The bill introduced by the gentleman from Indiana on the left [Mr. CALKINS] provides that where the damages awarded in an action for infringement of a patent shall not exceed twenty dollars the plaintiff shall not recover his costs. The proposition now offered by the gentleman from Indiana on the right [Mr. HOLMAN] is simply to define what shall be the measure of damages in such an action.

Mr. RICE. If I recollect aright there are five bills on this subject which have been referred to the Committee on Patents.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair has been furnished with only one; and, as he stated a while ago, these questions of order always involve a question of fact, which the Chair cannot determine unless the necessary papers are furnished to him. Can the gentleman furnish any bill substantially the same as the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RICE. I would if I had time.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that you have decided the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided it so far as regards the bill which has been sent to the desk; but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] now states that there are before the Committee on Patents four or five other bills on this subject.

Mr. VANCE. I believe we have before our committee a bill in the very words of this amendment. I am not certain, because I have not the bill with me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be compelled to overrule the point of order unless some bill containing substantially the same provision as the proposed amendment can be produced.

Mr. VANCE. I am in favor myself of protecting innocent purchasers of patented articles exposed for sale in the open market, and I have so voted. But I really think that the question is one which ought to be examined with the greatest care. On the one hand, we want to protect the innocent purchaser—the man who goes into a store and buys a plow or a harrow or anything of that kind; because he can not know whether the article is patented, or if it be marked patented, can not know that it is correctly marked. But at the same time we wish to carry out the good faith of the Government toward the inventor. I think it is better to let the Committee on Patents have charge of this subject. Next Monday we will have a meeting of two hours, to be devoted specially to it, and we would be glad to hear gentlemen on all the points they have indicated. As it is, they may tie us up in a way to do damage to some one. I ask that the committee be let alone to work out this problem after careful consideration.

The question recurred on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to Mr. GIBSON'S motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 41.

Mr. RICE. I ask for a quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint Mr. VANCE and Mr. HOLMAN as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 67.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON'S motion as amended was agreed to; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Patents with instructions.

IMPROPER GRANTS OF LETTERS PATENT.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3036) to enable the courts of the United States, in the case of the improper grant of letters patent by reason of fraud and misrepresentation, to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to enable the courts of the United States, in the case of the improper grant of letters patent by reason of fraud and misrepresentation, to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Attorney-General that there is probable cause for impeaching the validity of any unexpired patent, whether original, reissued, or extended, which may have been or shall hereafter be granted, on the ground that the same has been procured by fraud and misrepresentation, it shall be his duty to take due proceedings, by a bill in equity in the United States circuit court for the district in which the said patentee resides, or in the case of his death or the assignment of his entire interest in said patent, then in the district in which his legal representatives or assigns reside, to have the said patent vacated and annulled; and the court, on notice to said adverse parties and in pursuance of such proceedings, shall have the power to adjudge and declare said patent void in whole or in part, and to annul and vacate the same.

SEC. 2. That if the party at whose complaint the Attorney-General shall take the proceedings provided for in this act shall fail to establish the invalidity of the patent, then the costs incurred by the Attorney-General in such litigation shall be chargeable to and be collected from such party complainant; otherwise said costs shall be chargeable to and collected from the defendant.

SEC. 3. That from the judgment and decree of any court rendered in the premises appeal shall lie, at the instance of either party, to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same circumstances as is now provided by law in other judgments and decrees of circuit courts in causes arising on letters patent relating to inventions.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred bill H. R. 1136, submit the following report, and beg to accompany it by a substitute bill which, more fully sets forth the object in view and the means of attaining it.

The title of the bill as originally reported read as follows: "To enable the courts of the United States in cases of fraud and misrepresentation to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General."

The law, as it now stands, and has stood since 1836, provides no way in which a patent can be declared void except upon the ground of interference with some other patent, and then only upon the suit of some rival patentee or of some person claiming under one of the interfering patents. And such adjudication affects only the rights of the parties to that particular suit and those subsequently deriving title under them. (See section 4918 Revised Statutes.)

For forty-six years prior to the act of July 4, 1836, provisions were in force whereby, upon proper complaint by any individual filed in any district court and other due proceedings had, a patent could be declared void on the ground that it was obtained surreptitiously and upon false suggestion; but at present the general public have no protection against harassment and vexation from invalid patents, and the Government no power to repeal the grant of the same, however strongly it may be convinced that a patent has thus been wrongly granted.

Interfering patentees, as stated before, and individual parties when sued as infringers, alone have the means of showing that a patent was improperly granted.

It was intimated, but intimated only, by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Mowry vs. Whitney (14 Wallace, 434), that the Attorney-General might maintain such a suit on the relation of some one who was interested adversely to the patent.

But, in a later decision, rendered in 1876, in just such a suit, brought by the Attorney-General on the relation of one Hecker vs. The Rumford Chemical Works (reported in 9 Patent Office Gazette, 1062), the United States circuit court for the district of Rhode Island dismissed such suit, and in a most elaborate decision reviewed the whole history of the law on the subject, and arrived at the conclusion that no patent could be repealed in this country except in a manner prescribed by statute, and that no statutory provision existed authorizing the Attorney-General, in his own name or in the name of the United States, on the relation of any one, or authorizing any other officer or individual, to bring suit for that purpose.

It having been well settled by numerous adjudications of our courts that a patent is in the nature of a contract which under the Constitution Congress authorizes to be entered into between the Government and the inventor, securing to him for a limited time the exclusive enjoyment of his invention in consideration of his disclosure of his invention to the public and his relinquishment of it to the public at the end of the term; it follows that there should be some way of abrogating such a contract when the Government becomes convinced through its proper officers that it was improperly entered into or was invalid by reason of fraud or false suggestion.

Fraudulent patents, your committee are convinced, are often used for the sole purpose of terrifying purchasers, extorting tribute, and disturbing trade, while suits thereon, by which their invalidity could alone be established, are carefully avoided.

The maintenance of such false and unjust grants is destructive to the principle on which patents are based by the Constitution, namely, to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, and they are simply odious monopolies.

Your committee, therefore, earnestly favor early action upon said bill and recommend its passage.

By the accompanying substitute bill we have added to the original provisions for maintaining such suit on other grounds than fraud and misrepresentation, for extending the application of the bill to patents granted before its passage as well as thereafter, for bringing the suit in the court for the district in which the patentee or the owners of the patent live, and for holding the complainant liable for costs when his suit fails, or when the patent is declared invalid for other reasons than fraud or misrepresentation.

We are of opinion that the suit should be brought by the Attorney-General and not by the individual alone, as the entire public, through the Government, should be properly represented in the repeal of its grant, which is the act of the Government and not of an individual.

Mr. VANCE. The courts having decided there are no means of declaring void patents obtained through fraud and misrepresentation, this bill is intended to cure that defect. I do not wish to consume time, as the report has fully stated all the facts involved, and I therefore demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALL PUBLIC HIGHWAYS POST-ROUTES.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1482) making all public roads and highways post-routes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all public roads and highways kept up and maintained as such are hereby declared to be post-routes; and the Postmaster-General may establish postal service upon the same whenever in his judgment the public welfare requires it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, FORT WORTH, TEX.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1574) to authorize an increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLER], on the recommendation of the Committee on Banking and Currency, moved to take from the Speaker's table and pass the Senate bill on the same subject, and that bill has been passed. I therefore move this bill be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The business on the House Calendar is exhausted.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. COVINGTON. I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to designate the committees which, in the judgment of the said Committee on Accounts, should be allowed clerks for the present Congress under the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1884, and to report to the House without delay its action thereon.

Mr. COVINGTON. That is the resolution of the House referred to the committee. Now read the committee's report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, in obedience to the resolution passed by the House on the 8th instant, authorizing and directing "that the Committee on Accounts be, and it is, authorized and directed to designate the committees which, in the judgment of said Committee on Accounts, shall be allowed clerks for the present Congress under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1884, and report to the House without delay for its action thereon," respectfully submit the following report and ask its adoption by the House:

The thirty-two clerks provided for in the bill referred to in the above resolution are distributed according to the appended schedule, to wit: To the Committee on Elections, a clerk; to the Committee on Banking and Currency, a clerk; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a clerk; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a clerk; to the Committee on Naval Affairs, a clerk; to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, a clerk; to the Committee on the Territories, a clerk; to the Committee on Railways and Canals, a clerk; to the Committee on Mines and Mining, a clerk; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings; to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, a clerk; to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, a clerk; to the Committee on the Library, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Education; to the Committee on Labor, a clerk; to the Committee on the Militia, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Mileage; to the Committee on Patents, a clerk; to the Committee on Pensions, a clerk; to the Committee on Private Land Claims, a clerk; to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Manufactures; to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department; to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, a clerk; to the Committee on Accounts, a clerk; to the Committee on Printing, a clerk; to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, a clerk; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a clerk; to the Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, a clerk; to the Committee on Law respecting Election of President and Vice-President, a clerk; to the Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, a clerk; to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on the Public Health; and to the Committee on the Alcholic Liquor Traffic, a clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Maryland who presents this report will explain as to the number of clerks provided for, and whether it is less or greater than the number already authorized by law.

Mr. COVINGTON. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana, I desire to state that the report is in obedience to a resolution passed by the House on the 8th instant tying us down to the number of clerks provided in the legislative bill, that is to say, thirty-two. These thirty-two clerks had to be assigned to forty-five different committees. That delicate and embarrassing duty we have endeavored to discharge with due deference to the public interests. I am happy to say that the report is a unanimous one, and comes from the committee with the indorsement of every member.

Mr. COSGROVE. Let me ask the gentleman from Maryland a question.

Mr. COVINGTON. Certainly.

Mr. COSGROVE. I wish to ask whether the number of clerks is greater under this apportionment of the committee than in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. COVINGTON. It is far less.

Mr. RANDALL. I would say in that connection that the number is in accordance with the provisions contained in the appropriations made by the last Congress for this purpose.

Mr. COVINGTON. I will say also that the amount appropriated in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for this purpose was $40,896 for the payment of thiry-two clerks. We are simply carrying out the law in that respect by this report. If any more clerks are needed hereafter for the public service it will require that they shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

I call for the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. There are some things in this report——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I wanted to state, for one thing, that I saw no necessity for providing a clerk for the Committee on Mileage. I am a member of that committee, and our work is already done.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been demanded, debate is not in order.

Mr. COVINGTON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this work will not be suffered to pass through the House without some expression of opinion on the part of the members.

Mr. COVINGTON. I will say to the gentleman——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman from Maryland will not attempt to make a speech without giving us an opportunity for a reply from this side.

Mr. COVINGTON. I have no desire to make a speech. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the demand of the gentleman from Maryland for the previous question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to recommit the report to the Committee on Accounts before the previous question is ordered, and I believe I can move again after it is ordered——

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My motion is to recommit the report to the Committee on Accounts with instructions that they make a new distribution of these clerks, leaving out the one for the Committee on the Law respecting the Election of the President and Vice-President, leaving out the one for the Committee on Labor, leaving out the one for the Pacific Railroads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will reduce his motion to writing.

Mr. COVINGTON. I wish to say that if the previous question is ordered there will be, I believe, under the rule, half an hour for debate, and I am perfectly willing that that shall be taken by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. That would have been the case if there had been no debate prior to the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a point of order. It is utterly impossible for gentlemen occupying seats in the rear of the Hall to know anything of the business that is going on in this House on account of the confusion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has frequently called the attention of the House to the fact that there is too much disorder on the floor. The remedy is with members themselves. All the Chair can do is to make an earnest effort to preserve order. The Chair hopes that members will cease conversation on the floor and in the rear of the seats, so that the public business may be transacted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. While the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is reducing his motion to writing, the Chair asks unanimous consent to lay before the House a message from the President of the United States.

There was no objection.

GREELY RELIEF EXPEDITION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy on the subject of an expedition for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the "Lady Franklin Bay Expedition," which was sent to the Arctic regions in 1881, under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved May 1, 1880, and March 3, 1881.

In the plans for the relief of this party, as arranged with Lieutenant Greely, it was contemplated that an effort would be made to communicate with him and furnish him any needed assistance in 1882 and again in 1883.

Subsequently, legislation was enacted which required the expedition of 1883 to bring the party home. It was a part of the arrangement that if communication should not be made with him on or before the 1st of September, 1883, he should, with his party, abandon his station at Lady Franklin Bay not later than the above-mentioned date and proceed southward, and would find a well-supplied relief station at the entrance to Smith's Sound, a point where it would no be difficult to reach him during a part of each year. The expeditions of 1882 and 1883 were sent, but neither one of them was able to communicate with Lieutenant Greely; and the last one failed to accomplish any part of its object beyond leaving a very small quantity of stores in the neighborhood of the entrance to Smith's Sound.

The situation of Lieutenant Greely and his party under these circumstances is one of great peril, and in presenting the preliminary views of the board appointed by me to take into consideration an expedition for their relief I am gently recommend prompt action by Congress to enable the recommendations of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to be carried out without delay.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 17, 1884.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the message just read be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

ASSIGNMENT OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] offers a resolution to recommit, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Accounts be recommitted to that committee, with instructions to omit the names of clerks for Committees on Pacific Railroads, Mississippi Levees, Labor, Law respecting Election of President and Vice-President, or to assign them to serve as assistants on committees where the work to be done will enable them to earn the $6 per diem.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable. The demand for the previous question is pending.

Mr. WAIT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WAIT. I wish to inquire whether an amendment can not now be offered to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; because the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is made under the special rule, which permits it to be made during the pending of the demand for the previous question or after the previous question is ordered. The demand for the previous question has been made.

Mr. WAIT. Does that prevent the offering of an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. WAIT. Then I shall be compelled to vote against the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, for it embraces features which should not be in it.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, it was not agreed to.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Is not that question debatable?

The SPEAKER. The previous question cuts off all debate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Do I understand the Speaker to decide that after the previous question has been ordered there is no hour for debate?

The SPEAKER. There has been debate on this proposition.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Not after the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. There can be none after the previous question is ordered where there has been debate before it was ordered; and there was debate on this proposition before the previous question was ordered by the House.

Mr. REED. Was there debate on this proposition before the previous question was ordered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] and two or three other gentlemen addressed the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Is the explanation of the chairman of the Committee on Accounts when making the report to be considered in the nature of debate; and after that, is all other debate to be cut off?

The SPEAKER. The House cut off debate by ordering the previous question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. But who debated the report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that several gentlemen participated in the debate. It was very brief, but still the report was debated under the rules of the House.

The question being taken on the adoption of the report, there were—ayes 116, noes 10.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. On the question of agreeing to the report the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 168, noes 8.

So the report was adopted.

Mr. COVINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE.

Mr. CURTIN. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for present consideration. It is in the language exactly of the resolution of last Congress.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to have such printing done at the Government Printing Office as it may deem proper and may order.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CURTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BELFORD. Pending that, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to allow me to introduce a resolution for reference to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield for that purpose.

ALVIN H. PICKENS.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Alvin H. Pickens the difference between his pay as a laborer and that of a page, from January 17 to March 1, 1882, inclusive, and from April 1 to August 8, 1882, inclusive, in all one hundred and seventy-two days, $103.24, out of the contingent fund of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GOFF, for four days.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ELLIS asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the claims of Judith Perkins and Marie P. Evans; no adverse report.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 18, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LADY FRANKLIN BAY EXPEDITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy on the subject of an expedition for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the "Lady Franklin Bay Expedition," which was sent to the Arctic regions in 1881, under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved May 1, 1880, and March 3, 1881.

In the plans for the relief of this party, as arranged with Lieutenant Greely, it was contemplated that an effort would be made to communicate with him and furnish him any needed assistance in 1882 and again in 1883. Subsequently legislation was enacted which required the expedition of 1883 to bring the party home. It was a part of the arrangement that if communication should not be made with him on or before the 1st of September, 1883, he should, with his party, abandon his station at Lady Franklin Bay not later than the above-mentioned date and proceed southward, and would find a well-supplied relief station at the entrance to Smith's Sound, a point where it would not be difficult to reach him during a part of each year. The expeditions of 1882 and 1883 were sent, but neither one of them was able to communicate with Lieutenant Greely, and the last one failed to accomplish any part of its object beyond leaving a very small quantity of stores in the neighborhood of the entrance to Smith's Sound.

The situation of Lieutenant Greely and his party under these circumstances is one of great peril, and in presenting the preliminary views of the board appointed by me to take into consideration an expedition for their relief I urgently recommend prompt action by Congress to enable the recommendations of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to be carried out without delay.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 17, 1884.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 7th instant, copies of all important papers in the Treasury Department bearing on the subject of the enforcement of the act of May 6, 1882, "to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese;" which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, submitting reports from Engineer S. T. Abert of the results of surveys of certain creeks and rivers in Virginia and North Carolina, made under his direction in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which, with the accompanying reports, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, submitting reports from Capt. James Mercer of the result of surveys made of Clubfoot Harbor, Newport River, and Edenton Bay, North Carolina, under his direction, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which, with the accompanying reports, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, submitting reports from Col. Q. A. Gillmore, containing plans and estimates for the improvement of the channel of Saint John's River and other localities in Florida, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which, with the accompanying reports, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF ACTING SECRETARY SHOBER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a report from Mr. F. E. Shober, late Acting Secretary of the Senate, concerning the state of his accounts, &c. The letter of transmittal will be read:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, January —, 1884.

SIR: In obedience to the requirements of sections 60, 61, 63, and 72 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, I have the honor to submit a full and complete statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Senate, showing in detail the items of expense under the proper appropriations, the aggregate thereof, and exhibiting the exact condition of all public moneys received, paid out, and remaining in my possession, from July 1, 1883, to December 18, 1883.

I submit also a full and complete account of all property belonging to the United States in my possession on the 18th ultimo.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. E. SHOBER, Late Acting Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This letter, with the accompanying accounts, will be printed and laid upon the table, if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Indiana, officially signed, representing 1,824 members, praying for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PIKE presented the petitions of W. A. Leonard, Josiah Dent, and others, citizens of Washington, D. C., and the petition of William Gibson and others, citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of Fleming Post, No. 280, Grand Army of the Republic, New York, praying for the pensioning of the veterans of the late civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of H. Ten Eyck, of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 559) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS. I present a petition numerously signed by colored citizens of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, alleging that they are deprived of their rights under the treaty of 1866; that school privileges are denied them; that they do not receive the pro rata share of the moneys of the tribe to which they are entitled by the terms of that treaty, and asking for appropriate legislation. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I present a petition of about a thousand citizens of California, asking for the repeal of the law of 1820 and the acts supplemental thereto whereby the terms of certain officers of the Government are fixed at four years. Considering the respectability and large number of the petitioners, I trust that some action may be taken upon this matter. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Eureka, Cal., remonstrating against the consolidation of the Humboldt collection district with that of San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present the memorial of Mrs. Harriet D. Welles, widow of Lieutenant Welles of the Army, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 559. This is a bill relating to the Des Moines River lands, upon which the Judiciary Committee of this body in the Forty-sixth Congress unanimously reported adversely. I believe the bill is now in the hands of the Committee on Public Lands, to which committee I move the reference of this memorial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of Fleming Post, No. 280, Grand Army of the Republic, of Downsville, N. Y., praying for the passage of a bill granting additional pensions to those who served in the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of citizens of Kansas and Nebraska, praying that the body of land known as Oklahoma, in the Indian Territory, be opened to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 420) for the relief of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 1158) to provide for the execution of the provisions of article 2 of the supplemental commercial treaty of November 17, 1880, between the United States and China for the repression of the opium traffic; which was read twice by its title.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1159) for the relief of Mrs. S. Eunice Nichols; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of California (by request), asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1160) granting to Henry Anderson, his associates and assigns, a right of way for the construction of a submarine tunnel between San Francisco and Oakland, Cal.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1161) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOWEN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1162) granting a pension to Francis A. Liebschutz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1163) for the relief of Anson Atwood; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1164) to amend section 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1165) granting a pension to Mathias Wondrak; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1166) for the relief of certain officers who have served a specified number of years as captains or as company and regimental staff officers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONAS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1167) for the relief of the estate of Marcus Walker, deceased, late of Franklin, La.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Jacob and Charles Schnider, of Knoxville, Tenn., be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, there having been no report thereon.

On motion of Mr. VEST, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Richard F. Barrett be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. GEORGE, it was Ordered, That the papers now on file in the Secretary's office with Senate bill 1902 of the first session of last Congress be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, to be considered in connection with Senate bill introduced this session to grant certain land titles in the State of Mississippi.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of John Fraser be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1482) making all public roads and highways post-routes;

A bill (H. R. 3036) to enable the courts of the United States in the case of the improper grant of letters patent by reason of fraud and misrepresentation to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to correct an error in the enrollment of the "Act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ELIJAH W. PENNY.

Mr. HARRISON. During my absence the bill (S. 544) granting an increase of pension to Elijah W. Penny was reported adversely from the Committee on Pensions and indefinitely postponed. I understand there was an agreement at the time that upon the request of any Senator that report and disposition of the bill might be set aside and the bill go upon the Calendar. I now make that request with reference to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the bill indicated by him, which in his absence was reported adversely and indefinitely postponed, be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report, the indefinite postponement being reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

SAMUEL P. BRONSON.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some days ago the Committee on Pensions reported adversely the bill (S. 359) granting a pension to Samuel P. Bronson, and at my instance it was placed upon the Calendar until I could examine the report. I have examined the report, and now ask that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 359) granting a pension to Samuel P. Bronson, reported adversely on the 15th of January from the Committee on Pensions, be now indefinitely postponed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 50 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate now adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 18, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSENGER FOR CHIEF CLERK.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized to appoint a boy as messenger in the office of the Chief Clerk of the House, at a salary not to exceed $25 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SLOCUM. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that to-morrow's session be devoted to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, for debate only.

Mr. BRUMM. I object.

Mr. SLOCUM. I hope no gentleman will object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] asks unanimous consent that the session of the House to-morrow be set apart for debate only upon the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, no business to be transacted.

Mr. RANDALL. Immediately after the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. Immediately after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

SICKNESS OF A MEMBER.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I desire to state in behalf of my colleague [Mr. NICHOLLS] that he was detained from the House yesterday on account of sickness.

PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. BEACH. I ask unanimous consent to present for reference certain resolutions passed by the American Public Health Association.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can present them as petitions, and have them referred through the petition-box.

Mr. BEACH. I desire to have them printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KEIFER. Are the resolutions long?

Mr. BEACH. They are not long.

There was no objection; and the resolutions were received, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Select Committee on the Public Health.

The resolutions are as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

At a meeting of the American Public Health Association, held at Detroit, November 13, 14, 15, 1883, the following preambles and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas the American Public Health Association is the only body representing the sanitary interests of the whole country, and recognizing the fact that these interests require the establishment of sanitary science upon an exact scientific basis, which experience teaches can only be accomplished by pains-taking investigation made by trained experts, and feeling that both policy and proper national pride make it incumbent upon the United States to take an active part in the investigations relating to the cause and prevention of infectious and preventable diseases, which several European nations have promoted in a most liberal manner; and

Whereas the results of these investigations have been of incalculable benefit to the citizens of this country as well as to those of the enlightened nations under whose fostering care they have in great part been made: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we most earnestly petition the Congress of the United States to make suitable annual appropriations, to be expended under the direction of the National Board of Health in experimental investigations relating to sanitary matters.

Resolved, That an official copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, with the request that proper action be taken thereon.

ALBERT L. GIHON, President.
IRVING A. WATSON, Secretary.

To the Congress of the United States:

At a meeting of the American Public Health Association, held at Detroit, November 13, 14, 15, 1883, the following preambles and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas an act entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States," approved June 2, 1879, has expired, in conformity with the provision which limited its duration to four years; and

Whereas, by the testimony of the health authorities of the maritime ports and States and of the States and municipalities of the Mississippi Valley most exposed to the dangers of infectious and contagious diseases of foreign origin, the execution of the act in question by the National Board of Health was attended with most beneficial results in preventing the introduction of pestilences into the country and their spread from one State into another, by securing the best sanitary conditions of the commercial marine; by the creation of refuge stations for infected vessels coming to the ports of the United States; by organizing a system of steamboat and railroad inspections which controlled the spread of infection from State to State with the least possible interruption to travel and traffic; by the publication and dissemination of weekly information of the sanitary condition of ports and places in the United States and of the commercial nations; and by aiding and co-operating with State and local boards of health in their efforts to prevent and suppress epidemics: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of this association, representing the health authorities and sanitary organizations of the United States, the law of June 2, 1879, above referred to, was a wise and judicious measure, admirably adapted, as experience proves, to secure, within proper limits, the co-operation of the General Government with State and local boards of health in the prevention and control of pestilences, which by their tendency to wide diffusion and devastation always assume, on their appearance, a national importance.

Resolved, That this association hereby expresses its regret that the above-mentioned law was allowed to expire by limitation, and now respectfully, but earnestly, recommends that Congress, in view of the always impending danger from yellow fever and the possible near invasion of cholera, re-enact the law of June 2, 1879, or effect such legislation as will accomplish the results heretofore accomplished by it.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the officers of the association, be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

ALBERT L. GIHON, President.
IRVING A. WATSON, Secretary.

To the Congress of the United States:

At a meeting of the American Public Health Association, held at Detroit, November 13, 14, and 15, 1883, the following preambles and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas by the Constitution of the United States, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, the several States (having no jurisdiction) are unable to prevent or mitigate the evils caused by the introduction of unsound immigrants: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the American Public Health Association in annual session (at Detroit, Mich., November 15, 1883), That the attention of Congress is earnestly called to the various and many evils resulting to the American people from the large number and undue proportion, according to population, of insane, criminals, and paupers among our foreign-born population, and to the urgent necessity for the enactment by Congress of efficient laws and agencies to prevent, as far as possible, the coming of these foreign, defective, and criminal people to burden our resources, and to deprave, by the transmission of their defects to their children, the mental, moral, and physical qualities of our present and future people.

Resolved, That the president and secretary of this association be, and they are hereby, instructed to transmit a copy of this preamble and of these resolutions to the President of the Senate and one to the Speaker of the House of Representatives for presentation to the Congress of the United States.

ALBERT L. GIHON, President.
IRVING A. WATSON, Secretary.

To the Congress of the United States:

At a meeting of the American Public Health Association, held at Detroit, November 13, 14, 15, 1883, the following preambles and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas the collections known as the Army medical museum and library of the Surgeon-General's Office, located in Washington, D. C., and recognized as among the most complete and valuable of their kind in the world, and as their practical usefulness has been abundantly demonstrated by the interest with which they are regarded by the medical profession both at home and abroad; and

Whereas, by reason of the insecurity and unsuitability of the building in which they are now placed, they are in constant danger of damage or destruction, from which would ensue irreparable loss: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of the American Public Health Association the inestimable value of these collections demands from Congress such fair consideration of the merits involved as will secure an appropriation of sufficient amount to provide a fire-proof building of adequate size and suitable construction for the present and future uses of the museum and library.

Resolved, That the Army medical museum and library of the Surgeon-General's Office are inseparable in object and interest, and only capable of the greatest usefulness when under one control and management; that this association views with regret and disfavor any attempt to separate the two.

Resolved. That the work now in progress, under the direction of the Surgeon of the Army, entitled "An Index-Catalogue of the Library of the Surgeon-General's Office," is also one in which the sanitarians of the United States are greatly interested, and should receive the substantial aid and encouragement of Congress, with a view to its speedy and certain completion.

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be forwarded to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and also to the President of the Senate, requesting attention and legislation to effect the objects above set forth.

ALBERT L. GIHON, President.
IRVING A. WATSON, Secretary.

J. J. M'ELHONE.

Mr. CANNON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to correct an error in the enrollment of the bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, approved March 3, 1883; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed for a third reading.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated to pay J. J. McElhone, chief of the corps of official reporters of the House of Representatives, for extra services and for clerk-hire paid out by him during the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALLEGHENY, PA.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3554) for the construction of a public building for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices in the city of Allegheny, Pa.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

L. P. AND F. CHESTER.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3555) for the relief of Luster P. Chester and Freeland Chester, and Luster P. Chester and Freeland Chester, executors of Thomas R. Chester; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LUCRETIA G. RIPLEY.

Mr. WAIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3556) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucretia G. Ripley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CAPT. WILLIAM H. GILL.

Mr. BINGHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3557) for the relief of Capt. William H. Gill; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and others called for the regular order.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. I have a resolution which I wish to offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state what is his question of privilege.

Mr. BRUMM. It is a resolution affecting the dignity and honor of members of this House.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, and then the Chair will decide whether it is a question of privilege or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to make inquiry as to whether any foreign minister accredited to the Government of the United States has endeavored to nullify the effects of a unanimous resolution of this House by representations reflecting on the honor and integrity of its members.

Mr. RANDALL. Let that resolution be referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] objects to the resolution unless it is referred.

Mr. BRUMM. Let it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That is all I ask at present.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the Chair will proceed to call the committees for reports of a private nature.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The motion requires a two-thirds vote.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 120, noes 50.

Mr. REED. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. REED and Mr. SLOCUM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 158, noes 78.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. NICHOLLS, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. FINERTY, until Monday next, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. JAMES, for this day.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River.

SUSPENDED ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a list of suspended entries of public lands acted on by the board of equitable adjudication; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ENGINE-HOUSE, GEORGETOWN, D. C.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 15, 1884.

SIR: The commissioners have the honor to submit herewith the following, to be considered by the Committee on Appropriations:

"To enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to pay the sums due upon contracts for the Georgetown fire-engine house the sum of $1,700, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of the surplus revenues of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1883."

First. By act of April 1, 1882, sale of certain property was authorized and proceeds devoted to the erection of an engine-house in Georgetown.

Second. The property was sold, including the fish wharf—this piece was bid off to Walter Hawkes for $2,100, who paid $500 down.

Third. A contract was made and the building, upon completion, was occupied as designed, but Hawkes has not paid the remainder due by him.

Fourth. This amount needed includes the expense of sale, &c., and can be reimbursed to the District of Columbia by another sale as soon as an opportunity shall offer.

Fifth. No appropriation of the money of the United States is called for by this amendment.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servants,

J. B. EDMONDS,
J. R. WEST,
G. J. LYDECKER, Maj. Engrs., U. S. A.,
Commissioners.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, U. S.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The first business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the board of Army officers convened by the President of the United States by special orders No. 78, headquarters of the Army, April 12, 1878, to examine into and report upon the case of Fitz-John Porter, late a major-general of the United States volunteers and a brevet brigadier-general and colonel of the Army, having by their report of March 19, 1879, stated that in their opinion "justice requires at his (the President's) hands such action as may be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, and to restore him to the positions of which the sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of dismissal from the service;" and

Whereas the President, on the 4th day of May, 1882, remitted so much of the sentence of said court-martial remaining unexecuted as "forever disqualified the said Fitz-John Porter from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States:" Therefore, that justice may be done the said Fitz-John Porter, and to carry into effect the recommendation of said board,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fitz-John Porter, late a major-general of the United States volunteers and a brevet brigadier-general and colonel of the Army, to the position of colonel in the Army of the United States, of the same grade and rank, together with all the rights, titles, and privileges held by him at the time of his dismissal from the Army by sentence of court-martial promulgated January 27, 1863, and, in his discretion, to place him on the retired-list of the Army as of that grade, the retired-list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only; but this act shall not be construed as authorizing pay, compensation, or allowance prior to appointment under it.

Mr. SLOCUM. I call for the reading of the report of the committee.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general United States volunteers, having carefully considered the subject, beg leave to submit the following report:

On the 27th day of November, 1862, a court-martial was convened at Washington, D. C., by order of Major-General Halleck, general-in-chief of the armies of the United States, for the trial of certain charges and specifications exhibited against Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, United States Volunteers, by B. S. Roberts, inspector-general on the staff of General Pope, for violations of the ninth and fifty-second articles of war. Said Porter was by said court-martial found guilty of both charges and a part of the specifications, and was sentenced "to be cashiered and forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States," which finding and sentence were approved by the President of the United States January 21, 1863.

Upon the application of General Porter, President Hayes appointed Maj. Gen. John M. Schofield, Brig. Gen. A. H. Terry, and Col. G. W. Getty a board to examine the record of the trial of General Porter, together with such new evidence relating to the merits of the case as is on file in the War Department, and such other evidence as may be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion, justice requires should be taken by the President.

On the 19th of March, 1879, this board made a report, from which the following are extracts, namely:

NEW YORK CITY, March 19, 1879.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: We, the board of officers appointed by order of the President to examine the evidence in the case of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of volunteers, and to report, with the reasons for our conclusions, what action (if any), in our opinion, justice requires should be taken by the President on the application for relief in that case, have the honor to make the following report. The recorder has been directed to forward to the Adjutant-General of the Army the printed record of our proceeding, including all the evidence examined and the arguments of counsel on either side.

We have made a very thorough examination of all the evidence presented and bearing in any manner upon the merits of the case. The recorder has, under instructions from the board, sought with great diligence for evidence in addition to that presented by the petitioner, especially such as might appear to have a bearing adverse to the claims urged by him.

Due care has been exercised not to inquire into the military operations of the Army of Virginia, or the conduct of officers thereof, any further than has seemed necessary to a full and fair elucidation of the subject submitted to us for investigation. On the other hand, we have not hesitated to examine fully into all the facts, accurate knowledge of which seemed to us to be necessary to the formation of a correct judgment upon the merits of the case, and to the determination of the action which justice requires should be taken by the President on the petitioner's application for relief.

We have had the benefit of the testimony of a large number of officers of the late confederate army, a kind of testimony which was not available at the time of General Porter's trial by court-martial. We have also availed ourselves of the testimony of many officers and soldiers of the Union forces who were present on the battle-field, and of much documentary evidence, to throw additional light upon points not made perfectly clear in the record of evidence taken before the court-martial, and we have had the use of accurate maps of the battle-field of Manassas, constructed from recent actual surveys made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers by a distinguished officer of that corps, who was himself a participant in that battle.

Without such a map neither the testimony upon which General Porter was convicted nor the additional testimony submitted to this board could have been correctly understood.

The evidence which we have thus been able to examine, in addition to that which was before the court-martial, has placed beyond question many important facts which were before the subjects of dispute, and in respect to some of which radically erroneous opinions were entertained by General Porter's accusers, and doubtless by the court-martial that pronounced him guilty.

The result has been, as we believe, to establish beyond reasonable doubt all the facts essential to the formation of a correct judgment upon the merits of the case of Fitz-John Porter. We are thus enabled to report, with entire unanimity, and without doubt in our minds, with the reasons for our conclusions, what action, in our opinion, justice required should be taken by the President on the petitioner's application for relief.

The report then discusses the evidence taken, and concludes as follows:

General Pope appears from his orders and from his testimony to have been at that time wholly ignorant of the true situation. He had disapproved of the sending of Ricketts to Thoroughfare Gap to meet Longstreet on the 28th, believing that the main body of Lee's army could not reach the field of Manassas before the night of the 30th. Hence, he sent the order to Porter, dated 4.30 p. m., to attack Jackson's right flank or rear. Fortunately that order did not reach Porter until about sunset, too late for any attack to be made. Any attack which Porter could have made at any time that afternoon must necessarily have been fruitless of any good result. Porter's faithful, subordinate, and intelligent conduct that afternoon saved the Union Army from the defeat which would otherwise have resulted that day from the enemy's more speedy concentration. The only seriously critical period of that campaign, viz, between 11 a. m. and sunset of August 29, was thus safely passed. Porter had understood and appreciated the military situation, and so far as he had acted upon his own judgment his action had been wise and judicious. For the disaster of the succeeding day he was in no degree responsible. Whoever else may have been responsible, it did not flow from any action or inaction of his.

The judgment of the court-martial upon General Porter's conduct was evidently based upon greatly erroneous impressions, not only respecting what that conduct really was and the orders under which he was acting, but also respecting all the circumstances under which he acted. Especially was this true in respect to the character of the battle of the 29th of August. That battle consisted of a number of sharp and gallant combats between small portions of the opposing forces. Those combats were of short duration and were separated by long intervals of simple skirmishing and artillery duels. Until after 6 o'clock only a small part of the troops on either side were engaged at any time during the afternoon. Then, about sunset, one additional division on each side was engaged near Groveton. The musketry of that last contest and the yells of the confederate troops about dark were distinctly heard by the officers of Porter's corps; but at no other time during all that afternoon was the volume of musketry such that it could be heard at the position of Porter's troops. No sound but that of artillery was heard by them during all those hours when Porter was understood by the court-martial to have been listening to the sounds of a furious battle raging immediately to his right. And those sounds of artillery were by no means such as to indicate a general battle.

The reports of the 29th and those of the 30th of August have somehow been strangely confounded with each other. Even the confederate reports have, since the termination of the war, been similarly misconstrued. Those of the 30th have been misquoted as referring to the 29th, thus to prove that a furious battle was going on while Porter was comparatively inactive on the 29th. The fierce and gallant struggle of his own troops on the 30th has thus been used to sustain the original error under which he was condemned. General Porter was, in effect, condemned for not having taken any part in his own battle. Such was the error upon which General Porter was pronounced guilty of the most shameful crime known among soldiers. We believe not one among all the gallant soldiers on that bloody field was less deserving of such condemnation than he.

The evidence of bad animus in Porter's case ceases to be material in view of the evidence of his soldierly and faithful conduct. But it is our duty to say that the indiscreet and unkind terms in which General Porter expressed his distrust of the capacity of his superior commander can not be defended. And to that indiscretion was due, in very great measure, the misrepresentation of both his motives and his conduct and his consequent condemnation.

Having thus given the reasons for our conclusions, we have the honor to report, in accordance with the President's order, that, in our opinion, justice requires at his hands such action as may be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, and to restore him to the positions of which that sentence deprived him—such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General, U. S. Army.
ALFRED H. TERRY,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.
GEO. W. GETTY,
Brevet Major-General, U. S. Army, Colonel 3d Artillery.

The following letter accompanied the bill which was referred to this committee. In view of the high positions held by General Grant in the civil as well as military history of our country, we have deemed it proper to make this letter a part of our report, viz:

NEW YORK, November 3, 1883.

DEAR GENERAL: As there is some discussion as to the probable reasons for my change of mind in regard to your case, now pending before the people of the United States, I deem it proper that I should give them myself.

In the first place I never believed you to be a traitor, as many affected to believe. I thought I knew you too well to believe for one moment that you would accept the pay, rank, and command you held for the purpose of betraying the cause you were professing to serve. Then, too, your services had been too conspicuous as a staff officer at the beginning of the war and as commander of troops later to support such a theory for a moment.

But I did believe that General Pope was so odious to some of the officers in the East that a cordial support was not given him by them. I was disposed, too, to accept the verdict of a court-martial composed as the one which tried you was. Some of the members of that court I knew personally, and had great confidence in their judgment and justice. I supposed you had shared in this feeling toward Pope, and while not more guilty than others, you were unfortunate in being placed in a position where specifications could be made showing this hostility.

After the close of the war, when I was requested to read your new defense, I read it with the feeling above described. At the same time I read the other side as prepared—or furnished—by General Pope. This gave maps showing the positions of the two armies substantially as shown by the first of the diagrams presented by Mr. Lord, of San Francisco, from whom I copied in the article in your case, and did not indicate the presence of any other force than Jackson's. Then, too, it appeared that you had actually received an order at about 5 or 5.30 in the afternoon of August 29 to attack the enemy's flank, and that, too, at a time when a fierce battle was raging in the front.

I was first shaken in my views, however, when such a man as General Terry, who unites the lawyer with the soldier—a man of high character and ability, and who had believed as I had, and possibly worse—after many weeks of investigation should entirely vindicate you, and be sustained too by men of the known ability of his colleagues on the board. Until in 1881, when I re-examined for myself, my belief was that on the 29th of August, 1862, a great battle was fought between General Pope, commanding the Union forces, and General Jackson, commanding the confederate forces; that you, with a corps of twelve or more thousand men, stood in a position across the right flank of Jackson and where you could easily get into his rear; that you received an order to do so about 5 or 5.30 o'clock, which you refused to obey because of clouds of dust in your front, which you contended indicated an enemy in superior force to you; that you allowed Pope to get beaten while you stood idly looking on, without raising an arm to help him. With this understanding, and without a doubt as to the correctness of it, I condemned you.

Now, on a full investigation of the facts, I find that the battle was fought on the 30th of August; that your corps, commanded directly by you in person, lost a greater percentage than any other corps engaged; that the 4.30 order of the day before did not reach you until nightfall; that your immediate superior had cautioned you early in the day that you were too far out to the front then; that General Pope had cautioned you against bringing on an engagement except under such circumstances as he described, and that in any event you must be prepared to fall back behind Bull Run that night, where it would be necessary for you to be to receive supplies; that from 11 o'clock of the 29th you were confronted by a force of twice your own number, of whose presence you had positive proof, while General Pope did not know of it.

This last fact is shown by the wording of the 4.30 order. It directed you to attack the enemy's right and to get into his rear. General Pope's circular of the morning of the 29th said that General Lee was advancing by way of Thoroughfare Gap. At the rate at which he was moving he would be up the night of the 30th or the morning of the 31st.

In his testimony before the court-martial which tried you he said, under oath, that he did not know of the arrival of Lee's command until 6 o'clock of the 29th, an hour and a half after he had dictated the order for your attack.

His circular and testimony prove conclusively that Jackson, and Jackson alone, was the enemy he intended you to attack. Your knowledge of this fact, as well as of the fact that you had another force quite double yours in addition in your front, would have been sufficient justification for your not attacking, even if the order had been received in time. Of course this would not apply if a battle had been raging between Jackson and Pope. At the hour you received the order all was quiet.

This very short, hastily written, and incomplete summary shows why and when my mind underwent a change. I have no doubt now but the change would have taken place in 1867 if I had then made an investigation. I regret now that I did not understand your case then as I do now. Your whole life since your trial, as well as your services before, disprove the great burden of the charges then sustained by a court-martial. As long as I have a voice it shall be raised in your support without any reference to the effect upon me or others. Your restoration to the Army simply I would regard as a very inadequate and unjust reparation. While men—one at least—have been restored to the Army because of their gallantry and wounds after conviction and sentence, and when there is no doubt of their guilt, are given all their pay for the years they were out of the service, I can see no reason for your having less.

I hope for you a thorough vindication, not only by Congress, but in the minds of your countrymen.

Faithfully, yours,

U. S. GRANT.

General F. J. PORTER, Morristown.

It appears from the proceedings of the court-martial which tried General Porter that during the progress of the trial the following letter was read in open court, namely:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, D. C., January 5, 1863.

GENERAL: The state of the service imperatively demands that the proceedings in the court over which you are now presiding, having been pending more than four weeks, should be brought to a close without any unnecessary delay. You are therefore directed to sit without regard to hours, and close your proceedings as speedily as may be consistent with justice and the public service.

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Major-General HUNTER, President, &c.

One of the most important points involved in the trial of General Porter was as to the position of certain corps and divisions of the confederate army at particular hours during the battle. The evidence of the confederate officers commanding these corps and divisions could not be obtained at that time.

After the lapse of sixteen years, when the passions and prejudices existing during the original trial had abated, when the reports of the confederate officers as to the position of their commands could be obtained, and when these officers themselves could appear and give evidence, when the proceedings could be conducted without unseemly haste, a board, composed of the most distinguished officers of our Army, is convened by the President to review the case and take this additional evidence.

The conclusions of this board are presented to us in the extracts from their report above quoted. These conclusions are most earnestly indorsed and approved by General Grant, whose opinions upon a subject of this nature are certainly entitled to the consideration of his countrymen.

The question presented to Congress is: Shall the decision of a court held in the heat and excitement of a civil war, laboring under such disadvantages in securing important evidence, stand as the final verdict of our Government as against the later and more exhaustive researches of a board composed of the most distinguished officers of our Army, possessing every means of securing evidence.

In considering this case it should not be forgotten that while we know the recent board was unanimous in its decision, no one outside the members of the original court knows, or ever can know, how the vote of that court stood. For aught that is known to the contrary the vote for the conviction of Porter may have been carried by a single member, and that member may have been the one who left his seat as a judge in the case and became the most important witness against the accused.

Under the circumstances your committee believe that the report of the board appointed by the President should have the greater weight; and we therefore respectfully recommend the passage of the bill herewith submitted.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to have read in connection with the majority report the report of the minority.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the views of the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs upon this bill will now be read. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Military Affairs submit the following as among the reasons why it can not support the bill (H. R. 1015):

Should the bill as reported by the majority become a law it restores Fitz-John Porter, late a major-general of the United States volunteers, and a brevet brigadier-general of the Army, to a position as colonel in the Army, with the same grade and rank, together with all the rights, titles, and privileges held by him at the time of his dismissal from the Army by sentence of court-martial promulgated January 27, 1863, and, in the discretion of the President, to place him on the retired-list of the Army of that grade, and especially increases the retired-list for that purpose, but says the act shall not be construed as authorizing pay, compensation, or allowance prior to appointment. This bill sets aside the judgment of the highest military tribunal ever organized in this country, thereby conflicting with the very spirit of our Constitution. It will say the judgment of that court was either corrupt, or founded upon mistaken or faulty evidence, although taken when the events were fresh in the minds of the witnesses, and that we have a higher regard for the evidence of the officers in the army we were fighting at that time than we have for that given by those fighting on our side.

The minority do not feel warranted in saying that it was the intention of the framers of the bill to give Mr. Porter pay from the date of his dismissal, but a careful reading of it, in the opinion of your minority, will leave it an open question whether or not he would not be authorized under it to receive such pay. It "authorizes his appointment as colonel, with the same grade and rank held by him at the date of his dismissal, with all the rights, titles, and privileges held by him at that time," and among his rights was the one to draw pay; so that while this bill may not give him pay directly, it gives him his original status in the Army, and would thereby give him the same right to draw pay as was and is vested in any colonel in the Army on the active-list until the President should see proper to retire him, when he would receive two-thirds pay as colonel with 40 per cent. service allowance, i. e., $4,500 per annum as full pay, or $3,000 retired pay from any date he would hereafter be retired; so that the minority of your committee suggests that if it is not the intention of the bill to give pay under or by it, the words "appointment under it," at the last of the bill, be stricken out and the words the "passage of this act" be inserted.

The minority of your committee is pleased to adopt the able report of the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Forty-sixth Congress on a similar bill for the relief of Mr. Porter, and to make it a part of this report so far as it applies to this bill under consideration, viz, as expressing in the main our views:

[House report, No. 129, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The minority of the Committee on Military Affairs submit the following report, giving some of the reasons why they can not approve and support House bill 2976. That bill, which meets with the approval of the majority, sets aside and revokes the findings of the court-martial by which Fitz-John Porter was cashiered, on the grounds that the findings and sentence "were based in error and without due knowledge of the facts in the case." It also restores him to the service of the United States, with all the rank and privileges to which he would have been entitled had there been no court. It creates the new and, so far as we know, heretofore unknown position of supernumerary colonel for him, to be held by him until a vacancy occurs, when he is to be regularly assigned; and it gives him the retired pay of a major-general and colonel, amounting, in the aggregate, to the enormous sum of between fifty and sixty thousand dollars.

All this, as the majority say, because he has had a wrong done him; because he has been deprived of the rights of citizenship upon unfounded charges, and because he has been at great expense in vindicating his character and conduct as an officer and soldier from the disgrace and obloquy cast upon him. To each and every one of these assertions the minority of your committee object, and from the conclusions drawn and the bill itself they dissent.

It is with great regret and a very considerable degree of embarrassment that they find it necessary to do so. Regret, because no one can read unmoved the appeals of General Porter; and embarrassment, because the majority have adopted as the basis of their report the finding and recommendation of the board of officers convened by the President of the United States in June, 1878. That board was composed of three distinguished officers of the Army—two graduates of the Military Academy—and naturally, perhaps, its report is entitled to weight. Notwithstanding this, the minority of your committee, in the discharge of the duty imposed upon them, do not hesitate to antagonize the findings of the board, and to express the opinion that they were based largely upon evidence not fairly or properly applicable to a correct determination of the case.

At all events the record shows that although the board was convened by the President in order that "he might be fully informed of the facts of the case," the information given by it only satisfied him—to quote his language—"that he ought to lay the proceedings and conclusions before Congress." In this shape and in this manner it has reached the Committee on Military Affairs, and, with a clear understanding of the apparent presumption of the non-professional and ex-volunteer mind criticising the conclusions of a board of regular officers, we have the honor to submit the following:

In August, 1862, Fitz-John Porter was a major-general of volunteers, colonel and brevet brigadier-general in the regular Army, and in command of the Fifth Army Corps. For certain alleged offenses he was tried and convicted by a court-martial and sentenced to be cashiered, and on 21st of January, 1863, the sentence was approved by Abraham Lincoln, then President of the United States. In this connection it is proper to state that the appeal made by Porter to President Lincoln in August, 1863, for a reopening of the case was disregarded, as were the subsequent ones to President Johnson in 1867 and to President Grant in 1869. The charges upon which General Porter was tried were violation of the ninth and fifty-second articles of war, the punishment of which was death, or such other penalty as a court-martial might inflict. Generally speaking they provide for the punishment of any officer or soldier who disobeys the command of his superior officer or for the punishment of any officer or soldier who misbehaves himself in the presence of the enemy.

On these charges General Porter was found guilty, was cashiered, and forever disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust under the Government of the United States. His trial was held within a few months of the battle of Manassas, and when witnesses who were present on the side of the national forces were easily obtained. The movements of the armies were fresh in the minds of those interested; the court was composed of men eminent in their profession, six of them graduates of West Point, some intimate personal friends of the accused, and some have become equally eminent in civil life; and nothing has been shown to convince us that they were not honestly anxious to do justice in accordance with their oaths, without partiality, favor, or affection. Porter himself made no objection to the detail of the court, and, in addressing it, said: "Yourselves most, if not all, have known me well."

The proceedings lasted for forty-five days, and many witnesses appeared before it, including Generals Pope, McDowell, Heintzelman, Morell, Griffin, Reynolds, Sykes, Butterfield, and Buford, who commanded corps, divisions, and brigades on the days of the 27th, 28th, 29th, and 30th of August, 1862. In addition, the court had the benefit of the testimony of Generals McClellan, Burnside, Parke, and others, who were not present in the action, but were conversant with some of the facts connected with it, and the accused was represented by distinguished counsel. After a patient investigation the court reached its conclusions, and the minority of your committee, after as careful an examination of the proceedings as possible under the circumstances, do not hesitate to say that they fail to see how from the evidence the court could have determined otherwise. At the time, and perhaps since, efforts were made to make it appear that some scape-goat was necessary for the disasters of that most disastrous campaign. Then, and possibly since, suggestions were made that Porter's trial was a persecution, that it was partisan or political, and that perhaps some one else was aimed at through him. Assertions like these, to which more or less publicity was given by the press, attracted much attention to the case, and in consequence it has been loaded down by all sorts of criticisms reflecting upon many distinguished men, and, in our judgment, foreign to its merits.

The minority of your committee at the outset express no opinion in regard to the wisdom of many, or any, of General Pope's movements, from the time when he assumed command of the Army of Virginia until he relinquished it. Neither do they deem it at all necessary that they should express any opinion in regard to his competency for the place to which the President had called him. Competent or incompetent, he was there by proper authority, and he was General Porter's lawful superior from the time he reported to him for duty. The orders he issued to Porter he had the right to issue, and he also had the right to expect that they would receive unquestioning and cheerful obedience. Almost from the time when Porter disembarked at Aquia Creek and marched from there to the Rappahannock and until after the battle of Manassas, he kept up a correspondence with General Burnside then and until he reported to Pope, his superior officer.

Many, perhaps all, of these dispatches are published in part 1 of Senate Ex. Doc. 37, Forty-sixth Congress, and we invite attention to them to show the spirit in which General Porter marched to report for duty to General Pope, and the spirit in which he received orders, statements, and explanations from him. Complaining, doubting, fault-finding, and critical, they indicate very clearly an utter want of confidence in General Pope, and a determination to sit in judgment upon him, his orders, and his acts. Loyalty to his chief, in the sense that he was to give a cheerful if not an eager obedience and support to him, there was none; but, on the contrary, he manifested so querulous a disposition, that even the board which apologizes for him find him censurable in this respect (see paragraph III, page 25, Report of Board of Officers). That he disobeyed positive orders is undeniable; and that he rendered himself amenable to the same strict rule and letter of the law that he was constantly applying to his chief is, in our opinion, equally undeniable.

The excuse or justification for his disobedience is set forth fully in the report of the board, now adopted as the report of the majority of your committee; and its refutation in detail will require more time and space than can be given in this report. Largely, if not exclusively, the board relies for their conclusions, in regard to the second charge especially, upon testimony gathered from confederate sources since the suppression of the rebellion to show that on the 29th of August, 1862, Fitz-John Porter deserved well of the Republic by not attacking on or near the Gainesville road. Such an attack, they say, would have been not only a "great blunder," but a "great crime;" failure to attack "saved the Union Army from disaster on that day," and "his conduct was obedient, subordinate, faithful, and judicious."

With deference to this distinguished board, the minority report that those are questions for discussion; that they will be prepared to discuss them before the House and the country at the proper time; and that they believe they can establish by evidence that on that day (the 29th of August, 1862) Fitz-John Porter's conduct was not "obedient," was not "faithful," was not "judicious." They further say that they do not believe that the proper rule by which to judge Fitz-John Porter's conduct is the one that permits the subsequent testimony and statements of confederate officers to be used to establish his innocence. What he must be held responsible for, in our opinion, is what he knew at the time, not what he has discovered since from confederate sources. We do not question the right of General Porter to introduce this newly discovered evidence before the board of officers, because the terms of the order convening it authorizes him to do so; but we do emphatically dissent from the opinion that confederate testimony is not only to acquit Fitz-John Porter and restore him to his former rank in the Army, but to convict the court which tried him.

On the 29th of August he had no information, so far as we can discover, beyond what other Federal officers had of the character of the force confronting him. What he did know, however, was that he was ordered to "push toward Gainesville;" that subsequently he was ordered in express terms to attack; that he failed to do so, and he had the serious problem presented to him throughout the greater part of the day of remaining inactive within striking distance of the enemy, while the thunder of the guns near Groveton indicated serious work between the enemy and his comrades but three miles distant on his right. Even if it be admitted that the confederate testimony and confederate reports are to determine the right or the wrong of the action of a Union corps commander on the day of battle or in the presence of the enemy, and they are to be made the foundation for his restoration to the Army and the receipt of a large money award, we deny that those reports are so unanimous or so pertinent as to warrant the conclusions of the board and of the majority of your committee. (See reports of confederate generals Lee, Hill, Longstreet, Stuart, and others.)

The reference by the board of officers to the action of Porter and his command on the 30th of August, in order, as they state, "to fully understand the case," is, in the opinion of the minority, not only foreign to it, but wholly out of place. His presence on the battle-field on that day was in consequence of a peremptory order, issued in terms so direct and distrustful that it clearly expressed the opinion of his superior officer that he had signally failed in his duty on the 29th. No discretion was possible under it, but the board do not hesitate to say that at first sight it would appear that in his prompt and unhesitating movement under this order General Porter committed a "grave fault." They assume that upon its receipt he was on what they are pleased to call the "field of battle," confronting the enemy "in force," and "holding a position of vital importance to the security of Pope's army." That he was not on the field of battle in the sense sought to be conveyed by the board is shown not only by testimony of witnesses, but by the absence of the usual results of a battle—the record of the killed and wounded in his command. That he was confronting the enemy is true, but the battle had been going on for the greater part of the day, some three miles from him on the right, while he remained inactive or substantially so, confronted by a force that, outside of confederate sources, we have no reason to believe was large or dangerous. Until the arrival of McDowell, at about 12 o'clock, communicating the dispatch of Buford that seventeen regiments and a battery had passed "through Gainesville up the pike toward Centreville," there was nothing to show the presence of anything but cavalry in Porter's vicinity, and it was not until 3 o'clock that the officer in command of the skirmishers announced the presence of a large force in the front. At no time during the day was a reconnaissance in force made or a vigorous effort to develop his strength, and it is mere guesswork to say that the forces reported by Buford passed down the road toward Manassas and in the direction of Porter.

Notwithstanding the conviction that forced itself upon the board that Porter very nearly committed a "grave fault" in obeying the order dated at 8.50 on the night of the 29th, they do, however, conclude that nothing remained but for him to obey. They also assert that the action of the Fifth Corps on the 30th of August amply vindicated the character of its chief, and showed to the world that "disobedience of orders" and "misbehavior in the presence of the enemy" could not possibly have found any place in the head or heart of its commander. To this view of the case the minority of your committee also dissent.

The gallant behavior of the Fifth Corps on the 30th did not "vindicate" either the head or the heart of its commander for his conduct on the previous day; but it did vindicate and illustrate the high qualities of the Union soldier, the patient rank and file of the army, who never failed their superiors, and whose patriotism, devotion, and courage are about the only redeeming features of those disastrous days. They fought, as they always had fought when the opportunity was given them, well. They died as their comrades had died in the Peninsula, without complaint or repining, and they neither critieised the order nor were "surprised" at the order, nor hesitated about the order that pushed them against the deadly rifles of the confederate soldier. They obeyed orders loyally.

For all the purposes of determining the guilt or innocence of Fitz-John Porter on the 29th, his conduct on the 30th has, in our opinion, no more pertinence than had his conduct at Mechanicsville or Malvern Hill. Indeed, it is more than probable that at last, realizing the awkwardness of the position in which he had placed himself by his singular conduct since reporting to Pope, he found it necessary to display more than ordinary zeal and energy when fighting under his immediate and personal command. Whatever his motives, he deserves credit for what he did on the 30th of August; for what he did, or rather did not, on the 29th of August, he deserved censure and punishment; but certainly his action on the second day can not be made to justify and explain away his conduct on the first, though a distinguished board says it should.

The board of officers also seem to be of the opinion that the actions of the 29th and 30th have been confounded by nearly every one but themselves. To use their own expression, "General Porter was in effect condemned for not having taken any part in his own battle." On this also the minority beg leave to report that they join issue with the board. No one who follows the movements of Porter's corps from the 27th to the night of the 30th can possibly mistake its positions on the important days of the 29th and 30th or confound it in any way with other troops. The statement made by the board, "that the reports referring to the 30th have been misquoted as referring to the 29th, thus to prove that a furious battle was going on while Porter was comparatively inactive on the 29th," is, in our opinion, not sustained by the facts. In our opinion it is established by official reports made immediately after the battle, as well as by the testimony of witnesses, that a battle of serious proportions was in progress during the greater part of the 29th, the firing swelling and increasing in volume towards the middle of the afternoon.

Every Union official report which we have examined speaks of the early hour at which fighting began on the 29th, of its duration and its fierceness. Not one of the officers from whom we shall quote fails to distinguish between the two days, keeping them clearly separate and apart; and not one in speaking of the action on the 29th refers even indirectly to the presence of Porter either in their front, their rear, or on their flank. They all, however, or nearly all, mention the action of his corps on the 30th, and in every case the narrative of the two days is continuous, intelligent, and easily followed. We quote from volume VI, Official Military Reports of the Rebellion, Adjutant-General's Office, and we desire to call attention to the fact that some were written almost on the battle-field, and all, perhaps, within a month of the action.

General Sigel, commanding the First Corps, says, "In the course of about four hours, from 6½ to 10½ in the morning, our whole infantry force, and nearly all of our batteries, were engaged with the enemy." At the last hour the "enemy threw forward masses of troops which were driven back by troops of Milroy and Schurz." Schenck's division was then engaged and the enemy was trying to turn the left. "At this critical moment General Kearny arrived on the field and deployed on our right, while General Reno's troops came to our support." Scarcely were these troops in position when the contest began with renewed vigor and vehemence, the enemy attacking along our whole line from extreme right to extreme left." At 12 o'clock, he then speaks of Reynolds's troops taking position on his left, and at 2 o'clock of General Hooker's troops arriving on the field of battle, so that by 2 p. m., according to Sigel, his whole corps, with Kearny's, Reynolds's, Hooker's, and Reno's divisions, was engaged. General Schurz speaks of "the fire extending along his whole line and that it became lively." This was before 10 o'clock, for at that hour he speaks of Kearny's arrival on the field. Schenck, division commander, states "that before one or two o'clock all his brigades were engaged." General Heintzelman, corps commander, says: "At 10 a. m. reached field of battle; at 11 a. m. head of Hooker's division arrived, and General Reno an hour later; that at the request of Sigel he ordered Hooker to place one of his brigades at Sigel's disposition, then hard pressed."

Kearny, a division commander who was killed on the 1st of September at Chantilly, wrote his report of the battle at Centreville on the 31st, but had not time to sign it. It was forwarded by General Birney, who succeeded him. That report states substantially that on the 29th, on his arrival, he was assigned to the holding of the right wing, with his left on the Leesburg road; that during the first hours of combat, on some tired regiments falling back, General Birney, on his own accord, rapidly pushed across to give them a hand. "In the early afternoon" General Pope's order was received to send a strong force diagonally to the front to relieve the center in the woods from pressure. General Robinson's brigade, with some other regiments, drove forward several hundred yards, but the center of the main battle being shortly driven, my detachment was obliged to cease to advance. All this appears to have happened before five o'clock, for he says, "At five o'clock, thinking I might drive the enemy by an unexpected attack, I brought up the most of Birney's regiment, changed front to the left to sweep with a rush the line of the enemy. This was most successful. The enemy was rolled up on his right. We took no part in the fighting of the 30th."

General J. B. Carr, of the State of New York, says: "At 2 o'clock, 29th, Friday morning, received orders to march at 3 a. m., to support General Kearny. A march of ten miles brought us to Bull Run battle-field. About 11 a. m. was ordered into position to support a battery where the enemy was engaged with Sigel. Remaining in that position some time, was ordered to send two regiments to relieve Sigel's troops. Did so, and afterwards received orders to take balance of brigade into woods, which I did about 2 p. m., where I at once engaged the enemy and fought him for a space of two hours, holding my position until ammunition was expended, and about 4 p. m. was relieved." He was in Hooker's division, and the country knows that Hooker's command, before expending its ammunition, as a rule did some fighting that was more serious than a "sharp combat."

Grover, another brigade commander, says: "Arrived on the battle-field about 9 a. m. The battle had already commenced, and the brigade was temporarily placed under the orders of Sigel." At 3 he says he received the order to advance, which was immediately obeyed; to carry the embankment, which he did in a charge that was perhaps unequaled in the history of the war. The conflict was hand to hand with bayonets and clubbed muskets, and his brigade broke in succession two lines of the enemy, but the third line swept him back. In this fierce encounter he lost out of five small regiments 41 killed, 327 wounded, and 116 missing.

Even the authority referred to by the board (General Robert E. Lee's report, pages 519 and 520, record of board) speaks of "the battle raging with fury," and of its continuing until 9 p. m. He also says that Stuart (the cavalry officer on the right) reported the advance of a large force threatening Longstreet's right; that the brigades of Wilcox were sent to re-enforce Jones, but "no serious attack was made, and after firing a few shots the enemy withdrew." He also speaks of this demonstration as having been made on the right, while a large force advanced to assail the left, Jackson's position. The enemy which he speaks of as having made a demonstration and firing a few shots could have been no other command but that of Porter's, and Lee subsequently says that Wilcox was withdrawn from the right, where he had been sent.

From this and other evidence the minority of your committee report that in their opinion there was much and serious fighting on the 29th, except in Fitz-John Porter's front, where there appears to have been none. Serious as it was, and reaching the dignity of a battle, according to General Lee, as well as many officers on the Union side, the board of officers speak of it as a number of "sharp and gallant combats between small portions of the opposing forces." From the best evidence we can gather, Sigel, with his corps, was engaged on the 29th. Heintzelman, with Hooker's and Kearny's divisions, was engaged on the 29th. Reno's and Stevens's divisions were engaged on the 29th. Reynolds's and part of King's were engaged on the 29th; and, in fact, all the available forces were in action on that day except Porter's command and Ricketts's division. How long "intervals" there were between the fighting we can not say; but, judging from the reports of officers engaged, they were neither frequent nor prolonged; and unless those who made them are much mistaken, there was a long list of killed and wounded on the 29th.

When the board predicts the disastrous consequences that would have followed an attack by Porter at any time after the early afternoon, they enter the field of speculation. There we shall not follow them, but we simply call attention to the reports (page 519, board record, report of General Lee) from confederate sources, which show that the mere appearance of the head of Porter's column was so threatening that General Lee detached a division to meet it. Who can predict the result had a powerful and well-sustained attack been made by 8,000 or 10,000 men, at any time during the day, on the Gainesville road?

On this point we wish to call attention to the opinion of a careful military historian—the author of, perhaps, the best history of our civil war that has been written. With ample facilities to inform himself, and so situated that he can and does write without prejudice or passion, the Comte de Paris, in volume ii, page 292, of his history, says:

"His (Porter's) attack, therefore, could not have produced the results upon which the commander-in-chief had counted. But neither the impossibility of executing to the letter the order of the latter, nor even the instructions which McDowell may have given him during the day, afford any excuse for his having remained so long inactive in the presence of the enemy, with two fine divisions, while a great battle was being fought in his vicinity. In short, if the road he had to follow was barred against him—if, therefore, he could not cut the enemy's army in two and secure its defeat—it is equally certain that a vigorous attack made by him upon Longstreet's right would have drawn out all the forces of this general, and, by freeing the rest of the Union line, would probably have prevented the reverse which the latter sustained at the close of the day. We can not avoid, therefore, blaming his inaction at such time and under such circumstances.

"This indifference on the part of Porter to the cannon's appeal, the manner in which he interpreted the orders of superiors, and the tardiness with which these orders reached him, were the inevitable consequences of the confusion we have already referred to in the general movement of the army."

This is the deliberate opinion of a disinterested writer, who, while he accepts the board's theory that Longstreet was up within supporting distance of Jackson early in the day, still censures in distinct terms the inaction of Porter. Whatever may be the action of Congress on the bill now before it, that this will be the verdict of history the minority of your committee certainly believe.

The minority concede that if the Government does injustice to one of its citizens it should make reparation; but in this case, in their opinion, no injustice has been done. Notwithstanding this, they have concluded to recommend to the House the passage of a joint resolution removing so much of Fitz-John Porter's sentence as prohibits him from holding any office of profit or trust under the Government. Its passage will give him no claim, however, upon his former rank, or upon the Treasury of the United States. Logically, perhaps, the minority should not recommend it, but when we consider that amnesty and pardon have been given to those formerly in arms against the Government, and that the removal of disabilities for offenses certainly as dangerous as his to the perpetuity of the Union are of every day occurrence, the reasons for their action in Porter's case are obvious.

One of his complaints is that his sentence is a continuing one, and that he has been deprived of the rights of citizenship. The passage of the resolution will remove these disabilities, and enable him to remit the whole question to the people or to some other tribunal than Congress. It is, in our opinion, quite clear that he should not be restored to his former rank in the Army, and that he should not receive the retired pay, amounting to $50,000 or $60,000, provided in the bill for his relief; but his restoration to the rights of citizenship is an act of grace and clemency that the Government can do without in any way manifesting its disapproval of the findings and sentence of the court-martial that tried and convicted him. There were periods of his life when his services were of value to his country, and it is but fair, perhaps, that they should be considered now in determining his case; but that they should go to the extent of the relief proposed by the majority would be, in our opinion, unwise, inexpedient, and unjust.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Before the reading of the views of the minority was concluded,

Mr. MAGINNIS said: I would like to interrupt the reading for a moment. My colleague on the committee [Mr. STEELE] adopts as a part of his report a report heretofore made on a different bill. I presume he adopts only so much of that report as is applicable to the bill now before the House.

Mr. STEELE. The report itself states how far it is applicable to this bill. I wish to say further that in the opinion of the minority of the committee there is very little difference between the two bills.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I only wanted that there should be no misunderstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order at this time. The Clerk is engaged in reading the views of the minority.

The Clerk resumed the reading, but was interrupted by

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, when I presented the minority report it was ordered by the House to be printed with the majority report. Yesterday I called on the printing clerk to ascertain where the minority reports were, why they were not in the House. Up to this time, although I have inquired of a great many gentlemen present, I have been unable to see a minority report on this floor. I would like to have an order made by the proper authority that the minority reports be immediately brought in here and distributed with the majority reports.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Indiana that it is not the rule that reports of this kind be circulated in the House. They are to be found in the document-room, where gentlemen desiring them can apply for them.

Mr. REED. They are not there.

Mr. STEELE. My information is that they are not there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the usual number required by the rules to be printed was printed and has been exhausted.

Mr. STEELE. Well, I am not surprised at that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is also informed that under the rule requiring reports printed by the Public Printer to be forwarded to members of the House, these reports have been sent to each member.

Mr. REED. But they have not been received.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I think, Mr. Chairman, if that be true the consideration of this case ought to be postponed until the minority of the committee can have an opportunity of having their report presented to the members of the House and read with the majority report.

The CHAIRMAN. The views of the minority in parliamentary law are no part of the report of the committee. They are simply the views of the minority on the committee.

Mr. STEELE. But have we not the right to have the report of the minority read?

The CHAIRMAN. The views of the minority can only be read by unanimous consent. They are simply in the nature of remarks by the gentlemen who submit them.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. But the majority report has been allowed to be read.

Mr. STEELE. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me after the majority report has been distributed all over the House it is not a gracious thing the minority report should not also be laid before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule requires that the reports of committees shall be distributed in the manner already indicated by the Chair. The present occupant of the chair knows of no rule providing for the distribution of the views of the minority. Whatever is done in reference to the views of the minority is necessarily done by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. The House unanimously ordered the printing of the views of the minority.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. STEELE. By order of the House the views of the minority were to accompany the majority report and to be printed with it.

Mr. REED. That was the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. This Committee of the Whole House can not determine these questions.

Mr. SLOCUM. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], who submitted the views of the minority, knows very well that the majority report was printed long before he presented the views of the minority. Now, the Speaker is not to blame, nor is anybody else in this House to blame. The majority of the committee, twelve out of fourteen, got their report in, and it was ordered to be printed, and when printed it was distributed and laid upon the desks of members. That was done before the gentleman presented his minority views. How could they be printed together when such was the case? Why, it is utterly absurd.

Mr. STEELE. It was the order of the House, as stated by the Speaker, that the views of the minority should be printed with the report of the majority.

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is all out of order.

Mr. CALKINS. It may be all out of order, Mr. Chairman, but still the House has the right to any information it seeks. Now, when the order of the House was made that the reports of the majority and the minority should be printed together, it was simply the duty of the Public Printer to print them in that form, notwithstanding the report of the majority was handed in before the views of the minority. That was the duty of the Public Printer, and it is certainly the duty of this House to see to it that this order made on that occasion shall be carried out. That they have not been printed together and distributed in accordance with the order of the House is what my colleague complains of. He complains that the Public Printer, or some one else charged with that duty, has not carried out the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. This Committee of the Whole House can not take notice of the fact that the Public Printer or any other officer has failed to perform his duty. We are now in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter is under consideration. The report of the majority has been read, and, by unanimous consent, at the request of the gentleman from Indiana, the Clerk is now proceeding to read the views of the minority.

Mr. CURTIN. I call for the regular order.

The reading of the views of the minority was then concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now open for general debate.

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration simply proposes to restore Fitz-John Porter to the Army, placing his name on the retired-list, so that no one will be displaced by the action of Congress in case the bill passes. I notice in the minority report an allusion to the idea that the bill would give General Porter back pay. It is entirely a new idea to me, for the bill itself says that nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing pay, compensation, or allowance prior to appointment under it. Now it is possible that the minority are right, and if they are, the bill should be amended so as to make it just what I believe it to be, not to give General Porter a dollar of pay.

The bill under consideration provides simply for the restoration of Fitz-John Porter to the Army with the rank held by him at the date of his dismissal. It places his name on the retired-list, so that no officer now on the active-list will be affected by his restoration.

In advocating the bill, which I propose to do very briefly, I shall not discuss the evidence taken by the court which condemned him nor that taken by the board which exculpated him. This has been done at great length in both Houses of Congress. Many pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the last session are devoted to critical discussions of questions which it is difficult for any person not versed in military matters to fully understand. After all the speeches were delivered, I doubt if there were twenty gentlemen in either House who had any clearer idea of the merits of the case than they had before the subject was brought before Congress. In fact, this subject was so purely technical, so purely military in its character, that it is little else than an absurdity for Congress to sit as a court of appeal to review the evidence and decide on the merits of the case. The only proper court to perform this duty was the one selected by the President, composed, as it was, of the ablest, most intelligent, and most experienced officers in the Army. That was in every respect a competent court. It labored long and zealously, giving months of time to the faithful discharge of its duties. It had before it the proceedings of the court which condemned General Porter, and was brought face to face with many of the witnesses who had testified before that court, and many new witnesses, who brought to light important evidence, which could not be obtained on the original trial. It made repeated and earnest efforts to secure the presence of General Pope, but he peremptorily declined to appear.

This was the real court of appeal in this case, and its decision should be final.

The President could not have selected three officers whose opinions should have greater weight. The prejudices of at least two members of the board were strongly against the accused officer, so strongly that they thought seriously of declining to serve, believing that for them to do so would be unjust to Porter. If any member of this House desires to read an intelligent discussion of the merits of this case in all its details I commend him to the report of this board. The whole case has been reviewed by another authority, one entitled to as much consideration as the board selected for the purpose. The review to which I allude is terse, clear, and convincing. If any member desires a clear statement of the case he need not wade through hundreds of pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but can find it in the few pointed and convincing sentences penned by General Grant.

In presenting this case to the House I do not intend to add one word to what has been said by Generals Grant, Schofield, Terry and Getty as to the conduct of General Porter.

I shall content myself with calling attention to a few circumstances, which I think should have great weight. The condition of our country at the time General Porter was brought to trial is well known. The general who organized the Army of the Potomac, and under whom that army had long served, had recently been removed from his command. A large portion of that army were attached to their old commander. His successor was a stranger to them. It required great skill on the part of the new commander to win the confidence and esteem of his command. That skill unfortunately was not exercised. The army suffered a great reverse under its new leader. A feeling of gloom and despondency prevailed throughout the land. Officers and soldiers, as well as civilians, were divided in sentiment. Every one had his own convictions as to the cause of our disasters.

The selection at that time of a court-martial from among the general officers assembled in Washington which would be free from prejudice on a question involving the responsibility for these disasters was an utter impossibility. I doubt if a court of competent civilians which would have been entirely unbiased could then have been selected.

In this hour of excitement Fitz-John Porter was placed on trial on charges involving this question of responsibility. The court was selected by General Halleck, virtually one of Porter's accusers. I cast no aspersion upon the court. Under the circumstances, however, the result was a foregone conclusion. Porter was convicted. He had no appeal. The review of his case was made by those who ordered the court. He was not permitted to appear in person or by counsel before the reviewing officers, who were the military advisers of the President. Under these circumstances, an officer who had served his country with great distinction for seventeen years was deprived of that which was dearer to him than life itself, his hard-earned reputation.

General Porter had won two brevets for gallantry on the battlefields of Mexico. He had served with distinction in the civil war in every battle in which the Army of the Potomac had been engaged. Up to the hour of his arrest there was not a stain on his escutcheon. In this time of intense excitement, when the passions of men usurped the place of reason, his brilliant reputation was no shield for him. For twenty long years he has suffered as few men—even the worst criminals—have ever been condemned to suffer. During these years many men distinguished in all vocations of life have appealed to the Government in his behalf. Those making the appeals were not confined to one political party or to one State or section of our country. The appeals came from all classes—from soldiers and civilians—from the East and the West.

The first official act tending toward justice in this matter was the order appointing a board to investigate the case. And what was this order? It merely granted to General Porter the right of appeal—a right which, if the case had been tried before a civil court in any State in the Union, would have been granted by the laws of the State. If General Porter had been a party to a suit in the State of New York involving the sum of $50, and had believed that injustice had been done him, he would have been entitled to an appeal to the supreme court. If he had deemed that injustice had been done him by that court, he could have taken his case to the highest court of the State. But having been tried in an hour of intense excitement, in the very hot-bed of this excitement, and by a court which from the very nature of things could not be free from prejudice, he could only secure the right of appeal after fifteen years of suffering, and then only as a favor. Thank God, the privilege which our civil laws would have secured to him as a matter of right was finally granted, and Fitz-John Porter, after these long years of suffering, to-day stands before the world fully vindicated. No, not vindicated, but awarded the highest meed of praise by the most eminent military authority for his conduct on the very occasion on which he is charged with crime.

The result of the protracted investigation by the board of distinguished officers selected by the President to review this case is summed up in these words:

> Porter's faithful, subordinate, and intelligent conduct that afternoon saved the Union Army from the defeat which would otherwise have resulted that day from the enemy's more speedy concentration.
> * * * * * * *
> We believe not one among all the gallant soldiers on that bloody field was less deserving of such condemnation than he.

In the recent letter of General Grant, reviewing this case, he concludes by assuring General Porter:

> As long as I have a voice it shall be raised in your support, without reference to its effect upon me or others. Your restoration to the Army simply I would regard as an inadequate and unjust reparation.

I urge the passage of this bill, not merely because I believe it due to Porter, but for the credit and honor of our country. We can not afford to have it said that the Government, with all this evidence before it, refused to right this terrible wrong.

There is one piece of evidence in this case, to which allusion has seldom been made, which, in my judgment, outweighs the opinion of General Grant or the findings of the board. It outweighs all the arguments of politicians or soldiers who were not on the ground. I allude to the evidence of the officers and soldiers of Porter's command—the men who were with him in all the operations under Pope. These men are the strongest witnesses in his behalf.

Year after year the Fifth Army Corps Association, composed of the men of his old command, has assembled and adopted, without a dissenting voice, resolutions earnestly entreating the Government to do justice to their old commander. Who are these officers who take so deep an interest in his behalf? Were they, too, insubordinate and disloyal to their country? Scores, yes hundreds, of them bear the scars of wounds received in battles fought under Porter. On the list will be found the names of many of the best and bravest men who ever served in the Union Army. I defy any man in the country to find even a single private soldier who served under Porter on the 29th and 30th of August who will not testify in his behalf. And who were these private soldiers? Were they, too, disloyal and seeking the defeat of our army? Or were they ignorant and likely to be deceived?

No class of men ever bore arms in any country who were more intelligent or quicker to discern faults and weaknesses of their officers than were the soldiers of either army during the late war.

I have seen a thousand brave men brought from my own State to the seat of war in command of a member of Congress who was better fitted to be a Congressman than a colonel, and the lack of soldierly qualities on the part of their commander so impressed the men that in less than three months the regiment became utterly worthless. I have seen the same regiment transferred to the command of a good officer and in three months become one of the best in the service.

On Sherman's great march from Atlanta to the sea, when all knew that he had left his base of supplies and burned his bridges behind him and all were in suspense as to his intentions, when few even of his own command knew the destination of the army in which they were serving, I have seen day after day private soldiers seated by the roadside on the line of march, with pocket maps in their hands, eagerly and intelligently discussing the probable plans of their commander.

In the midst of such soldiers Fitz-John Porter could not have a disloyal thought or dream without detection.

On the day after we left Raleigh on the march toward Richmond large packages of New York papers were brought to our camps for sale. Without orders from their officers, the soldiers speedily suppressed and destroyed them. An intelligent soldier of my command explained the acts of his associates. He said:

> These papers are teeming with abuse of General Sherman, charging him with insubordination, a violation of his orders, and some of them even insinuating that he is disloyal—all on account of his treaty with General Johnston. We do not intend to have these slanders against the man we have followed so many hundreds of miles circulated among the boys.

I felt that these men better appreciated the merits of their commander than did some of the authorities in Washington.

Just before we arrived at Richmond another batch of New York papers came to our camps, announcing that a new department had been created—the Department of the James; that General Halleck had been assigned to the command, and ordered Generals Meade, Sheridan, and Wright to invade that part of North Carolina occupied by Sherman, and disregard his truce with General Johnston and pay no attention to his (Sherman's) orders. In my presence Sherman declared that if an attempt had been made to execute that order he would have defended his truce if it had cost the lives of half his command. I was with him when he received a note from General Halleck asking to be allowed to review the army as it passed through the streets of Richmond, and I saw him write a reply saying that so far from giving him a review he deemed it his duty to say that it would be unsafe for General Halleck to be seen in the streets.

I stood beside General Sherman on the grand stand at the other end of this avenue when the armies of the Union, in the presence of all the chief civil officers of the Government and the representatives of all foreign countries with whom we have diplomatic relations, were being reviewed; and I saw General Sherman, in the face of this vast concourse, refuse the proffered hand of the officer of the Government who, in the closing days of brilliant services in the field, had brought so much undeserved reproach on him; and I honored him for it. A most cruel and defenseless attempt had been made to rob him of his hard-earned reputation.

But it may be said, why revert to these painful events now that some of the chief actors in them are in their graves? I have a purpose in it. First, I wish to make it apparent to every member of this House that in the heat and excitement of a civil war the purest and ablest officer is liable to be stricken down without cause.

At the close of the war one wing of Sherman's army was commanded by General Logan and the other by myself. I wish to remind the old soldiers of that army that the very weapons used to strike down Porter were wielded by the same hands against Sherman; and it is my firm conviction that had not the war been brought to a successful close immediately after Sherman's treaty with Johnston an attempt would have been made to place his name side by side with that of Fitz-John Porter, and instead of commanding the Army eighteen years after the war, and then retiring with the love and admiration of a grateful people, he might to-day have been vainly pleading at the doors of Congress for a rehearing of his case, pleading his previous good character, his great services to his country, and the heat and passion of the hour when the cruel verdict was rendered against him, precisely as Porter is now doing.

Every proceeding through which an attempt is made to ascertain the guilt or innocence of a person charged with crime—call the proceeding by whatever name you may—must, in order to command confidence, be conducted with deliberation and in a spirit of justice and impartiality. While I admit that in time of war, and in places where the powers of civil courts are suspended, courts-martial are a necessity, yet I regret to say that in no country and in no age have these courts been regarded either as safe or as worthy of confidence as civil tribunals. To the lack of confidence in such courts is due the hostility of our people to the extension of martial law over places where civil courts can be maintained. To the same cause must be attributed the course of one of our late Chief Magistrates, in habitually reversing the findings of these courts. Officers sentenced to dismissal for the most disgraceful offenses were in many instances restored to the Army, greatly to the demoralization of the service.

If this case had been tried before a civil court, with all safeguards thrown around the accused which the civil law guarantees to him, and had been reviewed by a higher court, authorized to examine the evidence as well as the legal points involved, and had the case been entirely free from political prejudice, every lawyer on this floor would say at once that the decision of the higher court should be final. But the case was tried by a court-martial, where the accused had no safeguards. Why should men versed in the law pay more deference to the court which tried General Porter than they would pay to a civil tribunal?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If it will not interrupt the gentleman from New York, I would like to inquire how he distinguishes between the military character of the court-martial by which General Porter was convicted and the other by which he was acquitted?

Mr. SLOCUM. I think it requires no great explanation to show the difference between those two courts. One was held in the city of Washington in the hot-bed of excitement during the civil war; the other was held at West Point in peaceable times, with no one to hurry it. That is the difference between the courts.

Among semi-barbarous races the settlement of disputes among the people, and the decision as to the guilt or innocence of persons accused of crime, is left entirely with the king or chief of the people. But just in proportion as the people become enlightened the control of the courts has been removed from the power of the executive. The progress of a people in civilization has always been indicated by their demands for checks against the arbitrary power of their rulers. The changes in the law of England during the past two centuries have all been in this direction—so that to-day, both there and in our country, no man can be convicted of crime except after a fair trial before an impartial judge and jury.

But the practice in military courts has made no such progress. The court-martial of to-day is precisely what it was two centuries ago. The executive prefers the charges, selects the court, appoints the judge-advocate, and passes judgment upon the proceedings. If, in the progress of a court-martial, a question arises as to the admissibility of evidence, the accused, with his counsel, is ordered from the room, and the prosecuting attorney is left alone with the court. No arguments can be heard from either the accused or his counsel on the vital points on which the case may turn.

No better illustration of the wide difference in the practice in the civil and military courts of our country can be found than in the proceedings in two celebrated cases tried in this city. On the 2d day of July, 1881, a miserable wretch, whose whole life had been stained with crime, in the broad light of day shot the President of the United States. After a long delay he was brought to trial. Weeks were spent in securing a jury and months in the trial of the case. Day after day he was permitted to insult the court, counsel, and witnesses, because, it was said, it would be unlawful to remove him from the room. The widest latitude was granted his counsel, because public opinion as well as the law demanded it.

He was convicted, but was granted an appeal as a matter of right. It was not until the highest court in the District had passed upon his case that his sentence was executed.

The other case was one tried by court-martial. The accused, unlike the one tried by a civil court, was a man whose whole life had been devoted to the service of his country—one who stood in the front rank of an honorable profession. He was accused of disobedience of orders and misbehavior on the battlefield. The foundation for these charges was so slight that after the occasion which gave rise to them he was ordered to take charge of the defenses of Washington and was subsequently intrusted with the command of a corps at the battle of Antietam—one of the most critical and important battles of the war. After this battle had been fought and the confederate army had retired to Virginia it was determined to bring him to trial.

Over and over again during the trial of his case Porter and his counsel, Reverdy Johnson, were turned out of the court-room, and in their absence questions vital to ascertaining his guilt or innocence were decided. That was the case of General Fitz-John Porter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I hope I do not interrupt the gentleman, but I desire to ask him, is not that the usual proceeding in a court-martial? Is it not the law of courts-martial in every civilized country in the world?

Mr. SLOCUM. I am very glad to answer the gentleman. That is the law of such courts in every country. All the point I make is that it is a very arbitrary law and that it is not a very proper means of ascertaining the guilt or innocence of any man. The gentleman from Indiana is a good lawyer. What would he think if he went into his court at home and when a question came up involving something vital to the defense of his client he was bundled out of the court-room and the opposing attorney left with the court? Is that a fair way? I admit it is law, but I say it is unfair. I say there is no justice in turning a man out of a court-room and leaving the prosecuting attorney to discuss with the court questions that are vital to the defense. That needs no argument. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. My response to that, if the gentleman pleases, is that its injustice is certainly not so apparent, or the practice would have been long ago changed by some of the intelligent and civilized nations of the world.

Mr. SLOCUM. I am willing to leave my argument on that question to the common sense of the members of this House. I let it rest there.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman, but will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SLOCUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman to contend that it is very objectionable for members of a court to decide questions of law relating to evidence in the absence of the party. I ask if that is not the universal rule in all civil courts where two or more judges preside, and whether it has not been the rule of all courts for hundreds of years?

Mr. SLOCUM. The gentleman from Ohio did not understand me at all. I say that in a court-martial where a question is raised as to the admissibility of evidence the accused is turned out of the court-room. I say that is not so in a civil court. I say questions as to the admissibility of evidence are vital always to a case in court.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield further to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to ask one more question.

Mr. SLOCUM. I yield for one question.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to know of the gentleman whether he does not know that judges of all civilized courts may decide these questions of law arising upon the admissibility of evidence in the absence of the counsel and of the parties in all cases, civil and criminal——

Mr. SLOCUM. It is very strange I can not make myself understood.

Mr. KEIFER. Without consulting with them?

Mr. SLOCUM. I can not make myself understood to gentlemen.

A MEMBER. They don't want to understand you.

Mr. SLOCUM. I would like the gentleman to tell me when a question comes up as to the admissibility of evidence whether the lawyers are not allowed to argue it before the court.

Mr. KEIFER. They are always argued.

Mr. SLOCUM. Certainly they are.

Mr. KEIFER. And then the judges consult and decide without consulting the counsel.

Mr. SLOCUM. My point is that the question is fairly argued in the presence of both parties.

Mr. KEIFER. I did not understand the gentleman to say——

Mr. SLOCUM. While in a military court it is not argued.

Mr. KEIFER. I did not understand the gentleman to say that no argument was had on these questions in a military court.

Mr. SLOCUM. Well, I will try to make myself understood by the gentleman.

Mr. MAYO. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAYO. I rose to the same point of order yesterday. My point of order is that gentlemen addressing the House have no right to turn their backs upon the Speaker or Chairman. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] will proceed.

Mr. SLOCUM. I have endeavored most earnestly to make myself understood as to the difference between a court-martial and a civil court in the way of treating parties; perhaps I have been unfortunate in my language. I will repeat now that in a court-martial if a question comes up as to the admissibility of evidence no argument is heard on the part of the counsel for the accused, but he is turned out of the room. I say that on more than twenty occasions during the proceedings of the court-martial which tried Fitz-John Porter, General Porter and his counsel, Reverdy Johnson, were turned out of doors, and the counsel of the Government alone left to argue the case with the court. And I say no such thing was ever heard of in a civil tribunal, and I hope to God it never will be. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a question, if it will not bother him?

Mr. SLOCUM. It will not bother me at all.

Mr. CALKINS. It is whether all military courts, as well as military discipline, are not arbitrary; and whether the jurisdiction of courts-martial does not extend to cases over which civil courts have no jurisdiction and can have no jurisdiction?

Mr. SLOCUM. I say "yes" to all you say.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I ask where or how the gentleman can draw an inference or draw a parallel between the proceedings of the two courts when they stand upon an entirely different basis?

Mr. SLOCUM. Between a civil and a military court, do you mean?

Mr. CALKINS. Yes; how can the one illustrate the other when they stand upon an entirely different ground?

Mr. SLOCUM. They do stand on entirely different grounds, certainly; but the only thing I am arguing is that a military court is an unfair court to ascertain the record or innocence of a man.

Mr. CALKINS. And yet I take it the gentleman will not dispute the proposition that wherever there has been an army these courts have universally existed.

Mr. SLOCUM. Of course I admit it.

Mr. CALKINS. And are necessary for the proper discipline of the Army.

Mr. SLOCUM. I admit that; but it does not militate a particle against my argument.

Mr. CALKINS. But I would like the gentleman also to say whether, if these military courts were based upon the mode of procedure in civil courts, there could ever be maintained any discipline in any army. Does he not know that to be the fact?

Mr. SLOCUM. If there never could be any discipline maintained it does not militate one particle against my argument.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. SLOCUM. Certainly.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Is not one purpose of the judge-advocate in remaining in the court-room during the progress of the proceedings of the military court, is not the sole purpose, that of making up the record? Does he not remain in the court-room for that purpose and for no other? Is it not his duty, is it not his sworn duty, simply to call the roll, beginning with the junior officer and going up in the regular grade, as I have called the roll myself a hundred times when my friend Judge WARNER, who sits before me, was the president of the court? Is not that the reason he remains in the court, and is he not under oath to remain quiet and not tamper with or have anything to do with the deliberations of the military court? Is not that the purpose of the judge-advocate? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SLOCUM. Gentlemen, you are a little premature in your patting.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. We did not commence it.

Mr. SLOCUM. You are a little premature. What is theoretically the duty of the judge-advocate and what he is in practice are two quite different things. Let me remind the gentleman that Judge Holt, who was appointed the prosecuting attorney in this case, had never been in military life until he was made judge-advocate to prosecute this very man.

Mr. CALKINS. Is that anything against him, if he was a good lawyer, appointed from civil life?

Mr. SLOCUM. If the theory is, as has been suggested by the gentleman, that the judge-advocate has nothing to do, I would like to know why Judge Holt was appointed to try this one case, and why he got on the retired-list of the Army as a general for trying the case, and stays there to-day as a general?

That was a pretty good fee for a man who had no prejudices. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Does not the gentleman know that it is very common in military law for a judge-advocate to be appointed from civil life? Was not that done in many cases during the war?

Mr. SLOCUM. Certainly. Now, gentlemen, I come to another very striking point or incident in this case. When Pope's army got back here to Washington—within three or four days after it had arrived here it began to be whispered around that Porter had not behaved well under Pope. Porter made immediate application to President Lincoln for a court of inquiry to investigate his case. I saw Porter a few days after he had made that application, and we all came to the conclusion that President Lincoln had ignored the application; that he had not granted Porter the court he asked for. Nobody ever dreamed anything to the contrary until fifteen years after Porter's conviction, when there turns up here in the War Department an order signed by President Lincoln at the time of the application, fifteen years before, and hidden away during all those years in the War Department.

A MEMBER. An order for what?

Mr. SLOCUM. An order giving Porter a court of inquiry. How do gentlemen account for that?

Mr. STEELE. A court of inquiry was ordered.

Mr. SLOCUM. Yes, a court of inquiry was ordered; the order was signed by President Lincoln; but it was never known by any man outside of the War Department until it was unearthed by the Schofield board.

Mr. STEELE. The proceedings show it.

Mr. SLOCUM. Show what?

Mr. STEELE. That a court of inquiry was ordered and dissolved.

Mr. SLOCUM. The gentleman is slightly mistaken. The proceedings show that there was a commission ordered, which was dissolved—a commission, not a court of inquiry.

Mr. CALKINS. But the whole country has understood for years, as I have understood, that the military commission was dissolved for the purpose of having the proceedings take place before the court-martial. That has been the general understanding throughout the country; and is not that the fact?

Mr. SLOCUM. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. CALKINS. That the military commission or court of inquiry was dissolved for the purpose of having the trial before the court-martial.

Mr. SLOCUM. Oh, no; I know what I am talking about.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not know whether the gentleman does or not.

Mr. SLOCUM. I know perfectly well. A military commission and a court of inquiry are entirely different things.

Mr. CALKINS. I understand that perfectly well.

Mr. SLOCUM. Porter applied for a court of inquiry, and the President of the United States granted the application; his name appears signed on Porter's application, but nobody ever knew it for fifteen years. A commission was also appointed for his trial, but for some reason, I do not know why, it was found that a court would be better, and then the court was ordered.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman state the date of the order for the court of inquiry?

Mr. SLOCUM. The 5th of September.

Mr. BAYNE. That was the date of the order organizing the court-martial?

Mr. SLOCUM. No; the court was ordered in November.

Mr. STEELE rose.

Mr. SLOCUM. I have submitted to interruptions enough.

The act of Congress of May 29, 1832, declares that when charges are preferred by a general commanding against an officer of his own command, the court shall be ordered by the President. It did not suit the purposes of those who were seeking the destruction of General Porter to have the court that was to try him appointed by Abraham Lincoln; but it did suit their purposes to have that court ordered by General Halleck. Resort was had, therefore, to a most contemptible subterfuge to avoid this law of 1832. The charges on which Porter was tried were preferred by one of Pope's staff; and in this way it was said, the charges not being preferred by Pope himself, that Halleck could order the court. But I think every fair-minded man will agree with me when I say that in this case the act of the staff officer was the act of the general, and that the court was illegal from its very inception.

During the progress of the trial the Secretary of War sent to the court this order:

> The state of the service imperatively demands that the proceedings of the court over which you are now presiding, having been pending more than four weeks, should be brought to a close without unnecessary delay. You are therefore directed to sit without regard to hours, and to close your proceedings as speedily as may be consistent with justice and the public service.

That is an illustration of the way they do in courts-martial. The officer who orders the court sends an order to hurry up, to proceed rapidly; and he might as well have told them to convict speedily.

And finally, as if to make the contrast between methods of trial in civil and military tribunals the more glaring, one of the members of the court—an officer who himself should have been on trial for his conduct on this very occasion—steps down from his seat as a judge, gives the most damaging evidence against the accused, and then resumes his seat as a judge to pass upon his own evidence.

In deciding this case I most earnestly implore the members of this House to try, if possible, to act on it free from political prejudice. There is no politics in it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Certainly not.

Mr. SLOCUM. Why a man should allow anything of that kind to govern his vote in a case like this, which so deeply affects the honor of a man like General Porter, I can not conceive. I can not understand how men can do it. Now, it is a strange thing that those at both ends of the Capitol who are the most bitter in opposition to a bill for the relief of Porter are men who never saw him. If they are soldiers, they are soldiers who never served with him. I believe if I had never seen Porter in my life I should be deeply anxious to wipe out this foul stain from the military annals of our country; I know I should; but I have seen him many a time; I have known him intimately and personally for more than thirty years. He was my instructor at West Point. I fought by his side in every battle fought by the Army of the Potomac from the commencement of the war to the hour of his arrest. I know him well. I know he was as loyal, as brave, as intelligent in the discharge of his duty as ever I was, and I firmly believe that if he deserved this punishment which he has received I deserve the same. [Applause.]

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that I have not had the time to write out at length my views on this case. It had been my intention to do so, but on examining the documents I found them to be so voluminous as to render it impossible for any man short of six months to go down into them and give attention to everything presented by the friends of the bill, as well as those opposed to it. I will, therefore, confine myself to the questions directly at issue, and not what is said by the friends of General Porter.

I am not surprised the able gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] who has preceded me has neglected to mention the merits of this case. He appeals to the sympathies of the House. He does not allege that the original court did not pass a just sentence, that the sentence was not right according to the findings. Nor does he give any reasons why they should not have found as they did, except his great love for the man. But that has nothing to do with the case.

I come at once to the point as to the legality of this court. It has been said that Mr. Halleck preferred the charges. Look at the record of the court. Does it bear the gentleman from New York out in his statement? I have often heard it stated that charges were preferred by General Pope because his inspector-general signed the charges. But the record does not say "by command of General Pope." A court of inquiry was first ordered; and I am glad the gentleman reminded me of the President's order on that subject. President Lincoln issued an order for a court of inquiry, over his own signature, as the gentleman has stated; but one who has lately departed, a good general and a just man, lately a Senator, with a great big heart in him, doubting (at that time) as to whether Mr. Porter was guilty of treachery or not, having been his personal friend, went to the President in a time of our dire distress and appealed to him personally, for his own sake and for the sake of the country, to release Mr. Porter from arrest and let him go on with the army.

A military commission, at the earnest request of General Pope, was afterward ordered. It was ordered after he had gone to the Department of the Northwest. He had made a report which was suppressed, as it was thought for the good of the country. But a military commission was finally ordered to investigate the charges made, and when it came to examine General Pope's report it concluded the sentence it could impose would be inadequate to the offense, should he be found guilty. So Brigadier-General of Volunteers B. S. Roberts, inspector-general on Pope's staff during the battles down in Virginia, preferred the charges after General Pope had ceased to command the army. If Pope had been in command of the army it would not have been competent for him to have preferred the charges, for the reason that no officer in command can prefer charges, organize a court, and pass upon its sentence. But General Pope was entirely removed from this department, and had nothing to do with this army. His inspector or himself would have been incompetent to prefer the charges while he commanded the Army of Virginia.

Now, the court was ordered and composed of the following gentlemen, and I wish to say here I hope members present are acquainted with each one of those whom I shall name. It was the highest military tribunal ever organized in this country. Maj. Gen. David Hunter, United States Volunteers, was the president of the court. He was a personal friend of Mr. Porter, a gentleman with whom Mr. Porter stopped just prior to the war, and with whom General Hunter stopped when he visited the city of New York, or where General Porter had his home. The next member is Mr. Hitchcock, who claimed General Porter as his protégé, having given him, I believe, his appointment. He was the second on the court. The third was General Rufus King, against whose unsullied name aspersions have been cast here to-day, saying, that "in all possibility it was a five-to-four court," and that this man got down off the judges' stand and went upon the witness-stand to testify, and then returned to the judges' stand in order to judge the case and make a sentence.

How unjust these aspersions. You are dealing in dreams, my friend; but since you are indulging in dreams, let me tell you of my own dreaming upon the subject. I dreamed that after all the evidence in this case had gone in and that jury of officers had retired there was solemnity in that body for a few moments which would be hard to describe, and finally this man (General Hitchcock) who claimed Porter as his protégé said: "Gentlemen, there can be but one verdict," and they all agreed to it; they all said the same thing. There could be but one verdict; but a milder-mannered man on the court than he said a sentence so severe would mean for this man to go scot free. "Within the limit of the law we are enabled to give a milder sentence," and a milder sentence was given. My dream, Mr. Chairman, is more reasonable than that of the gentleman who says the court is five to four, and if you do not believe me, then go on and constitute your civil tribunal and bring before it any member of the original court to say whether my dream is or is not true. General Hunter is living, General Ricketts is living, six of the members who constituted that court are living; ask any of them before a properly constituted court and see if they do not tell you my dream is true. The judge-advocate, against whom so much has been said on this floor, is living. Why, Reverdy Johnson said, "Whatever may be said about this case, Porter has had a fair and impartial trial." Mr. Porter twice, in the proceedings of this court, himself said, "I have no objection to any member of this court." He specifically says so. Generals Prentiss, Ricketts, Casey (who furnished us our tactics for that war), Garfield, President (and who had prepared a speech in opposition to this bill), Buford, and Slough, who can justly say aught against a man of them, and who of them living does not believe to-day as he did at the close of the trial?

Now, what was he tried for? Disobedience of orders and misbehavior in front of the enemy. I am not going to take pains to refer to the few notes which I have made in this connection, but I will tell you briefly what is a matter of record. I will state the facts exactly as they exist; and if you do not believe the recorded facts, or if you apprehend that I misstate the facts, then correct me, and I will apologize, for I do not intend to say a word upon the subject that is not strictly within the limits of the truth.

On the night of the 27th of August, 1862, General Pope, as commander of the Army of Virginia, issued an order to General Porter reciting facts that had transpired at the little town of Bristoe Station, near which the army was then stationed. He stated in substance: General Hooker has had a severe engagement here and lost three hundred men; he is out of ammunition, and there is every prospect of a severe fight in the early morning. The order then proceeded:

Move with your command to this point; start at 1 o'clock. It is necessary, on all accounts, that you be here by daylight. I do not attempt to give the exact language of the order, but that was the substance of it. That, Mr. Chairman, was a positive order. It gave him no discretion whatever in the matter. Where is the military man who will say that if an order is given to be at a certain fixed place at a certain time it does not mean just what it says, that you must use your utmost exertion to comply with the express terms of the order, and that nothing would excuse him from doing so except his own command is attacked by the enemy? Mr. Porter was in his tent when this order was handed to him by Captain De Kay, of the Fourteenth Infantry. Instead of directing the adjutant-general of his command to issue an order to move the army by 1 o'clock in the morning, or earlier, if necessary, in obedience to the command of his superior officer, he sends for Butterfield and Sykes and other of his officers and shows them the order. I give it here in full:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Bristoe Station, August 27, 1862—6.30 p. m.

GENERAL: The major-general commanding directs that you start at 1 o'clock to-night and come forward with your whole corps, or such part of it as is with you, so as to be here by daylight to-morrow morning. Hooker has had a very severe action with the enemy, with the loss of about three hundred killed and wounded. The enemy has been driven back, but is retiring along the railroad. We must drive him from Manassas and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is. If Morell has not joined you, send word to him to push forward immediately; also, send word to Banks to hurry forward with all speed to take your place at Warrenton Junction. It is necessary on all accounts that you should be here by daylight. I send an officer with this dispatch who will conduct you to this place. Be sure to send word to Banks, who is on the road from Fayetteville, probably in the direction of Bealeton. Say to Banks, also, that he had best run back the railroad trains to this side of Cedar Run. If he is not with you, write to him to that effect.

By command of Major-General Pope.

GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Colonel and Chief of Staff.

That this order was delivered to General Porter by Captain De Kay at 9.30 o'clock on the night of its date is not controverted.

Why did he send for these gentlemen? Could they help him to brace his back to obey the order of his superior officer? Did he not know when these officers came in that every one of them would protest against it? I have never known of a night march and have never been on one myself, unless it was going to the rear [laughter], where men did not protest against it, and in this case they did protest, and the result of it was that Mr. Porter modified his order and said: "Well, then, we will start at 3 o'clock." Instead of getting his officers to help him to move he merely got them to help raise an objection against it. It is true it has been stated that it was not possible for him to move because of the fact, as alleged, that the roads were cumbered with wagons. The evidence, I am frank to say, is very conflicting upon that subject. Some witnesses swear it was a starry night, others that it was a dark night and that there was a drizzling rain falling, but the chief quartermaster of that department swears the roads were in a good condition. General Pope swears they were in good condition, and other witnesses have testified to the same fact. Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the wagons had been blocked on top of each other two deep and he had such an order, could any soldier excuse him for not using every means in his power to try to obey?

Why, sir, I have confederate soldiers before me. I do not think when they gave a man an order to be at a certain place at a certain time anything short of a heroic attempt on the part of the officer receiving the order would have been excused if he did not obey it. Could not General Porter when he received the order at 9.30 p. m.—an order to move at 1 o'clock a. m.—could he not have sent out men, two hundred or three hundred if necessary, and said, "I want to move on that road at 1 o'clock in the morning, and I want you to clear it and run your wagons into the woods if necessary;" and there is no evidence that there were woods. But no; he said, "I will move at 3 o'clock;" and his "three" meant "four." The evidence is conclusive. The chief quartermaster says there was not only the railroad the troops might have moved on, but a road on each side of the railroad on which they could have moved.

But he did not attempt to be at Bristoe at daylight next morning; and he had no means of knowing but what General Pope had said was true, and that General Pope believed what he said. Happily the necessity had disappeared. The troops that General Pope expected General Porter to fight had found it possible to move—Jackson's corps, scattered all over the woods no doubt that night, the night Porter was ordered to move. They found it possible to do so during the night. When people undertake to excuse General Porter they say he could not move his army. But the opposing general found it possible to do so, and did move twice as far as General Porter was ordered, getting away over to Centreville.

Another thing people talk about is the fatigue of Porter's troops. And I notice Mr. Lord's book that has been circulated around here, no doubt by the consent of General Porter, talks of the fatigue of those men in a way that would lead you to imagine their tongues were hanging out with thirst and hunger, and that they were ill clad. Why, sir, they had been laying down on the Peninsula for weeks. Everything went to them that soldiers had a right to expect. They had come down via Aquia Creek to Falmouth in transports, and had been four days marching thirty miles, including the day they arrived at Warrenton

Junction; so that his men could not have been very hungry or worn on the night of August 27. That is all I will say on this point, as any man knows Porter's soldiers would have marched had they been ordered to do so. There can be nothing plainer than this, that General Porter did not use his utmost exertions to move. He did not order out men to clear the road; but, instead of giving orders by which he could carry into effect the directions he had received from his commanding officer, utterly failed and neglected to do so, or to take such measures as would enable him to try to obey it. He reached Bristoe at 10 or 11 o'clock the next day.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What was the distance marched?

Mr. STEELE. Between nine and ten miles. He started at 3 o'clock, and his force began to arrive between 10 and 11 o'clock next day, having marched a little over a mile an hour. But it is fair to say that when they finally reached the road in the morning they found it encumbered with wagons. There were some wagons on the road De Kay testifies, as he went down, though they were not closing the road. Those wagons were pulled in behind the regiments that night. De Kay swears, and other gentlemen swear, that Myers "parked" the train, and the next morning moved out at daylight and got ahead of this officer, who was ordered to start at 1 o'clock.

I come now to the orders of the 29th.

CENTREVILLE, August 29, 1862.

Push forward with your corps and King's division, which you will take with you, upon Gainesville. I am following the enemy down the Warrenton turnpike. Be expeditious or we will lose much.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Centreville, August 29, 1862.

You will please move forward with your joint command towards Gainesville. I sent General Porter written orders to that effect an hour and a half ago. Heintzelman, Sigel, and Reno are moving on Warrenton turnpike, and must now be not far from Gainesville. I desire that, as soon as communication is established between this force and your own, the whole command shall halt. It may be necessary to fall back behind Bull Run, at Centreville, to-night. I presume it will be so on account of our supplies. I have sent no orders of any description to Ricketts, and none to interfere in any way with the movements of McDowell's troops, except what I sent by his aide-de-camp last night, which were to hold his position on the Warrenton pike until the troops from here should fall on the enemy's flank and rear. I do not even know Ricketts's position, as I have not been able to find out where General McDowell was until a late hour this morning. General McDowell will take immediate steps to communicate with General Ricketts, and instruct him to join the other divisions of his corps as soon as practicable. If any considerable advantages are to be gained by departing from this order, it will not be strictly carried out. One thing must be held in view—that the troops must occupy a position from which they can reach Bull Run to-night or by morning. The indications are that the whole force of the enemy is moving in this direction at a pace that will bring them here by to-morrow night or the next day. My own headquarters will for the present be with Heintzelman's corps or at this place.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

Generals MCDOWELL and PORTER.

This was the now famous 4.30 p. m. order, and is in these words:

AUGUST 29—4.30 p. m.

Major-General PORTER: Your line of march brings you on the enemy's right flank. I desire you to push forward into action at once on the enemy's flank, and, if possible, on his rear, keeping your right in communication with General Reynolds. The enemy is massed in the woods in front of us, but can be shelled out as soon as you engage their flank. Keep heavy reserves and use your batteries, keeping well closed to your right all the time. In case you are obliged to fall back, do so to your right and rear, so as to keep you in close communication with the right wing.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

I want to show you right here why General Porter did not obey those nor the one of the 27th. McClellan had transferred the Army of the Potomac from here in front of Washington to around in front of Richmond, and my confederate friends over there had given them a drubbing and sent them back to Harrison's Landing.

Notwithstanding the President's great efforts to have the Army of the Potomac advance, McClellan failed to move it. A demand was made by him for fifty thousand men. He did not get them. They were not available. The evidence shows how Porter made great exertions in getting his men off, and that he went a day before McClellan expected him to move, although McClellan says Porter telegraphed him unless he received certain orders not to do so, he would move. He came down to Aquia Creek, and there found he had struck a hornet's nest. He found he was to be under the command of General Pope. Well, I have been at places like Harrison's Landing, and I wanted to get out of them as soon as possible.

Here is what General Porter says about General Pope from time to time. I only quote a synopsis of the dispatches. The whole dispatches are in the proceedings except one, which I will read; and that is in the history of the war now being compiled by order of the War Department. It is an official dispatch:

We are working now to get behind Bull Run, and I presume will be there in a few days, if strategy don't use us up.

He is speaking of his commanding officer's strategy.

The strategy is magnificent, and tactics in the inverse proportion. I was informed to-day on the best authority that in opposition to General Pope's views this army was pushed out to save the Army of the Potomac, an army that could take care of itself. Most of this is private, but if you can get me away please do so.

And at 2 p. m., on the 28th of August, he dispatches:

All that talk about bagging Jackson, &c., was bosh. That enormous gap, Manassas, was left open, and the enemy jumped through; and the story of McDowell having cut off Longstreet has no good foundation. * * * The enemy destroyed an immense amount of property at Manassas—cars and supplies. I expect the next thing will be a raid on our rear by Longstreet, who was cut off.

At 6 o'clock in the morning of August 29 he telegraphs to Burnside:

Heintzelman and Reno are at Centreville, where they marched yesterday, and Pope went to Centreville with the last two as a body guard, at the time not knowing where was the enemy, and when Sigel was fighting within eight miles of him and in sight. Comment is unnecessary.

These dispatches were sent while this officer was under the command of General Pope, and the criticisms are made about General Pope. I find I have here an official dispatch which he telegraphs to Morell, who was in front of his command:

General MORELL: I have all within reach of you. I wish you to give the enemy a good shelling without wasting ammunition, and push at the same time a party over to see what is going on. We can not retire while McDowell holds his own.

F. J. P.

He was praying to his God that he might get out; he was afraid that Pope was going to be successful and he wanted to get out, but says that as long as McDowell stays there he can not do it. Now, for all the good he did, he might as well have taken his corps and gone to Washington with it, where he hoped that "Mac" was looking upon him with a favoring eye.

It was not that he was afraid to fight; I do not accuse the man of that. It was not that he would not have been glad to serve his country under McClellan, but he loved McClellan more than he did his country.

On the 29th of August he was ordered to join the Army confronting the enemy. He was first ordered to go to Centreville; but General Pope found the situation had been changed, and very early in the morning gave an order to Porter to march in the direction of Gainesville on the Manassas and Gainesville road. Porter started and marched three miles from Manassas Junction, where he had been, and about that time General McDowell rode up to him and said, "How is this? You have taken one of my divisions, King's division." Porter said to him, "Well, under the sixty-second article of war you have the right to command King and me, too, and there will be no misunderstanding between us." And McDowell allowed him to go on.

A short time after which McDowell and Porter received a joint order. Porter had been objecting to certain orders and had sent a staff officer to General Pope asking an order in writing for certain things, and General Pope sent a joint order.

McDowell rode over to Porter to discuss it, and said that they were carrying out just what was within the order. It was only supplementary to the one from General Pope to General Porter.

When General McDowell arrived at the head of the column, which was at Dawkin's Branch, some officer said to Porter: "I think it would be well for you to put out a stronger line of skirmishers," or something to that effect. They had heard one man had been captured a few minutes before. The evidence shows. The leading officer of the brigade deployed skirmishers and the line was increased, and the skirmishers advanced across Dawkin's Branch.

McDowell rode up and said: "This order means this; there is no two understandings about it; we are to join on the left of Pope's army; Sigel is there on the left, and we are to make connection with him and attack the enemy on the flank." The order was discretionary, however, saying that if any military benefit would arise they might depart from it. McDowell was the commanding officer of his division and Porter's corps. He said to Porter: "I will go back and get Ricketts and King and go up on the right to join Sigel; and you put your men in here." Porter, looking at the dust raised by the enemy's cavalry, dragging bushes along the road tied to the tails of their horses, said: "You can not go in there any place except you get into a fight." McDowell said to him: "That is what we came here for."

McDowell further swore on the witness-stand that after talking with Porter and having a full understanding with him, when he left him he had no other idea but that Porter would go in there and attack the enemy. Instead of doing so he rode to the rear, and remained there all the balance of the day. A short time after he left there a rebel battery from a thousand to twelve hundred yards away fired a few shots and killed one man, when our batteries went in and knocked them out of position, and there was no further trouble or inconvenience during the whole of that day, except the trouble of the skirmishers at the front.

However, I ought not to say that, because long before night Porter's order was given to retreat, and they did retreat a mile and a half. Porter about this time received the order which is called the 4,30 order; an order issued by Pope at 4.30 p. m. for Porter to go in and press the enemy on the right flank, attacking him in front and rear, if possible.

The order was to make the attack. A colonel who had been on the picket line said: "My God, there are rebels up there; you will get into trouble." He did not want to make the attack. Now I will ask any of my friends who have been in the Army whether after the first battle they ever wanted to make an attack? [Laughter.] I have a record of nineteen battles, and I solemnly declare that I never wanted to go in any after the first; and I was not in the first more than two minutes and a half before I found that I did not want to be in that. [Laughter.] I am not surprised that he did not want to enter upon the attack. Morell said, "Oh, it is too late; I will not attack."

Here comes a delicate question as to when the 4.30 order was received. The officer who carried it and an orderly, who testified before the court, swear that it was delivered at 5.30. On the other hand, it is stated that it came before sundown. Morell says that he received the order to attack just before or about sundown. Porter, instead of being where he could obey that order and lead the charge, was two and five-eighths miles to the rear. He was down at Bethlehem church. The evidence is that he was lying on the ground, and that he never got off his elbow to consider the important order. He sends for an officer and tells him, "You had better have Morell attack." Another officer swears that he moved back with his command and staid at Bethlehem church all that night and put his pickets on duty before dark. General Griffin, General Morell, every officer who testifies except the officer on the picket line, states that he did not believe there were any rebels in their immediate front. Morell and others testify that no reconnaissance was made to find out whether there was any in the front or not. There is no evidence that any attempt was made to connect on the right as ordered or to advance.

Gentlemen, you must not undertake to gauge the proceedings of the original court by what you can get sixteen years afterward from gentlemen on the other side, who were let alone on that day. The whole evidence is clear that Porter knew an important battle was going on. It is shown that his own skirmishers through the woods, which he claimed to be impenetrable, saw the battle going on. They saw the lines surging to and fro. One officer testifies that from his experience in the army he could always tell the victorious rebel yell. I am sorry the officer had so much experience; nevertheless he testified that they could see what was going on upon the right. One of the division commanders —General Griffin, I believe—was ordered to move with his command, turning to the right on the branch road, which would bring them in connection with the troops on his right. Just after crossing the railroad he comes to what was said to be an impassable barrier.

One of Porter's witnesses was asked on cross-examination what this barrier was. He answered, "A thick clump of pine brush." My heavens! think about soldiers undertaking to get through pine brush! But they did not attempt it; they moved back and went out of the line.

If Porter had had his country as much at heart as he had McClellan his conduct would have been different. He should have said to McClellan, "I will have to leave you this day to go to the assistance of my comrades;" but he did not do it. He remained there the rest of the day.

It would seem that McClellan was loyal to himself, if we may judge. him by a report made by General Halleck to the Secretary of War (page 739, volume 12, War Records):

WASHINGTON, August 30, 1862.

SIR: In reply to your note of last evening* I have to state:

First. That on the 30th of July I directed General McClellan to send away his sick as quickly as possible, preparatory to his moving in some direction. Receiving no answer, the order was repeated August 2. On the 3d of August I directed him to withdraw his entire army from Harrison's Landing and bring it to Aquia Creek.

Second. That the order was not obeyed with the promptness I expected and the national safety, in my opinion, required. It will be seen from my telegraphic correspondence that General McClellan protested against the movement, and that it was not actually commenced till the 14th instant. It is proper to remark that the reasons given for not moving earlier was the delay in getting off the sick. As shown in my correspondence, I was most earnestly pressing him to move quickly, for the reason that I felt very anxious for the safety of Washington. From all the information I could obtain I believe that the enemy intended to crush General Pope's army and attack this city. I also believed that our only safety was to unite the two armies as rapidly as possible between the enemy and Washington. The object of pushing General Pope forward to the Rapidan was simply to gain time for General McClellan's army to get into position somewhere in rear of the Rappahannock. This I at first hoped to accomplish by landing the troops of Generals Burnside and McClellan at Aquia Creek. But the time which elapsed between the arrival of these two armies compelled me to bring most of General McClellan's forces to Alexandria, as General Pope was then falling back from the Upper Rappahannock before the main body of the enemy. When General McClellan's movement was begun it was rapidly carried out, but there was an unexpected delay in commencing it. General McClellan reports the delay was unavoidable.

Third. That on the 26th of August, at 11.20, I telegraphed to Major-General Franklin, at Alexandria, to march his corps by Centreville toward Warrenton, and to report to General Pope. Finding that Franklin's corps had not left, I telegraphed to General McClellan on the 27th, at 10 a. m., to have it march in the direction of Manassas as soon as possible. On the same day, at 12 m., I again telegraphed to General McClellan that General Porter reported a general battle imminent, and that Franklin's corps should move out by forced marches, carrying three or four days' provisions; to be afterwards supplied, as far as possible, by railroad. I also gave him the positions of General Pope's troops as well as I could ascertain them, and suggested the possibility that the enemy would attempt to turn his right. At 9 p. m. General McClellan telegraphed that he should retain Cox with General Franklin till next morning, and would visit my headquarters immediately. He came to my quarters soon after midnight, and left about 2 o'clock in the morning of the 28th.

At our interview I urged on him the importance of pushing forward Franklin as early as possible. Hearing about noon that General McClellan had not reached Alexandria, I telegraphed at 12.40 p. m. (28th) to General Franklin if he had not acted on General McClellan's order to do so on mine, and move toward Manassas Junction. At 1 p. m. General McClellan telegraphed to me that the moment Franklin could be started with a reasonable amount of artillery he should go forward. At 2.45 he telegraphed some rumors he had heard about the enemy's movements, and expressed an opinion that the troops sent from Alexandria should be in force, and with cavalry and artillery, or we should be beaten in detail. I replied at 3.30 p. m. that not a moment must be lost in pushing as large a force as possible toward Manassas, so as to communicate with General Pope before the enemy could be re-enforced. He telegraphed back at 4.45 that Franklin's corps was not in condition to move and fight a battle. At 8.45 I telegraphed to him that there must be no further delay in moving Franklin's corps toward Manassas—that they must go to-morrow morning, ready or not ready. If we delay too long to get ready there will be no necessity of going at all, for Pope will either be defeated or victorious without our aid. If there is a want of wagons, the men must carry provisions with them till the wagons can come to their relief. At 10 he replied that he had ordered Franklin's corps to move at 6 o'clock.

On the morning of the 29th, at 10.30, he telegraphed to me that Franklin's corps had started at 6 a. m., and that he could give him but two squadrons of cavalry. At 12 m. he telegraphed that Franklin's corps was without proper ammunition and without transportation; and again at 1 p. m. he telegraphed that in his opinion Franklin ought not to advance beyond Annandale. At 3.10 p. m. I replied that I wanted Franklin's corps to go far enough to find out something about the enemy; that perhaps he might get such information at Annandale as to prevent his going farther; that otherwise he would push on to Fairfax. I added that "our people must move more actively and find out where the enemy is; I am tired of guesses." Late in the afternoon I heard that Franklin's corps had halted at Annandale, and that he himself had been seen in Alexandria in the afternoon. I immediately telegraphed to General McClellan at 7.50 p. m. that his (Franklin's) being in Alexandria and his corps halting in Annandale was contrary to my orders; that his corps must push forward as I directed, protect the railroad, and open our communication with Manassas. General McClellan replied at 8 p. m., referring to his previous telegrams, and said that he had not deemed it safe for Franklin to march beyond Annandale, and that he was responsible for his being in Alexandria and his corps halting at Annandale. Early on the morning of the 30th I made inquiries of the Quartermaster-General in regard to transportation, and telegraphed at 9.40 to General McClellan that I was by no means satisfied with General Franklin's march of yesterday (29th). Considering the circumstances of the case, he was very wrong in stopping in Annandale. I referred to the fact that he could have obtained transportation if he had applied for it to the quartermaster's department, and added: "He knew the importance of opening communication with General Pope's army, and should have acted more promptly."

The foregoing is, I believe, a correct summary of the orders and instructions given by me in regard to the movement of General Franklin's corps, my expressions of dissatisfaction, and the reasons alleged for the delays which in the result proved so unfortunate.

Fourth. Copies of letters, orders, &c., relative to your inquiries are sent herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. W. HALLECK,
General-in-Chief.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

*See Stanton to Halleck, August 28, page 706.

The only order Porter obeyed with alacrity during the whole day was one received at 8.50 that night. "Move with your command to-morrow morning on the battle-field, and report to me in person for orders." He moved, but not with his command. One of his divisions scattered and went around to Centreville. (Does that show great capability?) They remained there and were not in the engagement. Hyatt went forward; perhaps he did get in a little trouble, but Morell did not; he came up to where a small bridge had been broken, and did not attempt to go across.

The committee should not be governed by what an unauthorized board find might have been the situation sixteen years after the events, but did Porter behave well? The best he knew how. Either on the 27th, 29th or 30th of August, 1863, did he obey the orders he received from his lawful commanders. It is plain, too, that Porter had positive orders, and under his orders it was his duty to attempt to push his army against the right of the enemy; there is nothing to show that he might not have done so. General McDowell says that he firmly believes that if Porter had gone in as ordered by him and as ordered by Pope our victory would have been decisive. McDowell, Pope, and others swear that if Porter had done his duty our victory would have been decisive; it was a victory for us as it was. As our troops fought all day and came out victorious in the evening, is it not reasonable to suppose with the aid of the best corps in the army (as it was called at that time) on the flank and they had fought as they could have fought, the enemy would have been totally routed?

There was no evidence before the court to show that Porter did not know this fact.

The evidence shows that Longstreet was coming through Thoroughfare Gap. It also shows that Porter and his men saw great clouds of dust coming from that direction, but the evidence does not show that he at any time confronted Porter on the 29th. General Slocum and others have said there was no battle on the 29th. Now, my friends, I am not going to take up the time of the House by reading it all, but I would like to have you go to volume second, and especially to read from page 286 to 288 Comte de Paris. You have what an impartial historian has told you, and one whose subsequent writings have been pasted on paper and sent to the different members of the committee to read as an authority in the case. He says it was a great battle. He says that it was terrific from 6 o'clock and 30 minutes in the morning until after dark in the night, and that the losses on our side were over six thousand men killed and wounded

So, my friends, while you are letting your great hearts go out to Porter, think of those six thousand men who fell on the battle-field that day, and think of the chagrin felt by their comrades the next day because they were compelled to retire from a victorious field because of Porter's perfidy. Do not forget them, and do not forget the one-armed and one-legged men who fought on the 29th, and do not fail to call it a battle. As I have said, the official reports show it to have been a battle.

Ruggles, who testifies in this case in favor of Porter, says he did not hear much before 11 o'clock, but from then to nightfall it was a battle, and that the musketry firing was continuous until late at night. General Hooker, with Grover's brigade, charged onto a railroad bank, which was a natural fortification, and held it. Sigel and Reynolds also were hotly engaged in battle, and there is no question but Porter knew what was going on. He said he heard the firing, and yet he turned not a hand to save his comrades. In proof of the fact that there was a battle I quote from an impartial historian.

The Comte de Paris remarks, concerning the battle of the 29th, page 288:

Heintzelman and Reno on the right, McDowell and Porter on the left, and a long road to travel. Sigel, therefore, who was almost touching the enemy, opened the fight single-handed at half past 6 in the morning. Schurz's division, which had deployed to the right of the turnpike, attacked Lawton vigorously, while Milroy, with his brigade and a battery in the center near the Stone house and Schenck on the left of the road, cannonaded Starke's troops. The battle soon raged along the whole line. The Federals were gaining ground, especially on their left; for, Longstreet not having arrived, Jackson's right was still exposed.

Also page 290, Hooker upon receiving orders to attack the enemy in front, Comte de Paris says:

This gallant officer remarked to him that such an attack would stand very little chance of success. Hill had actually found in the railroad embankments a real parapet, behind which he could resist many assaults. Pope insisted; Grover's brigade charged with the bayonet, and penetrating between the confederate brigades of Gregg and Thomas, set foot on the embankment. All Hill's troops were concentrated to dislodge them: the rest of Hooker's division hastened to their assistance; and, notwithstanding their numerical inferiority, the Federals maintained their position, when Early, throwing himself into the mêlée, put an end to the struggle and carried off the victory. Kearny, who had been notified too late, only attacked the enemy after Grover's repulse. Movements so badly combined could not succeed. Kearny experienced the same fate as Hooker. While the right of the Federals was sustaining considerable but fruitless losses in these partial engagements, Pope was wondering that he did not hear Porter's cannon thunder upon what he believed to be Jackson's flank.

He also says, on page 292:

His (Porter's) attack, therefore, could not have produced the results upon which the commander-in-chief had counted. But neither the impossibility of executing to the letter the order of the latter, nor even the instructions which McDowell may have given him during the day, afford any excuse for his having remained so long inactive in the presence of the enemy, with two fine divisions, while a great battle was being fought in his vicinity. In short, if the road he had to follow was barred against him—if, therefore, he coud not cut the enemy's army in two and secure its defeat—it is equally certain that a vigorous attack made by him upon Longstreet's right would have drawn out all the forces of this general, and, by freeing the rest of the Union line, would probably have prevented the reverse which the latter sustained at the close of the day. We can not avoid, therefore, blaming his inaction at such time and under such circumstances.

This indifference on the part of Porter to the cannon's appeal, the manner in which he interpreted the orders of superiors and the tardiness with which these orders reached him, were the inevitable consequences of the confusion we have already referred to in the general movement of the army.

Same authority, page 294, says:

When daylight came they had to concentrate, to reorganize, to pick up and care for the wounded. The Federals had from six to eight thousand men hors de combat.

I come now to the argument before the board. On March 15 the President was authorized to appoint a board of officers to examine into the case of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon-General of the Army. This was done by an act of Congress, and it was under the authority of an act of Congress that this board of officers was appointed in the case of Surgeon-General Hammond. But the very same day, (in order to lead the country to believe the President had the same authority from Congress in Porter's case), after issuing the order calling for a board of three officers for Hammond, an order was issued in relation to Porter. In the case of Hammond it had the act of Congress to back it, but in the Porter case no power was given the President to do anything he could not have done of his own motion. There is no authority of law for it, (and I defy any man, lawyer or not, to say to the contrary)—to revise or pass upon the sentence of the court-martial. You gentlemen who are to talk upon this question will show, I hope, by what authority this board of officers could pass upon that sentence of the court-martial. To be sure, the President by his prerogative could have done just what has been done by the present President—he could have mitigated the continuing portion of the sentence. But after looking over the proceedings he did not do anything of the kind.

This board of honorable gentlemen, so honorable they throw into insignificance such men as Hunter and Hitchcock and King and other gentlemen on the old court—those corrupt men who have been passed upon by these incorruptible men—that is as you would have us understand it, I suppose; for this board the President requested Sherman or the Secretary of War should name the officers who should compose it. The first name was Hancock and the second was Sheridan, but argument was used by gentlemen interested in pressing this case that neither one of those gentlemen would be exactly acceptable. For judge-advocate, Swaim's name was first proposed. It was said Swaim is serving with Pope. And then they talked about Winthrop and another officer in the judge-advocate's department here, but they would not do, because they had been in the War Department all the time. Gardner was named after a while, (and he was the judge-advocate). They said at first Gardner would not do, because he served on McDowell's staff. Butterfield spoke up and said, "He served on my staff, too." That made him solid.

I do not wish to reflect upon the gentlemen composing the board, and I am not going to do it, but what I have told you is true. Senator Randolph got the names of officers available and sent them down to Willard's Hotel to be submitted to gentlemen pressing the case, to know whether they would be satisfactory or not, and they agreed upon the gentlemen who did constitute the court.

Schofield was aspiring to be the President of this great country; Randolph carried the Democratic nominating vote of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania in his breeches pocket——

Mr. ROSECRANS. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that General Schofield desired to be President?

Mr. STEELE. You understand me to say that nothing would have given his heart more gratitude to this people. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROSECRANS. I understood the honorable gentleman from Indiana to say that General Schofield was a candidate for the Presidency?

Mr. STEELE. I did not say so.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Then you said he was an aspirant, I believe?

Mr. STEELE. I stated that he was an aspirant, and I repeat that nothing would have given his heart greater satisfaction, and his friends understand it to be the fact that he would like to have been complimented with the nomination. The honorable gentleman from California so understood.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I beg to say, with all respect to this House, that I do not understand any such thing.

Mr. STEELE. Not now you do not understand it so; but then did you not understand it to be true?

But to come back to this board. They went to West Point and swore themselves into a tribunal to take cognizance of this matter. Was it a legally organized court? Had it authority under the laws of the State, or of the United States? But they met and assumed judicial functions for which, under the laws of the State of New York they were liable to trial for assuming unwarrantably these functions. Oh, the gentleman may laugh, but I defy him to resist the truth of the assertion or to controvert it successfully, and I am satisfied that he will not undertake to do it. They commenced an examination of the case. What were they to do under the law?

In order that the President may be fully informed of the facts of the case of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of volunteers, and be enabled to act advisedly upon his application for relief in said case, a board is hereby convened, by order of the President, to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major-General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as is now on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as may be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion justice requires should be taken on said application by the President.

This is the order under which the board acted. Under such an order could they have taken evidence, or was there any authority for taking evidence at all, except in the terms of the order itself? It was not a court of original jurisdiction.

What was their authority in the matter? Why, Mr. Chairman, the only thing that court could have done at all under the order creating it would have been to take up the proceedings of the original court-martial, and if they could find that any evidence of a material character had been left out in the proceedings of that court it was competent for them to say so, and make their report to that effect. But what power did they exercise? What power was given to them? Simply to enable the President to act understandingly in the matter. This board convened, and what do they find? That Longstreet was there with twenty-five thousand men, and that if Porter had gone in obedience to his orders he would have been devoured! Consider it, gentlemen, for a moment. Longstreet, with twenty-five thousand men—such men as he had in his command—was standing there in line of battle all day looking complacently down on Porter, with nine thousand five hundred men, saying, "Don't hurt me and I will not hurt you." Why, it is not even reasonable. The fact is, the evidence taken at the time they talk about—and I defy contradiction—the evidence shows that without Porter, and with Longstreet and his forces, our army came out victorious the night of the 29th, and that Longstreet formed on Jackson's right, extending his own right up to the railroad and going a little across the Manassas and Gainesville road.

I want to say further that under the orders he had received I do not believe there is a soldier here—I know there is not a good one—who, if he had received such an order or the three orders that Porter had received, would not have gone in and found out whether there were twenty-five thousand men with Longstreet or not.

Mr. ROSECRANS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROSECRANS. What order is it to which you now refer?

Mr. STEELE. I refer now first to the order of August 27, issued in the evening, for Porter to march at 1 o'clock the next morning to Bristoe to support Hooker. I refer also to the joint order under which General McDowell, then in authority, said, "Put your force in here;" and the subsequent order of 4.30 o'clock, that McDowell said he saw himself in time for it to have reached Porter by 5:30. Porter says that order was not received until nearly sundown. McDowell left Porter at Dawkin's Branch and rides two and five-eighths miles back to Manassas Junction to join his own troops, the two divisions which he names. Shortly after leaving Porter, getting King and Ricketts started to the right, he met the 4.30 order going to Porter.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that when General McDowell, at half past 11 in the morning, joined General Porter and assumed the command of Porter's division, his own division, and King's division, he then and there directed Porter to go into the fight?

Mr. STEELE. I say so most emphatically. I do not say half past 11 o'clock, because he says, "I can not state the hour positively;" but the evidence is very conclusive it was between 12 and 1 o'clock.

Mr. ROSECRANS. The gentleman says that McDowell ordered Porter to go into the fight?

Mr. STEELE. That he ordered Porter to go into the fight. He said, "Put your men in here."

Mr. ROSECRANS. And do I understand the gentleman to say that the order "Put your men in here" was the same as ordering Porter to go into the fight?

Mr. STEELE. I mean exactly that. It meant—to put his men into the fight. It meant to go in. It did not mean to wait on the railroad and to stay there all day.

Mr. ROSECRANS. The gentleman will excuse me a moment further, for I desire to get exact information. What I want of the gentleman is this, to state to this House what he means. Does he mean that when General McDowell said "put your men in here" he expected Porter then and there to commence the fighting, or does he mean General McDowell told him there would be the place he would operate, and when he had taken place on the left of General Reynolds and on the right of General Porter they would commence the battle when the line was complete? That is the idea I want to get to the House, whether Porter was told to commence fighting before McDowell had his place in the line or not.

Mr. STEELE. I do mean that, and will insert in the RECORD with my remarks General McDowell's testimony upon that point before the court-martial.

The question with me was how, soonest, within the limit fixed by General Pope, this force of ours could be applied against the enemy. General Porter made a remark to me which showed me that he had no question but that the enemy was in his immediate front. I said to him: "You put your force in here, and I will take mine up the Sudley Springs road, on the left of the troops engaged at that point with the enemy," or words to that effect. I left General Porter with the belief and understanding that he would put his force in at that point. I moved back by the shortest road I could find to the head of my own troops, who were near Bethlehem church, and immediately turned them up north on the Sudley Springs road to join General Reynolds's division, which belonged to my command, and which I had directed to co-operate with General Sigel in the movements he (General Sigel) was making at the time I left him in the morning. After seeing the larger part of my troops on the Sudley Springs road I rode forward to the head of the column. I met a messenger from General Pope. I stopped him and saw that he had an order addressed to General Porter alone. I do not recollect more than the general purport or tenor of that order. It was to the effect that he should throw his corps upon the right flank or rear of the enemy from the position he then occupied. When I say right flank, I do so merely because of my knowledge of the position of the forces, not from any recollection of what that order contained on that point.

Question. You have said that the accused made an observation to you which showed that he was satisfied that the enemy was in his immediate front; will you state what that observation was?

Answer. I do not know that I can repeat it exactly, and I do not know that the accused meant exactly what the remark might seem to imply. The observation was to this effect—putting his hand in the direction of the dust rising above the tops of the trees—"we can not go in there anywhere without getting into a fight."

Q. What reply did you make to that remark?

A. I think to this effect: "That is what we came here for."

Q. Were there any obstacles in the way of the advance on the part of General Porter's command upon the flank of the enemy?

A. That depends upon what you would call obstacles. A wood is an obstacle.

Q. I mean insuperable obstacles, in a military sense?

A. I do not think we so regarded it at the time. I did not.

Mr. ROSECRANS. That is all I want to know.

Mr. STEELE. He did not say "Commence fighting;" but "Put your men in here," and Porter, looking "here," sees that he can not put his men "in here" without a fight, and that what McDowell means is, "We come here to fight; that is what we come here for." [Applause.]

Now, McDowell said he saw the 4.30 order, and that it was possible for it to have reached Porter at the time Captain Pope, (General Pope's brother), said it reached him. Captain Pope was sent for by Porter and came back, after he had delivered the order and was a mile or so on his way returning to Pope. And I have no doubt some of the officers who testified in the case saw Captain Pope when he had arrived back the second time. They say now that if Porter had gone in there it would have accomplished no result.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I will ask the gentleman himself to say whether if Porter had gone in there with a single division on Longstreet's corps it would not have accomplished results, and whether those results would have been likely to be favorable to us?

Mr. STEELE. From the evidence I have not the slightest doubt but our victory would have been glorious if Porter had taken his corps into the fight where he was directed.

Mr. CALKINS. You [General ROSECRANS] are assuming Longstreet was there. I claim Longstreet did not have but seventeen regiments and a few cavalry anywhere near General Pope until after 12 o'clock. That is what I infer from the evidence.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I will state for the information of my gallant young friend from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] that General Longstreet himself told me——

Mr. MAGINNIS. Let me ask one question.

The CHAIRMAN (rapping to order). The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. ROSECRANS. I ask the gentleman to allow me one moment to answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS].

Mr. MAGINNIS. If General McDowell wanted to fight he had twenty-five thousand men. Why did he not put them in?

Mr. CALKINS. That is what he did do. He went around on the right and did put them in, marching to the sound of the cannon. And that is what Porter did not do, and everybody knows it.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Why did McDowell not go in and fight?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let the Chair send the sergeant of the guard. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (rapping to order). Gentlemen will resume their seats.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I ask a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. STEELE. I would be very glad to yield for a debate between myself and some other gentleman, but I do not wish it to be so general. I have seen several fights of this kind and do not like it. But I yield to the gentleman from California for a moment.

Mr. ROSECRANS. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE,] I understand, consents to yield to me for one moment to answer the question put to me by my gallant young friend Colonel CALKINS. I want to say that General Longstreet told me on the ground last fall that he was in position with all his corps at half past 11 o'clock on that day.

Mr. CALKINS. I want to say to my gallant friend and commander of the Army of the Cumberland that if he will examine the evidence of General Longstreet before this commission which has been talked so much about, of which General Schofield was the president, he will find General Longstreet testifying that only the advance of his force were there at 11 o'clock, and that they got into line some time after that; the time he can not state, but he supposes about 1 or 2 o'clock. That is the substance of it.

Mr. MAYO. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MAYO. I wish to ask what has this House to do with that question? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended. He has been a good deal interrupted.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I hope the time of the gentleman from Indiana, my colleague on the committee, will be extended. If he desires so much time I move that it be extended for fifteen minutes.

Mr. STEELE. Fifteen minutes is all I ask.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Indiana being permitted to proceed? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEELE, of Indiana. This board of review found that General Pope's army would have been annihilated if these twelve thousand men of Porter's had gone into that fight in addition to the few men who were in it. Such reasoning as that, to say that if our force had been increased by the addition of the best corps in the Army would have caused its extinction from the face of the earth! Who believes any such thing? Who believes that Porter should not, under the orders he had received, have gone in there and fought? And you will find in the proceedings of the original court that he did give a feeble order to advance from his position in the rear, nearly three miles, but quickly countermanded it.

I was coming to where McDowell had run his horse back from Dawkin's Branch, two and five-eighths miles. He had got King's and Rickett's divisions and started for the field, when he met an officer going to Porter with orders to go into the fight. He said to the officer that is an important order. McDowell himself marched with his troops six miles, after riding two and five-eighths miles, and put his two divisions into the fight, and it was such conduct as this that saved our Army. According to the showing of this board Porter could have found rebels in his immediate front, and the board does not say why he did not go in.

Can a board of three officers, without authority, revise or review or set aside the proceedings of a regularly constituted court-martial? They attempt to do it; they attempt to say that the finding of that court-martial was all wrong, and that the gentlemen composing the court were corrupted by promises of office.

During that trial a gentleman who is on this floor—I will not say that he is on the floor, but he is an officer of this House—heard Fitz-John Porter say while walking up and down his room the evening after McDowell had testified, "They accuse me of not being loyal to Pope; well, I was not." Now, being loyal to a commander of an army is being loyal to his country when that commander is consistently fighting his country's battles.

As I said before, I hope my friends on the other side will not be led away by political bias. Gentlemen here with whom I served during the war know that we had no such men in the Army of the West. When the officers of that army received orders they obeyed them. And I have no doubt that my friends on the other side, my gallant friends, were in an army commanded by men who when they received an order held it to be law even unto death.

We do not want you here to be biased politically. We do not want you gentlemen who, though misguided, fought battles in that war on the other side, to say that you will set aside the decision of the highest military tribunal in the land.

The question is asked why General Pope did not appear before this board? Why should he appear? I will tell you why he did not. They were afraid to summon him. There was a talk about summoning him, and the question was asked: "Suppose we do summon Pope; whose witness is he? We do not want him." The judge-advocate appointed on the part of the Government says he was himself in favor of Porter when the proceedings of the board commenced.

Now, these men, who were friends of Porter, virtually said to General Pope: "Will you come here of your own sweet will, and let gentlemen who have been preparing this case from one to sixteen years have a whack at you? We will cross-question you to death; we will use you up; for there is nobody here except the judge-advocate to look after you?" and he is a friend of Porter (which he ceased to be at the close of the trial). That is what the lawyers of Porter said in their minds. If they had wanted Pope why did not they summon him? They did summon other witnesses and administered oaths to other witnesses.

Great stress is laid on what is said by General Grant, and well may the people of the country pay attention to what that great man says. But he said no to Porter's appeals three times during the time he was President and might have helped him (President Johnson had also refused him). The last time Grant says: "I have carefully examined the new matter presented to me in this case, and it only the more thoroughly convinces me of the justice of the sentence." Further comment is unnecessary. [Applause.]

Mr. LYMAN obtained the floor, and yielded to

Mr. SLOCUM, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX, of New York, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. SLOCUM. I desire to say to the House that I have a list of twenty-five members who desire to speak on the bill pending in Committee of the Whole, and most of them desire one hour each. The bill is now on the Private Calendar, and it will take up a great part of this session if the wishes of those gentlemen are gratified. I ask unanimous consent that the session of to-morrow be for debate only on the pending bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. With the understanding, I suppose, that at the close of the discussion to-morrow the bill will go over until next private-bill day.

Mr. SLOCUM. Yes, with that understanding.

Mr. REED. For general debate?

Mr. SLOCUM. Certainly.

Mr. REED. And the general debate to be continued next Friday?

Mr. SLOCUM. Yes.

Mr. REED. Well, if no one else in the House objects I will not. My objection originally was that if that understanding was made about the session of to-morrow, we would simply have a few persons here, not for real debate, but only for the reading of speeches. I do not regard that as wise or desirable in a case like this.

But as the views of members of this House as already shown, and of the manager of the bill here, indicate a desire for such a session to-morrow, I do not feel like interposing an objection, although at the same time I think it an unwise course in a matter of this kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has heard the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM], that there be a session to-morrow for general debate only, no vote to be taken, the bill then to go over until the next private bill day.

Mr. KEIFER. For general debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For general debate. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. It is understood that there is to be no other business to-morrow than debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the understanding of the Chair——

Mr. KEIFER. Except the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Except the reading of the Journal. The Chair hears no objection.

DUTY ON WOOL.

Mr. CONVERSE. I hold in my hand, and desire to have printed in the RECORD for the information of the House, the resolutions of the National Wool-Growers' Association, adopted at its annual meeting in Chicago on the 26th day of September, 1883, asking the restoration of the tariff rates on imported wools to what they were prior to the late reduction; also, a memorial and petition to the same effect of the officers and executive committee of the Wool-Growers' Association in and for the State of Indiana; also, a petition on the same subject of John Robinson and 44 others, citizens of the State of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that these papers may be printed in to-morrow morning's RECORD, excepting the forty-four names on the last-mentioned petition, which need not be printed, and that they be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

There being no objection, the following papers, submitted by Mr. CONVERSE, were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

To Senators and Members of Congress:

The wisdom of the last Congress, prompted by the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, removed the ad valorem duty on foreign wools. By so doing, a great and manifest injustice has been done to the wool-grower and the agriculturist generally. The tariff act of 1867 gives to wool the only protection it had, and is the only law worthy of your consideration that gives any protection to any agricultural interest. We do assure you that under the present law such losses are incurred that wool growing ceases to be remunerative, and we will be compelled to abandon sheep husbandry and go into other pursuits. We beg your careful attention to this subject, and pray you to speedily restore the tariff of '67 on foreign wools, thereby guaranteeing to us that justice which our prominence as American citizens entitles us to.

We have thus earnestly appealed to the Forty-eighth Congress to restore that which we must have, or our honest toil goes unrequited; therefore we come to you, trusting that you will not fail to heed us in our humble petition.

(Signed by John Robinson and 44 others.)

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, wool-growers in the State of Indiana, respectfully and earnestly petition the Congress to restore the duties on foreign wools substantially as they were enacted by the act of 1867.

The flagrant injustice done to the wool-growers by abolishing the ad valorem duties provided by the wool tariff of 1867 demands your attention, and we venture briefly to state some reasons for this assertion:

Prior to that enactment no substantial protection had been given by Congress to the production of American wools, whereas the manufacturers of wool had been sufficiently protected against similar foreign fabrics. This well known fact led to a conference of wool-growers and manufacturers, who, after careful and laborious consideration, agreed upon the act of 1867, and this agreement became the law of that date.

At that time the number of sheep in the United States was about 22,000,000 and the annual product of wool was about 60,000,000 of pounds. Under the influence of this law sheep husbandry rapidly advanced, until the number of sheep is now over 50,000,000 and the annual product of wool is more than 300,000,000 of pounds. With this increase the price of wool has steadily receded from 51 cents a pound in 1867 to 42 cents prior to the tariff of the last Congress. The stability of the home market, secured by the act of 1867, accounts for this rapid increase of production and for the reduction in price. Let it be remembered that these facts carried sheep husbandry into every State in the Union, and in some of the States not a county is found without a portion of its wealth invested in wool production, so that there is to-day 1,000,000 flock-masters who are demanding the restoration of the late tariff.

Your petitioners further state that the abolition of ad valorem duties has reduced the price of wool during the current year to the producer not less than 5 cents per pound; which equals, on the entire product of 300,000,000 pounds, $15,000,000, and they ask: "Who has been benefited by the loss?"

The consumers of woolen goods certainly have not, for on many classes of such goods prices have advanced. In fact and in truth, the great loss has only augmented the profits of manufacturers, without any appreciable advantage to those who consume the fabric.

It must not be forgotten that the producers of wool have been compelled to submit to this reduction in order to compete with foreign wools.

There are 80,000,000 of sheep in Australia, and with her mild climate and perennial pastures she can multiply this number until she quadruples the present production of the United States, and finally destroy this industry. Great efforts are now being made by certain parties in the United States to assist Australia in this competition by improving the quality of her wool through the instrumentality of the best American merino blood. This effort seems to have been commenced simultaneously with the effort to modify the act of 1867.

The loss to the United States by destroying sheep husbandry will not be confined to the direct loss of the wool production. The value of sheep for fertilizing land, and thereby enabling it to sustain the drain incident to the production of the cereals, is an important factor in this problem, especially in the grain-producing States, and this incidental loss is of great magnitude, and is best understood by those who are practical agriculturists. Wool is the only production of those who till the soil that is directly and materially benefited by economic legislation.

We therefore urge upon Congress the duty of restoring the duties provided by the act of 1867.

Why should the manufacturers have free wool, or wool with a duty so low as to let in foreign wools, unless the consumer of their products have free goods, or goods with a duty so low as to admit foreign fabrics?

We are protectionists, and desire to see all American industries and American labor fairly and uniformly protected by just and equal economic legislation.

Wherefore we respectfully and earnestly pray for the relief herein requested.

FIELDING BEELER, President Indiana W. G. A.,
J. W. ROBE, Secretary Indiana W. G. A.,

And Executive Committee Indiana Wool-Growers' Association.

The National Wool-Growers' Association, at its last annual meeting, held at Chicago, September 26, 1883, passed the following resolutions by a unanimous vote:

Resolved, First. That in the opinion and judgment of the National Wool-Growers' Association the tariff rates on imported wools should at the earliest opportunity be restored to what they were at the time of the last reduction.

Second. The State, district, and county associations and wool-growers in all the States are requested to use every endeavor to secure the efforts of their respective Representatives and Senators in the restoration of the tariff on wools.

Third. That the officers of this association are instructed to use their best efforts to bring before Congress in the most effective possible manner the demands of the wool-growers of the United States through this national association for the restoration of the tariff on wool as above.

Attest: ALBERT CHAPMAN,
Secretary National Wool-Growers' Association.

ALEXANDER SWIFT & CO.

Mr. JORDAN. I ask unanimous consent to change the reference of a bill from one committee to another. House bill 1244, for the relief of Alexander Swift & Co., partners, and Alexander Swift & Co. and Niles Works, was referred by a mistake of mine to the Committee on War Claims; it should have been referred to the Committee on Claims. I ask unanimous consent that the reference be changed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will ask what is the nature of the bill?

Mr. JORDAN. It is a bill relating to extra compensation for the building of three gunboats.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think that the bill properly belongs to the Committee on War Claims; but I will not object.

There being no objection, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is a pity that in discussing questions of this nature we can not have hung in a convenient position a map of the field of battle, for it is no slur on the intelligence of the members to say that nine-tenths of them can not carry the positions of the troops in their heads. Could such a map be hung opposite the lower portion of the Speaker's desk, the House would even consent to the temporary eclipse of our friends the nimble-fingered reporters and those whom we may in Homeric phrase call the loud-shouting reading clerks. But in the absence of such a convenience it may be possible to construct on the floor of this House a sufficiently accurate diagram. Let us call the Speaker's chair Centreville, not an inappropriate location, for from that center come the friendly rays of recognition; then this main aisle would be the Warrenton turnpike, and where I stand Gainesville. Let us call the side-door which is diagonally behind me Thoroughfore Gap. Then Manassas Junction would be diagonally in front of me, where sits my friend from New Jersey who formerly represented us at Vienna, but whom I will ask to represent for a few moments the railway interests. Bristoe Station, on the Alexandria Railroad, would be at the seat of the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER], and Warrenton Junction, on the same road, would be on the same aisle at the place of the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVERHART]. From Thoroughfare Gap to Gainesville, where I stand, is only some six miles, and from Gainesville to Groveton, which would be where this main aisle enters the open space in front of the Speaker, about three miles and a half. The confederate line of battle, when in position on the 29th of August, was about four and a half miles long; it extended from a point near Sudley Springs, which point will fall at the seat of my popular colleague the Representative from Harvard University, and trended in a southerly direction across the Warrenton pike, a little this side of Groveton, to a point south of the Manassas Gap Railroad. I shall ask my friend from Vermont, whose silver hair is his only mark of age, to represent the right of the confederate line, positively for this occasion only.

Let us confine ourselves strictly to those movements which concern the question under debate, and see how the troops got on the field. Jackson had flanked our army on the Rappahannock on the right. On the night of the 26th, having passed Thoroughfare Gap, he descended on Manassas Junction, and captured all our reserve supply-trains and sutlers' wagons. His men, remembering the wise precepts of Sir Dugald Dalgetty, fell on the pork and hard-tack, canned lobster, and brandy peaches, and not only satisfied the hunger of the past, but laid in an abundant supply for the future.

General Pope, like an astonished terrier, who, while defending his ears, suddenly finds his tail pinched, faced about and marched in all haste on Gainesville and on Manassas Junction. But Jackson had no idea of waiting his pleasure; he moved north from Manassas Junction and settled down in line of battle, with his left near Sudley Springs and his right on the Warrenton pike, along which he stretched a friendly hand toward Longstreet, who, with the other half of the Army of Northern Virginia, was preparing to pass Thoroughfare Gap.

Meanwhile, General Porter, being at Warrenton Junction, received on the evening of the 27th of August an order from General Pope to march to Bristoe Station, where he arrived on the morning of the 28th. Here he lay awaiting orders during that day. On the morning of the 29th he was ordered to march on Gainesville. At about 11.30 a. m. he arrived within three miles and a half of Gainesville, and found himself in the presence of the enemy. He halted, and, with some skirmishing and artillery fire, remained there during that day. These two days, from the evening of the 27th to the evening of the 29th, embrace the period during which General Porter committed his alleged military crimes. An analysis of the charges against him shows that they are reducible to two. The others are either implied in these two or were abandoned at the trial.

The first charge is, that being ordered on the night of the 27th to march at 1 o'clock the next morning from Warrenton Junction so as to be by daylight at Bristoe Station, he then and there disobeyed said order. In point of fact General Porter in no sense disobeyed the order. He only modified it by marching two hours later than the time set down. It is proved that his division commanders expostulated strongly against starting at 1 o'clock, saying that their troops were exhausted by hard marching, that the night was excessively dark, and that the narrow road was blocked by wagon-trains. General Porter, who at first replied that the order must be obeyed, was at last convinced of the wisdom of their views and postponed the start for two hours. On arriving next morning at Bristoe Station he found no enemy and no demand for his services. In other words, he, with the advice and assent of his division commanders, postponed his march for two hours, and on arriving at Bristoe Station found that his troops had not been needed. This act of his has been loudly proclaimed as a gross disobedience worthy of death. If there be one military principle better grounded than another, it is that the general rule of implicit and instant obedience may have modifications. When an officer is at a distance from his commander he is allowed a certain discretion in the interpretation of orders received, and the higher the rank of this subordinate officer and the farther removed he is from his commander, the wider is this discretion. But this safeguard is always maintained, that when a subordinate so situated does modify an order, he modifies it at his proper peril. Under this general principle the action of General Porter in postponing his march was entirely proper in the military sense. But even admitting what is not true, that he had no other choice than instant obedience, his arrival two hours late on a field where he was not needed was deserving of no heavier a penalty than a verbal reprimand.

The second charge is that being directed, in an order dated 4.30 p. m. of the 29th, to attack the enemy's flank, he did shamefully disobey the same.

This order reached General Porter when he was halted on the 29th, as before described, about three and a half miles south of the Warrenton pike. In issuing this order General Pope fell into two errors which destroyed its force. 1. He supposed that Jackson alone was on the field, and that Longstreet would not there arrive until the next day. 2. He supposed that Porter was a mile and a half nearer the Warrenton pike than he really was, and that he thus stood within striking distance of Jackson's unprotected right flank. The order read, "Your line of march brings you in on the enemy's right flank," and General Porter was ordered to attack that flank and get, if possible, in its rear. But the real state of the case was this: Longstreet, with a force over twice as great as that of General Porter, had passed Thoroughfare Gap, and by half past 11 on the 29th was in line of battle, with his left connected with Jackson's and his right some distance south of the Manassas Railroad. This so-called 4.30 order, then, was one impossible of execution; for Porter was not on the flank either of Jackson or of Longstreet, and any direct attack by him would have been met by an enemy of twice his strength and strongly posted. In such a direct attack his corps must have been repulsed and driven in confusion from the field, a disaster which would have exposed the right flank of the rest of the Union Army and insured a defeat far more crushing than the one that occurred on the following day.

The order was impossible of execution; but this is not all: although dated 4.30 p. m. it is proved by overwhelming evidence not to have been delivered till sunset. To have deployed the second line and made the attack would have taken one or two hours, when darkness would have prevented any effective assault. In one word, an order impossible of execution was delivered too late for any attempt to carry it out.

The much-concentrated statements I have made are carefully based on the decision of the West Point board which reviewed General Porter's case. It may be properly asked why did the original court-martial condemn him to be cashiered; and why did the West Point board not only exonerate him, but give him high praise for his soldierly conduct? The answer is a simple one. The West Point board had before it not only the entire evidence of the original court-martial, but a vast amount of new evidence which added much to the knowledge of the case and further gave a new interpretation to many portions of the old testimony. Thus the court-martial decided that General Porter was opposite the unprotected right flank of Jackson and had time and opportunity to attack it, while the West Point board demonstrated that he was in no such position, but was opposed by nearly the whole of Longstreet's corps; and further, that he received the 4.30 order too late to make any attack.

By the decision of one or the other of these courts we must be governed; for it is out of the power of any gentleman on this floor to give an opinion on evidence which was studied for months by the officers of those courts.

Nor can we hesitate for a moment which of the two to take as our guide. On the one hand we have a court-martial held at a time of wild public excitement and prejudice, and furnished with imperfect and one-sided evidence—a court two of whose members had been in the battle, and whose reputation was at stake; nay, one of whom descended to the floor, gave evidence against the prisoner, and then resumed his seat to pass judgment on him. On the other hand we behold a board of three eminent officers passing six months in the study of all the evidence, new and old. Of this board of three officers, two were at the outset so strong in their feeling against the accused that they wished to be relieved, fearing they could not do him justice; and yet these two officers, Generals Terry and Schofield, were forced by the overwhelming testimony to change from hostility to admiration.

The gentlemen of this House who still hold to their old feelings against General Porter would act wisely were they to follow the distinguished example of those two officers.

Mr. MAYO. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SLOCUM. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX, of New York, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move that the House adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn the following business was transacted by unanimous consent:

APPOINTMENT OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following letter; which was read:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1884.

DEAR SIR: As I shall be absent from the city to-morrow, January 19, 1884, I hereby designate Hon. S. S. COX, of New York, to perform the duties of the chair in my place for that day.

Respectfully,

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

JOHN WALLER.

Mr. BEACH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3558) to reimburse John Waller, late postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for moneys expended in carrying the mails; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be authorized to have printed such documents and papers for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered by the said committee during the present Congress.

CONTINGENT FUND OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting statements of the expenditures of the contingent fund of the several bureaus of the Interior Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES RECEIVING SUBSIDIES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the House, concerning telegraph companies receiving subsidies in bonds or lands who have transferred their rights to other companies; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

COLLISIONS AT SEA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting certain petitions for legislation to lessen the peril of collisions at sea, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPORTATION OF ADULTERATED TEAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draught of a bill to amend the act to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

NEW MEXICO PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land claims of Felipe Tafoya and others, No. 99; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

NEW REVENUE STEAMER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a recommendation for a new revenue steamer; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PAYNE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

The motion of Mr. SLOCUM was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Papers relating to the claim of Harriss & Hodge—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BALLENTINE: Papers relating to the claim of Thomas Harville, of Samuel Sherrill, and of James S. Williams—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of citizens of Los Angeles, Cal., for the erection of a public building in that city—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. VALENTINE: The petition of Teachers' Institute of Hall County, Nebraska, transmitting resolutions relative to the disposition of schools funds—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. WHITING: The petition of G. L. Loomis and others, for a tobacco-rebate appropriation—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. JAMES WILSON: The petition of S. D. Redfield, for relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 19, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Hon. S. S. COX, of New York, as Speaker pro tempore. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this day has been set apart for general debate only, no other business to be transacted.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

The CHAIRMAN. This day has been set apart for general debate on the pending bill, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the House for a short time while I present, as briefly as I may, the reasons why, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I have not felt that I could join in the majority report in this case, and the reasons why I feel impelled to join in the minority report. It would be much pleasanter, it would be much more soothing to one's feelings, to vote for this bill than to feel obliged to condemn the beneficiary in this case, Fitz-John Porter, to the longer continuance of the stigma which has been affixed to his name for now twenty-two years. But it often happens that the path of duty is not a pleasant one; it often happens that we are obliged by our convictions and sense of duty to do that which it would be pleasanter for us to leave undone. The old maxim, tempora mutantur in illis mutamur, applies in this case. The times have changed, and in them have we changed, since Fitz-John Porter stood at the bar of that court-martial which assembled in this city twenty-two years ago to receive at their hands the verdict of his countrymen. We have drifted away from the stern realities of that dreadful period of war into a period of profound peace, and it is a universal attribute of human nature that the further we get away from unpleasant affairs of this kind, the stronger becomes the sway of sympathy and the weaker become the dictates of reason; and such has been the fact in regard to this case.

The appeal which was made to us yesterday by the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] was most strongly based on sympathy for the condemned man, sympathy founded upon a life-long friendship for him, a friendship that had been earned and perpetuated in camp and field. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not for this House, sitting in this case at least as an august tribunal to try the merits of this case, to be swayed by the dictates of sympathy.

I feel, sir, that it is an embarrassing position to stand here in the face of this majority report, in the face of the opinions of military men so distinguished as those I find in the majority, the gentleman from California [Mr. ROSECRANS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM], gentlemen who have commanded armies and army corps, to differ from them in regard to a military matter. But I remember, sir, that the principal question here is not a matter of military strategy; it is a quesion of the weighing and sifting of facts, and to that occupation for twenty years I have devoted my life. Therefore with the less embarrassment I stand here to argue this question.

But I remember, Mr. Chairman, when we sit as judges, as we do in this case, where a man stands before us on trial for his reputation, that we, each of us, must judge for himself and not for another, and we must each of us be governed by his own convictions, and not by the convictions of another.

The history of this case has been already sufficiently stated to the House—how that in the month of December, 1862, the court-martial was convened in this city for the trial of Fitz-John Porter on two charges: first, of insubordination in disobeying the legitimate orders of his superior officer; and second, misbehavior in the presence of the enemy by not coming to the succor of his comrades on the field, being at the time within the sound of battle at that time raging on his right. These two charges had each specifications, the first five and the second four; but as the last two specifications of the first charge were not sustained, and the fourth specification of the second charge was withdrawn, we may say there were but two charges, and three specifications under each. The specifications under the first charge were disobedience to three several and consecutive orders, issued by his commanding officer, General Pope. Upon each of these two charges he was found guilty, and upon each of these specifications under the first and second charges—I mean the first three under each charge—he was found guilty. It would have been sufficient if he had been found guilty of but one charge; it would have been sufficient if he had been found guilty of but one specification under each charge, it would have been sufficient if he had been found guilty of but one specification under one of the charges; but, Mr. Chairman, he was found guilty by that august tribunal under three specifications of the first charge and under three specifications of the second charge.

The findings of the court were approved by the President of the United States, and this memorable case passed into history as res adjudicata; and for twenty years—twenty-two years indeed—it has stood before the American people and the world as a settled fact upon the judgment of a regularly constituted court-martial, the most august that ever convened upon the American continent; it has stood, I say, as the deliberate judgment of the court that Fitz-John Porter was a guilty man.

After the lapse of fifteen years, when many of the men who had borne an active part in that era and in the transactions that then occurred had passed away from this life and their lips were sealed in the grave, when the memorable events of the 27th, 28th, and 29th of August, 1862, had become dimmed with the lapse of years, then a board of review is convened, to take into consideration the evidence presented before the court-martial in conjunction with such other evidence as might be presented before them, to advise the President as to what should be his proper course in regard to this case. This board, Mr. Chairman, was a mere advisory board. Their findings had no force in law. It could bind neither the President nor any one else, and when presented to the President, had so little effect upon his mind that he made no recommendation to the Congress then in session in regard to the disposal of the case, but simply submitted to them the evidence taken.

The report of the Committee upon Military Affairs now submitted to this House is based entirely and solely upon the findings of the Schofield board. The committee have neither undertaken to prosecute, nor have they in fact prosecuted inquiries upon their own behalf upon the merits of the case; but, on the contrary, at the first informal meeting of the committee a report which had been prepared before the committee was called together was presented to them, a report based entirely upon the report of the Schofield board, without investigation or thought or deliberation upon their own account. The report of the advisory board as I say is made the basis of this report for the action and consideration of this House, upon which we are asked to reverse and nullify the solemn judgment of the most august military court that ever convened upon this continent. And now, Mr. Chairman, this Congress, a purely legislative body under the Constitution, is asked to constitute itself a judicial tribunal, a court of last resort, a court of supreme review, to reverse, to nullify, to set aside the judgment and findings of the court-martial and the approval of the President of the United States who fell beneath the assassin's shot, and restore Fitz-John Porter to the rolls of the American Army from which he had been cashiered in disgrace. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this proposition is antagonistic to the very spirit of the Constitution and of our institutions.

When the fathers of this Republic laid the foundations of this Constitution they divided the powers of the Government into three separate and distinct departments. First, the legislative, to make the laws; second, the judicial, to interpret the laws; and third, the executive, to enforce the laws. To the judicial department alone belongs the power to determine the facts and the law in every case; and when the legislative branch of the Government shall pass over from its proper domain into that of the judicial and usurp the judicial functions, when it shall sit in review and judgment upon the findings of the highest military court that could be convened, I say the proposition is one of usurpation. It is a proposition which involves an absolute revolution in the character of the Government itself. The findings of judicial tribunals must be respected, or there is no safety whatever for our Government. How can you stand safely unless we stand securely within the limits of the Constitution and the powers that have been vested in the several branches of this Government?

Courts-martial, Mr. Chairman, have been recognized under our Government as a legitimate and necessary part of the judicial system. A court-martial has power over the reputation, over the liberty, ay, power over the very life of the individual. Their judgments and findings are binding and as irreversible as the judgment of the supreme judicial tribunal of this land. The legislature has the power in this case to pass this act, but the exercise of that power would be usurpation of the functions of the judicial branch of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the special point to which I desire to ask your attention for a few minutes is the character of these tribunals; first the court-martial, and second the Schofield board. There has been but one trial of this case. As admitted by my honorable friend from New York yesterday, there can be but one trial of it. From the judgment of that court-martial there is no appeal, because it is the highest court within its legitimate scope that the law provides.

That court-martial was composed of nine distinguished generals, educated in the military school, accustomed to arms and large operations upon the field; ample judges of the military situation, ample judges of the law and the facts of the case, and sitting as such tribunal, composed of such men as General Hunter and General Hitchcock, General Ricketts and General Rufus King, and General Prentiss and General James A. Garfield and General Slough; by the judgment and verdict of that court Fitz-John Porter was condemned.

It was a full trial. That court sat the longest of any court-martial, so far as my knowledge or reading goes, that ever assembled under the order of the President or the general-in-chief of the United States. For forty-five days they patiently investigated this case, and at the end of that period rendered their judgment. Every witness produced by the accused was examined. The time of the accused was in nowise curtailed. On yesterday the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] caused to be read in our hearing a letter from the Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, then Secretary of War, directing that the court should thereafter sit without regard to hours; and he asked us to draw from that the inference that Fitz-John Porter did not have an ample and full trial at the hands of that court. The gentleman from New York knows, or he ought to know, that that letter of Edwin M. Stanton was never read to the court until days after the evidence for the accused was all in and till the rebutting tesimony was nearly completed, and if it had any effect at all, it was simply to curtail the testimony against Fitz-John Porter and not to curtail that for his defense.

I say, then, it was a full trial; and I say furthermore it was a fair trial. When Fitz-John Porter was brought to the bar of the court and asked if he had any objection to the court, he replied most emphatically that he had none. And this leads me to remark upon another matter that was brought before us yesterday by the honorable gentleman from New York. That is, that one member of the court descended from the bench to become a witness on the stand, as he says, in a most material matter. It is true that at the request of the Judge-Advocate General, Judge Holt, of Kentucky, General Rufus King did take the stand and answer three questions as to the delivery of a certain order to him from General Porter on the 29th and any message he might have returned to General Porter thereupon. But when Fitz-John Porter declared he had no objection to the tribunal, he knew full well General Rufus King was a member of the court, and he knew well the relations of General King to the transactions of the 29th. And when in the beginning of the trial he saw fit to enter a protest against the calling of the court by the general-in-chief instead of the President, he said emphatically he had no objection to any single member of that court. Therefore I say this objection comes too late—after the testimony was all in and after the case was submitted to the court by his most able and eloquent counsel, Reverdy Johnson. In the very opening of his address Reverdy Johnson used the following language. I read from page 256 of the proceedings of the court-martial:

> Your eminent official law adviser, who has conducted this prosecution calmly and fairly so far as on him depended and with that vigilance and energy which his duty demanded, himself in the recent past, when momentous events hinged on the great sway which in his high post he bore, has trusted me, and has felt that his trust was in nowise betrayed.

Here, then, is an admission by the accused himself, in the first person singular, through the lips of his counsel, that he had received a calm and fair trial at the hands of the court.

It was therefore a full trial. It was also a fair trial. And, furthermore, it was a lawful trial, finding, and judgment. This judgment, as I before said, became res adjudicata, binding upon every department of this Government, legislative, executive, and judicial. Per contra, on the other hand, the Schofield board so called was a board created by no law. It had no legal status. It was known to no law. It was responsible to no law. If they took an oath, it was an extra-judicial oath. They had no authority to take an oath. They could take no binding oath. Their finding was an extra-judicial finding. It was merely personal advice of three amiable gentlemen to the President, which he did not see fit to adopt. The board had none of the power of a court. It could not compel the attendance of witnesses. It could not administer a valid oath. It could not enforce its processes by attachment for contempt. It could not prosecute a single witness for perjury if every word he uttered was a lie from beginning to end. It had not one single attribute of a court, either to compel the attendance of witnesses, to swear them, to examine them, or to punish them. This was the character of the tribunal, if we may call it a tribunal, upon whose report the Military Committee asks you to reverse the finding and the judgment of the court-martial.

The whole proceeding, then, was coram non judice. To place the conclusion of the board of review against the judgment of the court-martial is to put a personal opinion that can bind no one whatever against a solemn decree that binds the whole world.

The report of the board, furthermore—and I stand here to speak it advisedly—is the special plea of an advocate, and not a candid one at that. In a court of law it would be called a pettifogging report. It puts the worse for the better reason; it perverts facts, and it mistakes conclusions both of fact and of law.

It may be possible that at some remote period some of the gentlemen composing that board had been opposed to Fitz-John Porter; but if they ever had been, they had gotten bravely over it, in my opinion, before they ever looked into the evidence in the case. At all events, this report exhibits the zeal of converts to a cause, who resort to extravagance of statement perhaps to justify their change of opinion.

The next point in regard to which I wish to make a statement is the long letter which has been read to us from that most eminent military authority, that great statesman, General Grant. I permit no man in this House or elsewhere to go before me in my appreciation and recognition of that great leader of our armies.

But I can not forget that for eight long years General Grant sat in the Presidential chair at the other end of the Avenue; and I can not forget that during those eight long years Fitz-John Porter stood knocking, in season and out of season, at the door of the White House, asking General U. S. Grant to take his case under consideration and reopen it and permit him a new hearing. And I can not forget either that General Grant, both in 1869 and again in 1874, said that he had carefully considered the papers submitted to him by General Fitz-John Porter, and that he was not prepared, upon the papers submitted, to grant the review asked.

I know not what reasons may have actuated General Grant, three years after the report of the board of review was submitted to the whole American public, to reverse and change his decision, to which he had adhered for almost twenty years. But it would seem that in the performance of his duty as President, if he was ever to grant this rehearing at all, if he was ever to change his opinion, it should have been when called upon in his official capacity as the leading citizen of America to do justice to one of the most brilliant officers of the American Army. We must presume, or else hold General Grant recreant to the high trust reposed in him, that he did give the papers submitted to him the most careful and searching investigation. Under these circumstances the opinion of General Grant can not have that influence upon my mind that it otherwise would and should have. There is another thing. Soon after his conversion General Grant saw fit to write and print in the North American Review an article entitled, I believe, "An undeserved stigma." In that article, a copy of which I hold in my hand, he also saw fit to print a diagram of what he claimed to be the situation of affairs at Manassas on the 29th of August, 1862.

I ask gentlemen of this House, I ask every one, to take that diagram and lay it down side by side with any map of the battlefield of the 29th of August, 1862, that ever has been made or ever can be made, and then tell me whether or not this diagram is not false in fact and misleading in effect. There was no situation upon that battlefield from the beginning to the end of that dreadful contest which could by any possibility be represented by the diagram which General Grant published in the North American Review.

When the evidence was all in before the court-martial and the case closed upon both sides, and nothing remained but the summing up, Porter asked four days for his distinguished counsel to prepare his case, and the last minute he asked was granted him.

Reverdy Johnson took four days in which to prepare that masterly argument which never has been surpassed in the entire history of this case.

Again, it is urged in the report of the majority that the report of the Schofield board was a unanimous report, while we shall never be able to know how the court-martial stood or that it was not a five-to-four verdict or finding. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we are not able to say that it was a unanimous report (which we have every reason in the world to believe that it was), we certainly are not able to say that it was not a unanimous report. At all events it was the solemn decree of the court, and it carried with it the full weight and force of the entire tribunal.

This brings us back to consider the report of the board of review upon its merits and to state the reasons why the findings of the court should not be reversed. Let me recapitulate.

In the first place, the eminent character of the generals composing that court, their ability to comprehend the situation and to judge both of the facts and of the military law applicable to the facts.

Second. Its complete judicial powers, which the second board had not.

Third. Its superior means of investigation, being a court armed with all the panoply of a court, the power to compel the attendance of witnesses, to administer judicial oaths, to attach for contempt, and to prosecute for perjury.

The fourth reason why that finding ought not to be disturbed is, that at that time all these events were but three months old; the facts were all fresh in the memory of the witnesses.

The fifth reason is the danger of the legislative power usurping the functions and trespassing upon the domain of the judicial departments.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, on the 27th of August, 1862, Fitz-John Porter entered Warrenton Junction, Va., at the head of the most magnificent army corps in the American Army, composed of Sykes's regulars and Porter's old division under Morell. Porter himself was the "consummate flower" and pride of that army. On that 27th August no general of our Army had behind him a more brilliant record or before him more flattering prospects of a splendid future. Educated by the nation at its Military Academy, and graduating in 1845, he commenced his active military career as lieutenant of artillery in the Mexican war, and on more than one field distinguished himself for his gallantry. Five years at West Point as instructor gave breadth to his military training, so that when the civil war broke out few men were better qualified to render greater service to his country.

I do not forget his distinguished service in organizing the Pennsylvania levies nor his success in bringing order out of confusion in front of this capital. This service was recognized by the Government in appointing him colonel in the regular Army and brigadier-general of volunteers. As such he went to the Peninsula. There again he demonstrated great capacity for service and great activity and zeal as a soldier. I permit no man to go before me in appreciation or in acknowledgment of his eminent abilities or his soldierly qualities in that Peninsular campaign. McClellan declared that Porter was "magnificent" at Hanover Court House; and history has not failed to record how valiantly he stemmed the tide of battle at Mechanicsville on the 26th of June nor how nobly his Fifth Corps responded to his command on the 27th at Gaines's Mill. At Malvern Hill, on July 1, he held the post of honor and of danger on the Federal left, and with his back to the river, together with the other Union generals, he stood like a rock, while wave after wave of living valor beat and broke and were hurled back from his front in rout and ruin.

For his services in this campaign President Lincoln, unsolicited, made him a major-general of volunteers and a brevet brigadier-general in the regular Army. But the Peninsular campaign was ended. McClellan, with a discouraged army, hovered on the banks of the James at Harrison's Landing, while a small army hastily gathered from various commands interposed between the victorious rebel army and the national capital.

To the command of this Army of Virginia was called Maj. Gen. John Pope, a graduate of West Point, a veteran of the Mexican war, where he distinguished himself for gallantry, and who had conducted the victorious campaign at Island 10, and rendered good service under Halleck at Corinth. Unfortunately he commenced his campaign with his famous "headquarters-in-the-saddle order," which was regarded as a taunt to the whole Army of the Potomac, a reflection upon McClellan, and an insult to the leading generals of that army, including General Porter. Pope was three years the senior of Porter at West Point, and seems to have been both personally and officially in the highest degree odious to Porter.

Unexpectedly the latter found himself transferred from the command of McClellan, whom he loved and in whose military genius he had implicit confidence, to the command of Pope, for whom he had contempt, if not actual hatred. Porter, beyond doubt, conceived himself to be Pope's superior in everything but rank.

It seems certain, too, that Porter's head was a little turned by his rapid and great promotion.

Every dispatch to Burnside shows how anxious was Porter to be away from Pope and once more with McClellan. It is only in the light of this contempt of Pope that Porter's acts from the 27th to the 30th of August can be truthfully interpreted.

It is claimed that this animus of Porter is immaterial; but the animus is the very essence of crime.

It makes all the difference between the bungling and incapable imbecile and the brilliant and capable but insubordinate leader.

And so it comes that we are to judge Porter by himself; and by so much as we know him to have been energetic, dashing, and brave before, by so much are we to measure the greatness of his crime, when for one long day he lay with his magnificent corps under the shade of the Manassas trees, two and one-half miles from the front of his columns, while the thunder of the guns of Groveton beat continuously in his ears, calling him to the field of danger and of glory, where his country's cause hung in the fluctuating scales of battle, almost without firing a single shot to check the advance of the columns of the enemy then pressing across his front to strike and crush his devoted comrades in arms. [Applause.]

There above the sulphurous smoke of that bloody field towered the majestic specter of America, calling through the bellowing of the guns "Fitz-John Porter, this way!" but Porter thought it was the voice of John Pope that called, and so he continued to lie in the shade at Bethlehem church, two and one-half miles from the front of his own column. [Applause.]

Now, what was the situation on this 27th day of August, 1862? McClellan beaten, driven back under the banks of the James River, Pope with the hastily gathered army of Banks and Sigel and McDowell, scarcely yet amalgamated, interposing between Washington and the victorious cohorts of the enemy. Jackson, the most dashing, enterprising, and brilliant of all the confederate leaders, was taken from the front of Richmond and hurled upon Pope's column. The Army of the Potomac divided, one half still at Fredericksburg or at Alexandria—thirty thousand under Franklin and the other half scattered between Alexandria and the Rappahannock. Lee with the rest of the body of the confederate armies hastening to throw himself upon Pope before he could be re-enforced by McClellan.

If there ever was a time, Mr. Chairman, when a man's country called to him; if there ever was a time when the life of this Republic hung trembling in the scales of destiny, it was when Fitz-John Porter joined the columns of Pope at Warrenton Junction on the 27th day of August, 1862. If there ever was a time when a military leader had need to feel the pulse of every subordinate officer beat in unison with his own; if there ever was a time when a military commander had need to feel that every general in his army would spring at his command as a charger in battle answers to the spur of his rider, that day was the 27th of August, 1862, when Jackson was already at Manassas with twenty-five thousand men between Pope and his base of supplies. That day Fitz-John Porter joined his new command. And what was his first act? What was his very first act? It was to write a sneering, depreciating dispatch to General Burnside at Falmouth, detracting not only from the military ability, but also from the personal character of his new commander. His very soul was impregnated with contempt for General Pope. He came under him reluctantly. He came regrettingly. He came under him insubordinately. His first act was to sit down and pen an insubordinate dispatch, which he sent by wire, to General Burnside.

The evening before—the evening of the 26th—Stonewall Jackson, marching more than thirty miles in a day, had thrown himself through Thoroughfare Gap and upon Pope's line of communication at Bristoe Station. At first Pope supposed it was a mere cavalry raid of a regiment or two, and he sent a regiment of infantry on flat cars to Bristoe Station. They found an army corps of infantry there, and came back. The next morning—the morning of the 27th—he sent "Fighting Joe Hooker," of Heintzelman's corps, with his division, to learn what the matter was. Hooker marched, as he always marched, with promptitude and with vigor [applause], and by noon was in the presence of the enemy at Bristoe Station. That afternoon along the banks of Kettle Run raged the battle for the Union. Hooker, with a single division, was pitted against an army corps of twenty-five thousand men, and he fought until three hundred of his number lay bleeding and dead on that field and until his men had not five rounds to the man in their cartridge-boxes. Hooker reported to Pope that his corps was out of ammunition, and then, at 8.30 on the night of the 27th of August, General Pope sent that order back to Fitz-John Porter at Warrenton to march at 1 o'clock in the morning and be at Bristoe Station at daylight. In order that there should be no mistake he repeated in that order, "It is important on all accounts that you should be here by daylight." He did not dare to say, when the woods were full of rebel soldiers—he did not dare to say, when Jackson's troopers were on every hand—"You must hasten to the front, because Hooker is out of ammunition," because if he had said that and his dispatch had fallen into the hands of Jackson's troopers Jackson would have turned on Hooker and in the morning Hooker's division would have ceased to be. It would have been annihilated then and there. Therefore, instead of saying to Porter in express words, "Hooker is out of ammunition," he repeats, "It is important on all accounts you should be here by daylight."

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I beg not to be interrupted.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will yield to a question.

Mr. BAYNE. Did General Pope himself know the fact that Hooker was out of ammunition?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think he did.

Mr. BAYNE. When he wrote that order?

Mr. CUTCHEON. He sent another dispatch to General Porter, he swears, at daylight in the morning, announcing that fact. He sent it by special messenger to General Porter.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to ask another question. Did not General Pope himself swear before the original court-martial he was apprised of the fact that Hooker's ammunition was exhausted at dark?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think not.

Mr. ROSECRANS. He did.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The order to Porter to advance was at 8.30, and Pope assigns that as the reason; and Heintzelman was put on the stand to verify it by swearing to it, that Hooker's division was practically out of ammunition.

Mr. BAYNE. I will show whether he was so informed or not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. When a general commanding an army sends an order to march at 1 o'clock at night it means something; and when he says further, "It is important on all accounts you should be here by daylight," it means something. When Porter received that order he had but one duty, and that was, the moment he received it, to put himself in the situation to obey it. There is a discretion vested in a corps commander out of the presence of the general commanding, but that discretion is ordinarily not to do less than he has been commanded, but to do more. It seems to me if I had stood there at Warrenton and had received an order to march at 1 o'clock at night I would have set myself at work at once to have fires built on the banks of the stream that there might be light for the crossing and to have cavalry distributed along the road to prevent intrusion. But what did he do?

Mr. ROSECRANS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROSECRANS. In order to impress this House fully with the value of your argument you insist that the animus of General Porter is exhibited by his failing to promptly move at 1 o'clock, the time specified in the order. Now will you state whether or not General Kearny did not receive an order to march (two hours after the order to which you refer in General Porter's case was received to move) at the blush of dawn and to be there as soon in the morning as possible?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I apprehend, sir, that that has no possible bearing whatever upon this question of General Porter's disobedience.

Mr. ROSECRANS. My desire is that the committee may have the opportunity of judging clearly as to the value of your argument in its bearing in this case. I therefore ask you to answer my question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I prefer not to be diverted from the course of my argument. I am commenting now, if the gentleman from California will permit me, upon one of these special orders and not the other.

Mr. ROSECRANS. You decline to answer my question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman can answer the question which he propounds himself when he chooses to take the floor upon this question.

Mr. ROSECRANS. No; now is the time for the House to receive this information. It is necessary to the strength of your argument that General Porter's should be an exceptional case.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I decline to yield to the gentleman from California. I prefer not to be interrupted at this time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the simple question with which we have to deal in this connection is whether General Porter did or did not obey the order. The first question is, did he receive the order; and secondly, did he obey it? The first question is, did he march? No, he did not. That he received the order is unquestioned. Was he justified in not obeying the order and not marching? The answer to that question depends upon circumstances. Two reasons have been alleged why he did not obey the order. The first reason given was that the night was very dark, and secondly that the roads were very bad.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have observed throughout the length and breadth of this case a very singular fact, that one rule is laid down for the Union officers, and another and altogether different rule for the officers of the confederate army. General Porter could not march, it is alleged, because the night was too dark; but the facts of the case are that Stonewall Jackson marched with his forces from Manassas Junction to Centreville after dark that very night, his whole corps having moved from one point to the other. Not only was that the case, but General Reno marched that night; not only that, but General Lee marched that night. But, no, this most brilliant leader of the Union armies, Fitz-John Porter, could not march, notwithstanding other forces could march, beecaus it was too dark. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have had myself some little experience in night marching. Scarcely ninety days after these very occurrences it was my fortune to be in charge of the rear guard of the Army of the Potomac on its movement from White Sulphur Springs to Bealeton Station. We had been stationed at or near the White Sulphur Springs, and remained until 9 o'clock at night, as black a night as ever fell upon the continent, and in the night we marched from White Sulphur Springs to Bealeton Station, and went into camp in the midst of a drenching rain at 1 o'clock in the morning. There may be, and I know there are, on this floor gentlemen who are familiar with the movement of the army which took place from Bean Station in Tennessee to Blain's Cross-Roads during the winter of 1863. On as black a night as ever lowered over an army, the Twenty-third and the Ninth Army Corps fell back from Bean Station to Blain's Cross-Roads, marching through the midst of the darkness and crossing several deep fords. When we came to cross Flint Creek, we found that the bridges were gone, and fires were built on either bank of the river to light the army across in its movements. Did Fitz-John Porter make any effort to move his force in obedience to the order he received? Did he have fires built to light the fords, to enable him to cross the streams in his front? Did he make any effort whatever in this direction? None whatever. He built no fires; he sent no guides to point out the roads; but he remained passive until it was too late. He calls together Sykes and Morell and Griffin and the rest of his officers to confer with them upon the subject. "Well," says Sykes, "it is a very dark night." Says Morell, "I guess there are wagons in the road." "Very well," says Porter, "then we will postpone the movement until 3 o'clock. I shall not order the march at 1 in obedience to the orders, but I will wait until 3." Now, the board of review say that there is proof taken to demonstrate that it was absolutely and physically impossible for General Porter to march that night. I say it is not true. It is true that the testimony upon this point is conflicting. Some of the witnesses say it was a starlight night, but partly clouded over by midnight, and commenced to rain. But John Pope slept at Bristoe Station that night with nothing but his blanket to protect him from the rain.

There was not enough rain to lay the dust, because the next day when General Ricketts fell back from Thoroughfare Gap we are told his troops were smothered with the dust. He could have marched. Porter ought to have marched. He was informed it was important on all accounts he should march. And he did not march.

Now, I propose to concede that if this had been away from the presence of the enemy or in time of peace, there would have been vested in a corps commander, under such circumstances, a discretion to vary the order to a certain extent. But under these circumstances, in the very presence of the enemy, when he knew Hooker was fighting an unequal fight at Bristoe; when he knew that Pope's communications were interrupted with his base of supplies; when he knew a general engagement was imminent on the morrow, it was his duty rather to have exceeded than to have fallen short of the command.

But we are told there were wagons on the road. Why, sir, Fitz-John Porter's own witness, Captain Fifield, one of his own aids, swears that with one hundred and fifty men he could have cleared the road; and further than that, there is evidence by Colonel Clary, the chief quartermaster, that from 1 o'clock till daylight there were hardly any wagons on the road; that they were not on the road to exceed three miles. At all events, McDowell's wagons were going into park in rear of Warrenton and Hooker's wagons were going into park. If Fitz-John Porter had marched according to orders the road would have been cleared. He saw fit to wait till daylight. At daylight Hooker's and McDowell's wagons were on the road, and the road was obstructed to some extent. But if Porter had marched according to the order the wagons would not have been there.

But, Mr. Chairman, if this act had been an isolated act, unconnected with the manifest animus of General Porter, unconnected with the subsequent events which occurred on the 29th, it would have been much less significant, and perhaps the position taken by one of the honorable gentlemen yesterday that he would have been deserving scarcely more than a verbal reprimand might have some place; but it was not an isolated instance; it was not disconnected with an animus as against Pope. We must interpret this act in the light of all his proceedings. When Capt. Drake De Kay brought him the order to move at 1 o'clock, what was his conduct? Did he send for his orderlies? Did he send for his cavalry and direct them to mount and ride? No. He said, "We will turn in and march at 3 o'clock in the morning;" but, according to Sykes's testimony, as a matter of fact he did not get on the road till broad daylight.

I pass on now to speak of the events of the 29th; and the events of the 29th constitute the gravamen of this whole charge. There is alleged disobedience of three several and consecutive orders. But there is one order that is not counted upon in the charges, and yet in the light of which all the subsequent orders are to be interpreted. At half past 5 o'clock on the morning of the 29th August General Porter received the following order:

NEAR BULL RUN, August 29, 1862—3 a. m.

I read from page 145 of the proceedings of the court-martial—

Major-General PORTER:

GENERAL: McDowell has intercepted the retreat of Jackson—

That is, got between him and Thoroughfare Gap—

Sigel is immediately on the right of McDowell. Kearny and Hooker marched to attack the enemy's rear at early dawn. Major-General Pope directs you to move upon Centreville at the first dawn of day with your whole command, leaving your trains to follow. It is very important that you should be here at a very early hour in the morning. A severe engagement is likely to take place and your presence is necessary.

Mr. CALKINS. At what time did Porter receive that order?

Mr. CUTCHEON. He received that order at 5.30 in the morning, but he did not march to Centreville because it was countermanded; but this order is significant for the information it gives that a general engagement was imminent and it was exceedingly important that Porter should march with promptitude.

General Porter put his command in motion; he got on the road at half past 7. How did he occupy himself in the mean time? Did he inform General Pope of his circumstances? Did he inform him of his disposition to comply with the order, or, in view of the urgency, say, "With my whole command I will move immediately?" No, sir. At 6 o'clock we find him in his tent writing one of his sneering, fault-finding, insubordinate dispatches to General Burnside. We find him occupying his time, when he should have been on the road, writing these insubordinate dispatches.

A MEMBER. Was that order sent to General Porter?

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was sent and received and he commenced his march in pursuance of it. When the head of his column was nearing Bull Run, and had nearly reached Blackburn's Ford, and when the head of General Morell's division reached Manassas Junction, another order overtook him from his commanding officer.

Mr. HORR. This is all on the morning of the 29th?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, sir.

This second order will be found on page 29 of the proceedings of the court-martial. It is as follows:

Push forward with your corps and King's division, which you will take with you, upon Gainesville. I am following the enemy down the Warrenton turnpike. Be expeditious, or we will lose much.

The first order in the morning was of the same urgent character, saying that a general engagement was imminent and that he was needed early in the morning. The second order is to "push forward;" it did not say "drag along," it did not say "hobble along;" it said "push forward with your corps and King's division upon Gainesville, and be expeditious."

When that order reached General Porter he was at Manassas Junction, where the head of Morell's division then rested. Morell put the head of his column up the Gainesville road, which branches immediately at Manassas Junction. Porter ought to have been upon the road at 9 o'clock, but we have no evidence, so far as I have been able to discover, in the record that he started precisely at that or any other hour, although he says he moved immediately.

Three miles from Manassas Junction is Dawkin's Branch. We do not know exactly at what time the head of Porter's column, Morell in advance and Sykes following, reached Dawkin's Branch, but it seems to me that under such an urgent order as this an hour ought to have been at least sufficient to have gone three miles over a good marching road. If an hour was the time, then he reached Dawkin's Branch at 10.30 at the latest.

Up to this hour General McDowell had assumed no command over General Porter. McDowell was in the rear with King's division; Ricketts's division, having fallen back during the night, lay between Manassas Junction and Bristoe Station, and were ordered to follow King.

As Morell's division descended the declivity of the hill to Dawkin's Branch, opposite Hampton Cole house hill, they met a single mounted horseman, a Union soldier. They halted him and asked him where he was from. He said he was from Gainesville direct. They asked him what news there was from the front. He said that the enemy's skirmishers to the number of about four hundred had entered Gainesville. This man had just come over the very road over which Porter was to march—had just come over the whole length of it. The road was then clear; a single unattended horseman had come over it from end to end unmolested. Gainesville was Porter's objective point, and all he had to do was simply to march right on. When they reached the flat below Dawkin's Branch they got a single shot from somebody in the woods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope unanimous consent will be given to the gentleman to proceed with his argument. I will ask the gentleman how much more time he wants?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will finish as expeditiously as possible; I will abbreviate as much as possible.

Mr. CALKINS. Do not abbreviate too much.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. COSGROVE. I object to an unlimited extension.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state what additional time he desires?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will try, if required, to close in fifteen minutes.

Mr. LONG. Say half an hour.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would prefer to have thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks thirty minutes' additional time. Is there objection?

Mr. HENLEY. I do not know how many members desire to speak on this question. Of course if there is abundance of time during the day there will be no objection. How much time has the gentleman already had?

The CHAIRMAN. He has had one hour.

Mr. HENLEY. I think that is enough; I object.

Mr. CUTCHEON. As one of the members of the minority of the committee, making the minority report, I desire to read a portion of the testimony that forms the basis of that report. As this whole day is to be devoted to this subject, I desire to have thirty minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there is no objection to the gentleman having fifteen minutes more.

Mr. HENLEY. I withdraw the objection. I do not wish myself to speak on the subject, but there are others who desire to speak.

Mr. BAYNE. I understand that the objection to allowing thirty minutes more to the gentleman is withdrawn. I hope no objection will be made, especially as the gentleman now on the floor is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and one of the two who signed the views of the minority. I hope no objection will be made to his having thirty minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, with the leave of the gentleman, I desire to ask him one question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman state in what consisted the violation of the joint order?

Mr. CALKINS. One moment at this point. I do not want the continuity of the argument of the gentleman spoiled. He is now at Dawkin's Branch, and the joint order does not come in there.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes; it comes in right there.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We are now at Dawkin's Branch, at 10.30 in the morning, with a single horseman riding unattended over the road from Gainesville. Then a single shot was heard from the front. The skirmishers were deployed, pushed up to the woods, and a little desultory skirmishing ensued.

How the time from half past 10 to 12 o'clock was employed we do not know; but then was the time of all times, it seems to me, the column should have been pushed forward to occupy Hampton Cole house hill, which was in a commanding position.

The evidence in this case is conclusive that at that time there was no enemy in front except Rosser's regiment of cavalry, belonging to Stuart's division. That is the conclusive evidence in the case. But no effort was made to push forward. At about half past 11 o'clock McDowell comes to the front, having before been back in the rear with King's division, bringing with him what is known as the joint order to Generals Porter and McDowell, a duplicate of which Porter himself had just before received. The joint order in no way varies the separate order which Porter had before received. It was simply to continue their march. McDowell rode to the head. He had some conference with General Porter. They rode off to the right into the woods. About a third of a mile or perhaps a quarter of a mile to the right was the Manassas Gap Railroad. Beyond the railroad was a cleared cornfield; beyond that an undergrowth of pines. They rode out there. By that time the skirmishers had advanced to the edge of the woods. They came back or part way back. They had some further conference. A cloud of dust was seen rising beyond the tops of the trees in the direction of the Warrenton pike. McDowell swears that Porter, standing there upon the crest of the hill, pointing with his hand above the tops of the trees, said: "McDowell, we cannot go in there anywhere without having a fight." Then McDowell made the reply referred to yesterday by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], "I understand that is what we are here for."

But what was the fact of the case as testified by General Rosser, who was then upon the ground, who was then commanding a regiment of General Stuart's cavalry? General Rosser, as will be found on page 1073 of the proceedings of the board of review, swears that that dust was made by his men attaching brush cut from the trees to the saddles of their horses and galloping up and down the road for four or five hours to raise a dust. That was the enemy that stopped General Porter's corps of ten thousand men and thirty-six pieces of artillery. [Applause.]

The very strategic position of that day, the key of that whole military situation, was Hampton Cole hill and Monroe hill, a third of a mile beyond, which lay directly in General Porter's front. All that he had to do was to move on. At that hour only Rosser was there, and once in position on the Cole hill or the Monroe hill his batteries could sweep the entire front.

But we are told that even then Longstreet was arriving with his advance. General Buford tells us that on that morning, at 9 o'clock, seventeen regiments of infantry passed through Gainesville on the pike to Groveton where the battle was then raging. If they were there then, they passed directly down the pike to the front of the Union troops, which were there then confronting Jackson. They never turned off from that pike.

But, Mr. Chairman, for one I do not believe in the faithfulness of that report. I think that Buford was mistaken as to the hour. Why do I believe it? We all know how difficult it is, after the lapse of time, to fix exact dates, as to the time of day, between sunrise and sundown. We can remember the dawning light; we can remember the gray of the morning; we can remember when the sun begins to set and shines with oblique rays in our eyes; but in that great arc between there is nothing to mark the status of the hour. We know that at 10 o'clock on that morning General O. M. Poe (now in this city) with his brigade of Kearny's division turned Jackson's left and fell upon his trains. We know that Stuart was there with his cavalry and beat Poe back. We know that, after beating Poe back, Stuart moved with his cavalry five miles to a point a mile and a half beyond Gainesville at Haymarket; that there he met Longstreet and Lee at the head of Longstreet's column hastening to the battle-ground at Groveton; and Rosser tells us that they came in marching very hurriedly and straggling very badly. And we can well believe it; for Longstreet was one of those fellows that could march on a dark night, and he had fought half the night and marched a part of the rest. We know that after Stuart met Longstreet at Haymarket he passed his whole cavalry division through that column, which had to halt while he passed. We know that then he came back by Gainesville and went out on the Manassas road, where he discovered the approach of Porter from Manassas Junction; and we know that he could not have passed from Jackson's left at Sudley Springs to Haymarket, had that conference with Lee and Longstreet, passed his division through, and got back again in anything less than three hours. If he did, then he did better marching than any that was done on the Union side during those three days.

We are able, therefore, to fix almost to an absolute certainty the hour of Longstreet's arrival. The head of his column arrived upon that field at about 12 o'clock noon; and General Lee, who knew something about armies and tactics, said that it took him two hours and a half to deploy; and every man who has been upon a battlefield knows that twenty-five thousand men marching rapidly and straggling badly can not deploy in less than two hours and a half.

It was then half past 2 o'clock before Longstreet's forces were in line. McDowell left Porter at Dawkin's Branch about 12 o'clock noon. McDowell's last words to Porter were, as they came back from their little excursion across the railroad, "Porter, you put your corps in there, and I will go to the right and connect with Reynolds." Did he put his corps in there? Did he attempt to put his corps in there? Did he make even the feeblest attempt to put his corps in there? I will tell you how much of an attempt he made. He deployed Griffin's brigade and Barnes's brigade; he brought up one battery on the right and planted it on a crest, half a mile to the rear of the branch, and Waterman's battery in an open field on the left of the road, half a mile from the branch. He then ordered Morell to proceed to the right. Morell placed himself at the head of his division and moved on to the right through undergrowth. They came to the railroad, a distance of one-third of a mile. They crossed the cornfield beyond, a distance of a quarter of a mile. They entered a slight growth of pines which they there found, mere pine brush, and Griffin, who commanded the head brigade, says that it was reported to him they could not get through. He was asked if he went to the front to examine or reconnoiter. He said, "No." Porter was two miles and a half to the rear, back of Bethlehem church. Think of it! This most magnificent corps in the American Army, Sykes's regulars and Porter's volunteers equal to regulars, with thirty-six pieces of cannon, stopped in making a connection with their comrades in arms by a little undergrowth of pine bush! Did you ever hear the like of it? I remember when we went into the battle of the Wilderness, on the 6th day of May, 1864, we cut a road through and took our artillery in; and yet here Griffin never went to the head of his brigade, Morell never went to the head of his division, and Porter had gone back from the head of his corps and was not on that field.

A MEMBER. He was lying off in the shade.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes; he was lying in the shade of the trees back at Bethlehem church. Why, Mr. Chairman, it seems as though the very spirit of Bethlehem itself had fallen upon that corps and the chorus sung by the angels nineteen hundred years ago, "Peace on earth," good will to the men on the other side, had fallen upon it. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

And there, sir, that corps lay all that long afternoon. McDowell, with King, had gone to the right on the Sudley road, had reached the Warrenton pike at 4.30, and at 5.30 King, who had lain in the rear of Porter at 12 o'clock, was hurling his battalions on the enemy on the Warrenton pike, and being crushed by the very divisions which had been withdrawn from Porter's front in order to do it. And this is the Chevalier Bayard of the American Army. This is the man who, at Gaines's Mill, on the Chickahominy, on that bloody 27th of June, stood like a rock and hurled back the armies of the enemy. I ask you, gentlemen—I ask you, Mr. Chairman—if George B. McClellan had sat in the saddle instead of General Pope that afternoon, and had sent those orders to Fitz-John Porter to fall upon the enemy, whether that sword that blazed at Gaines's Mill and which flashed in the sun of Malvern would not have been again drawn, and the old Fifth Corps would not have been again marched to victory and glory under their favorite leader? [Applause on the Republican side.] But Pope was in command, and not McClellan.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not wish to interrupt my friend, but I would like him to say how Porter violated the joint order. It was an instruction to push on to Gainesville; "push forward on Gainesville, and if by departing from this order any advantages may be gained you are at liberty to take them." That was the directory part of the joint order, and what the gentleman has been arguing, it seems to me, does not come at all within the spirit or the letter of the joint order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There are two charges here: first disobedience of orders, and second misbehavior in the presence of the enemy. Now, General McDowell swears that his orders which he gave to Porter were not in contravention, but in furtherance of the joint order. He says, when he said, "Put your corps in there," he meant he should put the corps in there then, while he went to the right. It was his duty to push forward on Gainesville according to the spirit and letter of that order, and without any order, as he was there on the very battlefield. Colonel Marshall, who commanded his skirmishers, swears that from the opposite slope he could look away to the right, and he could see the wavering, fluctuating, battling lines of the Union and rebel armies.

Even their victorious cheers, the rebel yells, came across the intervening space to his ears then and there. The thunder of Pope's guns was in his ears all the afternoon and the musketry was crashing all that time, although he did not hear it, from 11 o'clock until 9 o'clock at night, as the testimony shows. General Lee, in his official report of the engagement (and I shall ask leave to print that report in my remarks), says that the battle raged all that time, that it was raging for long hours. Why, Porter could not put his command in because he did not get his order to attack until after half past 5, but King, Sigel, and Kearny, and the rest of the Union forces could fight there until 9 o'clock, as the testimony shows, if we can believe the testimony of General Lee, and I presume we can in that respect.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I call your attention to the fact that the confederate troops could do, according to what we are required to believe here, what the Union troops were utterly unable to accomplish. We find that Longstreet could march, with Hood and Kemper and the rest of his forces, in the dark, but that Porter could not. At the same time we find that King could go to the rear, march his command five miles to the right, and hurl his division upon the enemy in the evening and participate in the battle. Another thing; it is said the ground in General Porter's front was so broken that Porter could not maneuver his forces. That is probably so. He could not maneuver his forces, but the very next afternoon Longstreet, with his serried battalions, rushed down across the same ground and bore back the Union lines three-quarters of a mile, capturing one of our batteries.

The report of Lee and his officers, before referred to, is as follows:

Soon after, General Stuart reported the approach of a large force from the direction of Bristoe Station, threatening Longstreet's right.

The brigades under General Wilcox were sent to re-enforce General Jones, but no serious attack was made, and after firing a few shots the enemy withdrew.

While this demonstration was being made on our right a large force advanced to assail the left of Jackson's position, occupied by the division of A. P. Hill. The attack was received by his troops with their accustomed steadiness, and the battle raged with great fury. The enemy were repeatedly repulsed, but again pressed on the attack with fresh troops. Once he succeeded in penetrating an interval between General Gregg's brigade on the extreme left and that of General Thomas, but were quickly driven back with great slaughter by the Fourteenth South Carolina Regiment, then in reserve, and the Forty-ninth Georgia, of Thomas's brigade. The contest was close and obstinate; the combatants sometimes delivered their fire at ten paces.

General Gregg, who was most exposed, was re-enforced by Hays's brigade, under General Forno, and successfully and gallantly resisted the attack of the enemy until, the ammunition of his brigade being exhausted and all its field officers but two killed or wounded, it was relieved after several hours of severe fighting by Early's brigade and the Eighth Louisiana Regiment.

* * * * * * *

While the battle was raging on Jackson's left General Longstreet ordered Hood and Evans to advance; but before the order could be obeyed Hood was himself attacked and his command at once became warmly engaged.

General Wilcox was recalled from the right and ordered to advance on Hood's left, and one of Kemper's brigades, under Colonel Hunton, moved forward on his right. The enemy was repulsed by Hood after a severe contest and fell back, closely followed by our troops.

The battle continued until 9 p. m. * * * The darkness of the night put a stop to the engagement.

[From the official report of General James Longstreet, October 10, 1862.]

At a late hour in the day Major-General Stuart reported the approach of the enemy (Porter) in heavy columns against my extreme right.

I withdrew General Wilcox, with his three brigades, from the left, and placed his command in position to support Jones in case of an attack on my right. After some few shots the enemy withdrew his forces, moving them around toward his front, and about 4 o'clock in the afternoon began to press forward against Jackson's position. Wilcox's brigades were moved back to their former position, and Hood's two brigades, supported by Evans, were quickly pressed forward to the attack. At the same time Wilcox's three brigades (withdrawn from Porter's front) made a like advance, as also Hunton's brigade, of Kemper's command.

[From Major-General Stuart's official report, dated February 23, 1863.—Board of officers, page 529.]

* * * Friday, August 29.—As General Stuart rode forward toward Groveton, about 10 a. m., he found that the enemy's sharpshooters had penetrated the woods, going toward the ambulances and trains.

This was Poe's brigade. Now follows the account of the sharp encounter on Jackson's extreme left, near Sudley, the death of Major Patrick, and the repulse of Poe, and then continues:

Having ordered Captain Pelham to report to General Jackson, General Stuart went toward Haymarket to establish communication with Generals Lee and Longstreet. * * * General Stuart met Generals Lee and Longstreet on the road between Haymarket and Gainesville, and informed them of what had happened and the situation of General Jackson's forces and those of the enemy.

General Lee inquired for some way to the Sudley road. General Stuart showed him that the best route for them was by the turnpike, which they took, and General Stuart moved to General Longstreet's right flank.

This must have been past noon, and Longstreet still three miles from the field.

[From General Stuart's second report, dated February 28, 1863.—Board of officers, page 531.]

I met with the head of Longstreet's column between Haymarket and Gainesville, and there communicated to the commanding general [Lee] General Jackson's position and that of the enemy.

I then passed the cavalry (a whole division) through the column, so as to place it on Longstreet's right flank, and advanced directly toward Manassas, while the column kept directly down the pike to join General Jackson's right. * * * General Robertson, who, with his command, was sent to reconnoiter farther down the road toward Manassas, reported the enemy [Porter] in his front. Upon repairing to that front I found Rosser's regiment was engaged with the enemy to the left of the road, and Robertson's vedettes had found the enemy approaching from the direction of Bristoe Station toward Sudley. * * * I waited his approach long enough to ascertain that there was at least an army corps [Porter's], at the same time keeping detachments of cavalry dragging brush down the road from the direction of Gainesville, so as to deceive the enemy—

A ruse which Porter's report shows was successful—and notified the commanding general, then opposite me on the turnpike, that Longstreet's flank and rear were seriously threatened, and of the importance to us of the ridge I then held.

Immediately upon receipt of that intelligence Jenkins's, Kemper's, and D. R. Jones's brigades and several pieces of artillery were ordered to me by General Longstreet, and, being placed in position fronting Bristoe, awaited the enemy's advance.

After exchanging a few shots with rifled pieces this corps withdrew toward Manassas, leaving artillery and support to hold the position till night.

This shows how Porter "saved" the Union army that day.

Longstreet's command was coming in in a very forced and disorderly march from the direction of Thoroughfare Gap, moving rapidly and straggling badly.

My position was taken up with reference to protecting them from a gun of the enemy who were in my front—

Porter.

When Stuart joined me he notified me that the enemy were moving on our right flank, and ordered me to move my command up and down the dusty road and to drag brush, and thus create a heavy dust, as though troops were in motion. I kept this up at least four or five hours.

I beg to say, Mr. Chairman, by way of conclusion, that the testimony in this case shows conclusively the following facts to be true:

First. That up to noon there was nothing but one cavalry regiment in Porter's front. (I know there is some testimony to the contrary; I know that Longstreet testifies to the contrary; that Lee was of the opinion that Longstreet came up as early as 10 o'clock and his forces were deployed in line of battle by noon, but, as I have shown, this must be an error.)

Second. That Longstreet's men did not begin to arrive on the field until the afternoon and were then massed upon the Warrenton pike, Hood in advance, with Kemper and Wilcox in support.

Third. That except the troops that went directly down the pike, Longstreet's lines did not advance beyond Pageland lane until after 4 o'clock p. m. This part of the field was clear, and Porter could have occupied it and formed the junction on the right. There was nothing to prevent him from forming his troops in obedience to his orders. How do I know it to be true? Mr. Monroe lives upon the hill now, was living there then, and had lived there for years before the battle. He testifies that until 4 o'clock that afternoon no troops excepting a line of skirmishers advanced to the eastward of his house, and that house was upon the summit of Monroe hill, the key to the whole position. Whatever doubt, Mr. Chairman, there may be about the testimony of others, whatever mistake may have been made—Longstreet may be mistaken about hours and places—here is a man living upon the very spot, who was at home all of the afternoon, who swears that no line of battle passed to the eastward of his house until 4 o'clock that afternoon. Now I ask gentlemen to consider this testimony. Weigh it for what it is worth. Suppose that any of you, living amid the quiet walks of private life, saw for the first time the march of a line of battle, heard for the first time the roar of the artillery and the crash of the musketry, do you believe it would be possible for you to forget the place or the hour or the circumstances surrounding such a scene? It is a scene that would have impressed itself so indelibly upon the memory that you could never have forgotten it.

Again, I say, fourth, that Porter's command, so far from saving the Union army that day, were supposed by every confederate general to have gone back to Manassas and to have gone to the right, and were no longer taken into account. I appeal to the official report of General Longstreet in confirmation of this assertion. He says in that report: "The enemy withdrew his forces at 4 o'clock." This is also demonstrated by the testimony of Griffin, B. F. Smith, of Morell, and others that in the middle of the afternoon Porter withdrew all of his forces except only a single battery with a single line of infantry in support, a mile and a half to Bethlehem church, and remained there until the time of this 4.30 order, when he was ordered back again.

Then what did they do? Then they go back again and Porter sends up this order to attack. You will find it in the record:

General MORELL: I wish you to push up two regiments, supported by two others, preceded by skirmishers, the regiments at intervals of two hundred yards, and attack the party with the section of artillery opposed to you. The battle looks well on our right, and the enemy are said to be retiring up the pike. Give the enemy a good shelling when our troops advance.

F. J. PORTER.

That was just before dusk. What did General Porter understand then? He understood that in his front there was a party of the enemy with a section of the artillery, and he was to order up four regiments to attack it. And this was the compliance he was fain to make to the order of General Pope to attack the enemy's flank!

Fifth. That if Porter had advanced and attacked, or even made a vigorous demonstration, it would have rendered impossible the crushing concentration on our troops on our right (the enemy's left) which came near proving a disaster, and made possible the disaster of the next day.

Sixth. That there was a fierce battle on the 29th, which (according to Lee) "raged" till 9 o'clock p. m. Where was Porter then? Where was the hero of Gaines's Mill and Malvern? Reclining under a tree, two and a half miles from the front of his column. The officer who brought the dispatch says he lay there with his head resting on his hand. He handed him the order, and when he read it he never rose. He seemed not at all interested in it. And General Sykes, the commander of his principal division, swears that he was present when the order was delivered to Porter, but Porter never told him what the order was; he never disclosed to him its contents; he never read it to him; and he did not know Porter was ordered by that order, received while the guns were thundering in his ears, to attack the enemy's flank. The commander of his principal division being with him when he read the order, he never disclosed to him the order to attack, and General Sykes went into camp that night, put out his pickets, and never knew that General Porter had received an order to attack the enemy. Where was the finest corps of the Army of the Potomac? Gone into camp for the night near Bethlehem church.

Fitz-John Porter had not the poor excuse of a coward, for he had shown on many fields that he was a brave man. He had not the better excuse of ignorance, for he was a trained soldier, trained at his county's expense. He had not the excuse of not knowing the will of his commander, for his orders were explicit; and besides, the thunder of the cannon and the sound of the victorious rebel yell summoned him to the field of duty.

The nine able generals who tried him, with all the essential facts before them, said there could be but one verdict. Impartial history will declare the same.

Already clemency has been exercised. His disabilities have been removed. He stands to-day a free American citizen, eligible to any office in the gift of the people or of the Government. Mercy to him is cruelty to thousands.

Admiral Byng, of the English navy, more than a century ago, disobeyed the order to take his ship into action in the Mediterranean. Admiral Byng was tried, convicted, and shot to death for that disobedience, and from that day to this no English officer has refused to take his ship into action when he has been commanded by his superior. [Applause.]

Were Garfield alive this bill would not be here now. It never could receive his signature, as we know from the letter he wrote in the spring of 1880 with this report before him. But Garfield is dead, and this bill is here.

I expect this bill will pass, for with the aid of our late opponents in arms whom Porter so considerately spared that day you have the power to pass it. On the committee every gentleman on that side of the House, the moment it was read at the first informal meeting of the committee, voted in its favor.

But I here protest! In the name of the brave men who fell mangled and dying on that bloody field on that August evening, crushed by the very troops that Porter should have been engaging, I protest!

In the name of their widows and orphans, doomed to long years of woe and struggle by the insubordination of this man, I protest!

In the name of the wronged and betrayed country which had sent Pope to the field and clothed him with her own majesty and power, and which through him had the right to demand and receive the most perfect obedience and most transcendent effort to protect her and her soldiers, I protest.

I honor the gentleman from New York for his devotion to his lifelong friend. But this is the hour that should be given to law and justice, and not to sympathy or tears, except tears for those brave men who perished through his insubordination. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SLOCUM. I understood the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] to say that if General Garfield were living this bill would not be here. If the gentleman will refer to House report No. 144, of the second session of the Forty-third Congress, he will find that James A. Garfield is the father of this bill. [Applause.] Send for your report. This bill is brought here by James A. Garfield himself, and the official records of Congress show it.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] a question: whether he refers to the commission which General Garfield moved.

Mr. SLOCUM. I say this: I say that James A. Garfield introduced into this House a resolution authorizing this board [cries on the Republican side of "Ah!" "Ah!" and laughter], and the board was appointed pursuant to his suggestion. And if he is going to refuse to recognize his own bantling or his friends are, then let them stand up here and say so.

Mr. CALKINS. I want the gentleman to understand that he does not aid his bill by traducing General Garfield.

Mr. SLOCUM. I do not traduce General Garfield at all. I say that he suggested that this investigation should be made.

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I think this is a fitting addendum to the speech which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] made yesterday.

Mr. CALKINS. Yes, very fitting.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In reply to my honorable friend from New York, I beg to read the following opinion of President Garfield, written in February, 1880, and published as an appendix to the work on the second battle of Bull Run by General J. D. Cox:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1880.

MY DEAR COX: In our twenty-five years of acquaintance and friendship you have never done a greater service to the truth or given me so valuable a help as in your letter of the 14th instant, which I have just received. I have been so stung by the decision of the Schofield board that it is very hard to trust my own mind to speak of it as it appeared to me. I have made a strong effort to separate myself from the case, and to look at it intellectually, as though it related only to the pieces on a chess-board, and not to living men, or men who had ever lived, and all my best efforts have brought me out precisely to the conclusions of your letter.

Still, I had not yet made, in the light of the new testimony, a careful strategic study of the field and map as you have done. But how curious it is that what you say now, with the new maps before you, is the exact picture of the field, and Porter's conduct upon it, which glowed in strong colors in my mind, and the mind of the court-martial, seventeen years ago.

With kindest regards, I am, as ever, yours,

J. A. GARFIELD.

[Great applause on the Republicann side.]

Mr. SLOCUM. I am no defender of James A. Garfield.

Mr. CALKINS. We know that.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. He does not need it from you.

Mr. SLOCUM. I am no defender of General Grant.

Mr. CALKINS. We know that, too.

Mr. SLOCUM. For the first time in my life I stand here on this floor and hear Republicans attack the military reputation of General Grant.

Mr. CALKINS. Nobody does that.

Mr. SLOCUM. You have done it.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Nobody has done it.

Mr. SLOCUM. The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. CUTCHEON] has done it in the most violent manner.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, no. I beg to say in correction of the gentleman that no man, living or dead, in this world or any other, holds

General Grant's military ability in higher estimation than I do. I simply asked how it were possible that we might explain his sudden conversion three years after the filing of the report of the Schofield board.

Mr. SLOCUM. If I understood the gentleman's language correctly it was an impeachment of General Grant's integrity or his military ability, one or the other. Let the record speak for itself. The point I make is that in the Forty-third Congress General Garfield introduced a resolution into this House asking for the appointment of a board to investigate this case. The board was appointed——

Mr. REED. Was it appointed under that resolution?

Mr. SLOCUM. No, it was not; but in pursuance of it.

Mr. REED. In pursuance of a resolution that did not pass?

Mr. SLOCUM. The resolution did not pass, but General Garfield was the father of the whole movement.

Mr. REED. How could the board be appointed in pursuance of a resolution that never passed the House?

Mr. SLOCUM. There is no use talking about that.

Mr. REED. Then why are you talking about it?

Mr. SLOCUM. General Garfield introduced the resolution into this House, and it is on the record to-day, asking that just such a board——

Mr. REED. Ah! just such a board.

Mr. SLOCUM. That just such a board should be organized by the President to make a report to Congress. What I say is that the friends of Garfield should either accept that report or repudiate the whole thing.

Mr. CALKINS. On the contrary, we had such confidence in his judgment upon the court-martial that we had no doubt this commission would sustain it, as it would have done had it been properly constituted and had brought all the witnesses before it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I was about to say, in reply to the remark of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. SLOCUM], that General Garfield said that in view of the perpetual harping upon the idea that injustice had been done Fitz-John Porter it was in the nature of an aspersion upon his own conduct and character and judgment as a member of the court-martial. It was with a view that the whole matter might be thoroughly and fairly investigated that he was favorable to that investigation. He submitted that resolution, not as expressing any judgment, not as committing himself to the report of the board, only for the purpose of simply giving General Porter a fair chance; simply as an act of magnanimity on the part of General Garfield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENLEAF. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words upon the subject under consideration, and but a few words; for, as I understand the subject, the main questions involved in this discussion can be briefly stated, and a plain, business-like argument in support of the bill compressed into small compass.

After all that has been said, and so well said, upon both sides of the question, as I comprehend the situation the merits of the whole case as between General Porter and General Pope turn upon two simple, yet all-important historical facts—facts about which, in the light of our present knowledge of the events of the late war in my judgment, there should no longer remain a reasonable doubt, viz:

First. Did General Porter, or did he not, obey with reasonable promptness and zeal this now-famous order of General Pope, issued from his "headquarters in the saddle," at Bristoe Station, Va., at 6.30 p. m., August 27, 1862:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Bristoe Station, August 27, 1862—6.30 p. m.

GENERAL: The major-general commanding directs that you start at 1 o'clock to-night and come forward with your whole corps, or such part of it as is with you, so as to be here by daylight to-morrow morning. Hooker has had a very severe action with the enemy, with a loss of about three hundred killed and wounded. The enemy has been driven back, but is retiring along the railroad. We must drive him from Manassas and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is. If Morell has not joined you, send word to him to push forward immediately; also send word to Banks to hurry forward with all speed to take your place at Warrenton Junction. It is necessary on all accounts that you should be here by daylight. I send an officer with this dispatch who will conduct you to this place. Be sure to send word to Banks, who is on the road from Fayetteville, probably in the direction of Bealeton. Say to Banks, also, that he had best run back the railroad trains to this side of Cedar Run. If he is not with you, write him to that effect.

By command of Major-General Pope.

GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Colonel and Chief of Staff.

Maj. Gen. F. J. PORTER,
Warrenton Junction.

P. S. If Banks is not at Warrenton Junction, leave a regiment of infantry and two pieces of artillery as a guard till he comes up, with instructions to follow you immediately. If Banks is not at the junction, instruct Colonel Clary to run the trains back to this side of Cedar Run and post a regiment and section of artillery with it.

By command of Major-General Pope.

GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Colonel and Chief of Staff.

Secondly. Did General Porter, or did he not, find himself confronted by a greatly superior force, under Generals Lee and Longstreet, at the very moment he received Pope's 4.30 p. m. order of August 29, to strike Jackson's right flank and seek to get into his rear, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD,
August 29, 1862—4.30 p. m.

Your line of march brings you in on the enemy's right flank. I desire you to push forward into action at once on the enemy's flank, and, if possible, on his rear, keeping your right in communication with General Reynolds. The enemy is massed in the woods in front of us, but can be shelled out as soon as you engage their flank. Keep heavy reserves and use your batteries, keeping well closed to your right all the time. In case you are obliged to fall back, do so to your right and rear, so as to keep you in close communication with the right wing.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

Major-General PORTER.

Now, if it be a fact that General Porter did seek to obey with reasonable promptness and zeal the 6.30 p. m. order of August 27, then it is evident that the finding of the court-martial as to the alleged disobedience of that order, whether intended as such or not, was an unmitigated outrage on General Porter. And then again, if it be true, as I insist it is, that, probably, without General Pope even suspecting the fact, yet within the positive knowledge of Porter and other Union officers with him, Longstreet was actually in his front with a greatly superior force on the afternoon of August 29, then it inevitably follows that the finding of the court as to the alleged disobedience of the 4.30 p. m. order of that day was not only not warranted by the facts, but was, on the contrary, a most unjust and cruel verdict against a gallant soldier and innocent man.

My worthy colleague [Mr. SLOCUM], the distinguished gentleman and soldier from New York, who has charge of this bill, while making a most able and eloquent argument in support of the bill yesterday afternoon, improved the occasion to reflect somewhat severely upon the methods pursued in making the charges against General Porter on which he was tried, and also upon the proceedings of the court on those charges; and I will say that in the main I think those reflections just and to the point.

But to be perfectly fair to all parties in interest, suppose we concede that at the time General Pope preferred his charges against General Porter he was ignorant of the fact that the night was very dark, and that it was about 10 o'clock before his 6.30 p. m. order of August 27 was delivered to General Porter; and that he was also ignorant of the fact that the only available road between Warrenton Junction and Bristoe Station was at the time so obstructed by other troops, with from 2,000 to 3,000 army wagons, artillery included—was so narrow and crooked and filled with stumps, so bounded by wood and swamp, so cut up by a dozen running streams and railroad tracks and moving railroad trains, as to make it a physical impossibility for Porter to obey the order to reach Bristoe Station by daylight—facts which the general of an army, who had deliberately established his "headquarters in the saddle," might reasonably be expected to know; then suppose we concede that at the time these charges were preferred, as well as at the time the 4.30 p. m. order of August 29 was issued, Pope was oblivious of the all-important fact that Longstreet confronted Porter with twenty-five thousand men; and consequently, had no idea that if, in blind and unreasonable obedience to this order, Porter had undertaken to turn Jackson's right flank, his own left flank would necessarily have been exposed to Lee and Longstreet, and in all human probability his little army of ten thousand men crushed and destroyed by the combined hosts of Lee, Longstreet, and Jackson, between whose opposing forces he had thus, machine-like, placed himself; then suppose we concede, what Pope and his friends claim, that the court-martial that tried and condemned General Porter consisted of honorable, high-minded men; that the court was not, as has been charged, organized to convict; that it had no purpose, political or otherwise, either to mitigate the faults of Pope on the one hand, or to manufacture or magnify offenses of Porter on the other—concede all this—although I must say, in justice to myself and to the cause of truth and right, that my own honest convictions are at war with these concessions—but concede all this, and the facts still remain—as conclusively shown by the testimony of the confederate generals Lee, Longstreet, and Robertson, as well as by the testimony of some twenty or more Union officers who were called as witnesses before the court-martial and board of officers; as found by the board of officers, consisting of the distinguished generals Schofield, Terry, and Getty, convened by Mr. Hayes at West Point in June, 1878, for the express purpose of ascertaining the facts in the case; as found by General Grant, after a most careful and thorough investigation of all the testimony, and published in the December number of the North American Review, 1882—and as I hold can be found by any fair-minded, intelligent person in the land who may wish to inform himself on the subject—the facts as to the 6.30 p. m. order of August 27 are, that the night was so dark, the road from Warrenton Junction to Bristoe Station so obstructed, and the troops so exhausted from continuous marching, as to make it a physical impossibility for Porter to obey to the letter the order to reach Bristoe Station at daylight, and that he was just two hours late in moving.

Furthermore, as it proved, it was of no sort of consequence to General Pope, or to the Union cause, that Porter could not obey it, inasmuch as Porter's services were not required for twenty long hours after his arrival at Bristoe Station.

And as to the 4.30 p. m. order of August 29, the fact is, that, unbeknown to Pope, the forces of Longstreet and Jackson had actually been joined some three or four hours before the 4.30 p. m. order had been issued; so that, according to the highest military authority we have, confirmed by the dictates of common sense, Porter was not only justified in disobeying the order, but would have been justly liable to censure if he had obeyed.

Dow, jr.'s, statement, therefore, of his own theological dilemma, after wrestling with the old sectarian dogmas of free will, total depravity, foreordination, and an endless hell—

You can and you can't, you will and you won't,
You'll be damned if you do, and you'll be damned if you don't—would seem to describe exactly the predicament in which General Porter found himself on that memorable afternoon of August 29, 1862. If he obeyed, death and destruction would inevitably follow; if he disobeyed, the unmerciful condemnation of an ill-advised court-martial would be his portion. But like a true soldier he took the responsibility, and saved his men from unnecessary slaughter. And I have the charity to think, and to say, that if General Pope himself would not have done the same thing, under the same circumstances, as I understand those circumstances, it would only be because he might not comprehend the situation until afterwards!

Now, in proof of what I have said in regard to the difficulties in the way of that night march of August 27, ordered by Pope, I will read from part 3 of Senate Document No. 37, first session Forty-sixth Congress, the testimony of a few of the Union officers who were called as witnesses before the court-martial and board of officers.

Lieutenant Weld, page 1158, said:

I went to bed about 10 o'clock, and then the night was very dark indeed. I heard some one, I think it was General Morell, who came into camp before I went to bed, say that he had been trying to find General Sykes's headquarters, but had lost his way. General Sykes's headquarters was very near ours.

Colonel Marston, of Hooker's command, a Government witness, being asked by the recorder (board record, page 860), said:

Do you recollect the character of the night of the 27th of August, 1862?

A. From 9 to 10, along there, it was misty and rainy a little, fine rain or heavy mist, and quite dark. I was out with the officer of picket line at the time, and lost my way, it was so dark.

General Patrick, who was at Buckland Mills, testifies:

At 10 o'clock my orderly and one or two members of my staff dismounted at different times to feel for the road. It was one of the darkest of nights, the one of the 27th. (Board record, page 183.)

General Warren testifies (page 42, board record), as follows:

I do not remember lying down at all that night or trying to sleep; and I recollect with great distinctness, because we could only see things around the camp-fires; there was a great deal of dust and smoke in the atmosphere besides.

General Warren testifies further (board record, 30, 45) as to the parking of wagons in the road. "No such thing as parking. It was more pell-mell; 'parked' like a lot of ice that jams in on the shore."

Lieutenant Weld says in his testimony, on page 260:

Captain Monteith and myself were sent by General Porter just after daylight, about the gray of the morning, to clear the road of the wagons and train that were in it between Warrenton Junction and Bristoe Station. We found the road completely blocked with wagons. I should think fully one-half the wagons had the horses unhitched or unharnessed and hitched either to the wheels or poles of the wagons. The wagons were in the road itself, and on both sides, wherever there was a road in the woods for a wagon to be stuck. That was the state of the case for about three miles at least. The road was completely blocked.

Lieutenant Randol, at page 390, testifies:

At 3 o'clock I was directed to take up the march, following Weed's battery. We marched a short distance, when we came to a halt. Riding to the front, I found that the ford across Owl Run, a branch of Cedar Run, was blocked by wagon-trains of, as I understood at that time, Sigel's corps. Captain Weed, myself, and other officers endeavored to make an opening by forcing the teams across, but we found it impossible. I remembered that I had seen a ford the day before higher up the creek which might be made practicable. I turned the head of my battery up the creek toward the railroad crossing. Arriving at the ford, I found it was blocked also; there was a part of a battery and some wagons in it. I then moved higher up, and put my horse in the stream and forded higher up until I found a place that I thought we could cross, and so reported to Captain Weed. We cut down brush and filled it in the stream and cut out a roadway, and then cut a roadway on the other side. The stream was wooded more upon the right bank than it was upon the left. After this was accomplished we crossed our batteries, my battery leading to the other side.

Q. About what time, according to your recollection, did you accomplish this passage of this stream?

A. It must have taken two hours or more. Our own teams stalled in crossing this ford. It was a new ford and very soft.

Then again the same witness testifies, page 91:

From Warrenton Junction to Cedar Run I should not think it was over a mile and a half or two miles. Here the approaches to the creek were abrupt, and the bank on the other side was very abrupt. Here we found the creek blocked again on both sides; the wagons going up were stalled in the creek four and five deep, and the drivers watering their teams, and it was almost impossible for us to get through.

And General Grant expresses this opinion of the stirring events of that night in an article published in the December number of the North American Review for 1882; and I presume, Mr. Chairman, it will be conceded generally by the honorable gentlemen who oppose this bill—even by those who may honestly believe in the infallibility of Pope, as well as in the depravity of Porter—that General Grant is very respectable authority in matters of this kind, notwithstanding the strong objections which the learned gentleman who preceded me has made to his testimony. General Grant says upon this point:

It is shown that a literal obedience to the order of the 27th of August was a physical impossibility. It is further shown that General Porter was desirous of obeying it literally so far as was practicable, but was prevailed upon by his leading generals, against whom a suspicion of disloyalty to their commander or to the cause has never been entertained, to do what his own judgment approved as the best thing to do—to make a later start, with a view of arriving at his destination as early as was possible for him to arrive there, and to give to his jaded and worn troops two hours more of needed rest. If the night had been clear, and the road an open one, there would not have been as much justification for the exercise of his discretion in the matter; but there is no doubt but that he would have arrived at Bristoe Station just as early, and with his troops in much better condition, if he had started at early dawn, instead of at the hour he did, and the intervening time had been used in clearing the road for his troops when they did march. Where there were open spaces along the line of the road, they were either marshy, filled with stumps of trees, and impossible to march over, or were crowded with army wagons, so that the track of his army was limited to the encumbered, narrow road between the two points designated in the order, which could be cleared only by the wagons being moved ahead, as requested of Pope.

* * * * * * *

I question very much whether there was an engagement during the war, or a series of engagements continuing over as much time as was consumed in the battles about Bull Run in August, 1862, when not only one, but a number of generals, did not exercise their discretion, as Porter did on this occasion, and with far less justification. The commanding general who gave the order desired to have the troops at a certain point by daylight, and he gave his orders so as to accomplish that result. Under the circumstances his order required of the troops an impossibility. That was as evident to Porter, and those with him, before the attempt was made as it was after.

This testimony of Army officers, supported by the opinion of General Grant, I regard as conclusive in General Porter's favor on the charge of disobedience to the 6.30 order. Now to substantiate what I have said to disprove the charge of disobedience of the 4.30 order of August 29 I read further from General Grant's article. Continuing, General Grant says of this order:

It is a little singular that any one high in rank connected with the Army of Virginia should be in ignorance of the arrival of at least a portion of Lee's army by the very route designated by Pope many hours before the 4.30 order was published. Porter was not in ignorance of that arrival. Between 12 and 1 o'clock, on arriving at his advanced position, Porter was shown by McDowell a dispatch from General Buford, sent at 9.30 on the morning of the 29th, stating that from seventeen to eighteen regiments of the enemy had passed through Gainesville three-quarters of an hour before, or at a quarter before 9 o'clock, on their way to re-enforce Jackson, so that the head of the column must have been not only in supporting distance of Jackson but at the place of deployment by 10 o'clock in the morning; and now it is known by others, as it was known by Porter at the time, that Longstreet, with some twenty-five thousand men, was in position confronting Porter by 12 o'clock on the 29th of August, four hours and a half before the 4.30 order was written.

Then, after referring briefly to what is known as the "joint order" to McDowell and Porter, to which little importance is attached, General Grant continues:

Thus Porter, without sacrifice of men, and without endangering any interests, did more for Pope's relief than if he had gone directly to that general's assistance. To have done so would probably have sacrificed his corps without any benefit, and jeopardied the safety of Pope's army.

And now, to answer the criticism that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] has made upon the present well-known bias of General Grant in favor of General Porter, I will simply refer to the letter of General Grant to General Porter, which was read in this House yesterday morning, and published in the RECORD to-day. This letter will probably be accepted by all fair-minded men as a full and conclusive answer to the criticism the gentleman makes upon General Grant's published opinions on these matters.

So much for the testimony and opinion of Union officers. Now I quote from the highest Confederate authority on the subject. General Lee says:

Longstreet's command arrived within supporting distance of Jackson on 29th August, 1862, between 9 and 10 a. m. General Longstreet's command was formed by 12 m., August 29, in two lines on Jackson's right.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman give us the date when that statement was made?

Mr. GREENLEAF. I am unable to give the date.

And again General Lee says:

Porter could not take Jackson in flank while he was attacked in front. He could do nothing of that sort. * * * We flanked him. He could not flank Jackson. I suppose we should have cut Porter to pieces if he had attacked to get at Jackson's flank.

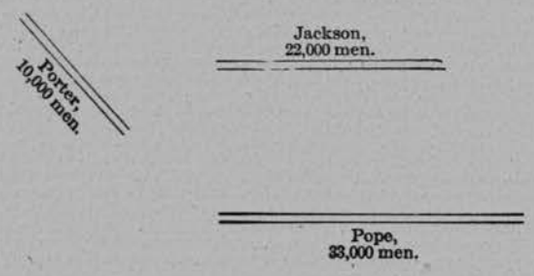
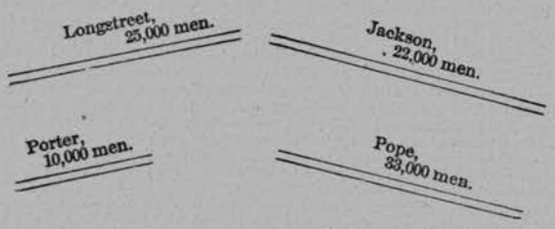
And General Longstreet says:

My command (twenty-five thousand in round numbers) was within supporting distance of General Jackson at 9 a. m., August 29, having passed Thoroughfare Gap at early dawn. My command was deployed in double line for attack between 10 a. m. and 12 m. on the 29th, extending from Jackson's right across turnpike and Manassas Gap Railroad. My command was ready to receive any attack after 11 o'clock a. m.



And General Beverly Robertson says:

My vedettes had reported your (Porter's) approach, and Longstreet's forces to meet yours were mainly posted before your arrival. Had you continued your march, or attacked at any time, you would have struck Longstreet's line of battle, over twenty-five thousand strong.



Mr. Chairman, this testimony of these distinguished Confederate officers with respect to the strength and disposition of their own forces on that afternoon, together with what was previously known of the disposition and strength of the Union armies, supplemented by this significant little diagram, which—with all due respect for the contrary opinion of the gentleman from Michigan—I confidently submit as showing, first, the disposition and strength of the opposing forces as assumed by General Pope; and, secondly, their actual position and strength as found by the West Point board of officers—as found by General Grant, as found by General Slocum, as found by General Rosecrans, and as

General Porter and many other Union officers who were in a position to know whereof they affirmed have always claimed—for which diagram, I may say, I am indebted to General Grant—should, in my opinion, forever settle the question of Porter's entire innocence of wrong, as charged, on the afternoon of August 29, 1862.

What Pope assumed to be the situation August 29:

What it actually was:

Why, then, in view of these clearly established facts, should we longer delay this simple act of justice to a most meritorious but much-abused soldier? Why wait till a more auspicious day? Why wait till this perfectly innocent man has gone down with his gray hairs in sorrow to the grave? Let us act, here and now.

And I appeal to gentlemen on both sides of the question to so vote on this, and all similar questions, that it can never be truly said of this House that it had ever hesitated to right, within its power, a grievous wrong to any man, white or black; and especially to a gallant soldier who, under the perverted forms of military law, for many long, anxious years had been made to atone for the faults and mistakes of others.

I know not, sir, how a majority of the members of this House may feel, or how act, with regard to this unparalleled wrong to General Porter, but for myself I can say that I support this bill for his relief with all my heart; and that if it went still further—if it went so far as to signify in some substantial manner—as to demonstrate, in fact, that the people of this great country would be neither unjust nor ungrateful to this brave son who has periled his life on so many hard-fought battlefields in support of the Constitution and Union of the United States, if possible, I would support the bill more heartily still.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I knew the defense of General Porter would find it necessary to attack the living and defame the dead; but I did not suppose that a gentleman so deservedly distinguished for his service to the country as a soldier would assail courts-martial, a form of military tribunal that has been sustained for centuries by the intelligent judgment of all the civilized countries in the world.

What! Is it thought that resort can be had in times of war to the civil tribunals of the country? Sir, courts-martial constitute the strong right arm of military power, and without them military discipline would be at an end.

Oh, I remember well that when a poor soldier, wearied by the long day's march, went to sleep on his post, or when the heart-sick soldier took an abrupt leave of absence that he might visit the old homestead or maybe his sweetheart, courts-martial were good enough to be then convened to try him, and as a result have him shot to death. But it seems that when a gentleman who wears long boots, with spurs at his heels, has epaulets on his shoulders, and a commission in his pocket, has ignominiously misbehaved in the presence of the enemy, according to the opinion of some gentlemen here he ought to be turned over to the town constable, taken before a justice of the peace, that he might be rescued from the clutches of the law by the village lawyer under a writ of habeas corpus.

Why, sir, the gentlemen on the other side of the House do not think so, in the light of the history in other days. I remember that when Jackson concluded to execute Arbuthnot and Ambrister, he convened his drum-head court-martial, and having convicted them, he shot them. When certain gentlemen criticised his conduct, he said that he thought he would shoot them first and look up the law afterward. That might have been harsh, but it was justified by all those who recognized the fact that war was a reality.

But those very gentlemen here who assail the court-martial that convicted Fitz-John Porter insist that this relief ought to be given him by the reason of the consideration and judgment of another military court. The one was a court-martial consisting of nine distinguished officers. These gentlemen say now that we ought to reverse the opinion of that court-martial because of the judgment of three other officers who may be no less distinguished or certainly are no more so.

This may be said in favor of a court-martial proceeding: it is a recognized part of our jurisprudence. It has the power to administer oaths, to compel the attendance of witnesses, and for falsehood intentionally sworn to by witnesses before it there may be an arraignment and punishment for perjury.

But this commission, this West Point board, was convened without the authority of law. I assert it here that there can be found in no statute any place upon which that board can stand. The accused had frequently implored or importuned the pardoning board for relief. It had been denied frequently; Lincoln had refused to grant it, and the same had been the action of President Grant.

When the appeal was made to President Hayes, he, by a very polite order, requested three very distinguished gentlemen, as I concede them to be, to meet and examine the case and take such testimony as they might think best, and then to report their findings for the purpose of informing him of his duty; for at that time Fitz-John Porter was laboring under the disability imposed by the findings of the court-martial. He had by its judgment been rendered forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.

The President had the pardoning power, but President Hayes did not seem to know whether he should exercise it or not. He referred the case to this board, that they might take the evidence and report their findings, so that he might be informed as to his duty. When the board had reported, unwilling, I suppose, to assume the responsibility, President Hayes referred it to the Congress of the United States, and asked them to take such action upon it as under the circumstances they might think best.

Now, I have contrasted these two tribunals simply for the purpose of insisting that the judgment of the one is entitled to as much consideration as that of the other, and that is all.

I confess that I have no very great admiration for courts-martial and their summary method of proceeding; but yet it is impossible, or at least it has seemed to be impossible in all the centuries, to find a better tribunal or to make a more perfect system.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I desire to begin the discussion of this case. I am conscious at the beginning that it will be impossible for me to conclude my argument within the time limited by the rule. I shall claim the indulgence of the House just so long as members can endure to listen to me, and when time is called I shall as a matter of course submit, and ask permission to put upon the record what I have not then been able to say.

I enter upon this discussion, Mr. Speaker, with reluctance, as I am conscious it is not possible to present the facts of Fitz-John Porter's case as they are in the time allowed for debate, and that this tribunal cannot, in the nature of things, give the grave questions it involves that sober thought and thorough investigation they deserve. At the outset it is apparent that it must be passed upon by gentlemen who have had no opportunity for examining the 3,000 pages of printed evidence before us and applying it to the charges it is intended to support or refute. Here we are asked, after twenty years have passed, to overturn the solemn adjudications of a court, to annul its decree, censure its judgment, and go to the very verge of impugning its integrity by the vote of this House, when it is safe to say that not one in ten of those who will give expression of approval or disapproval of its action ever read or attempted to read and deliberate upon the voluminous record upon which its judgment was founded. For these and other reasons I think it clear that this is not a fit tribunal for a cause like this. If we try it, let the result be what it may, we subject ourselves to the suspicion that our action was not the outgrowth of the evidence, but was secured by influences unworthy the consideration of this honorable body.

Gentlemen, what is expected of us in this case? We are called on to pass upon questions of military ethics about which many of us know little or nothing, on the credibility of witnesses who were never before us, on supposed conflicts in evidence we have never examined or compared, and on what the evidence we have never analyzed tends to prove. We are asked to reverse the finding here upon testimony which the lapse of time and fading memory has made unreliable, and this, too, after public opinion has been influenced by a bombardment of pamphlet, magazine, and newspaper literature prepared by the defense, and when even history has been rewritten to aid the accused in his vindication. And moreover it is expected that honorable and chivalric gentlemen who championed the cause which profited by General Porter's perfidy—if he is guilty as found—will complacently take their seats on the bench and pass on the merits of this case as if there was nothing anomalous in the proceeding.

And again, Mr. Speaker, I regret to speak in this case, because I find myself differing, and differing widely, from gentlemen who have achieved merited distinction in the military service of the country, and to whose judgment I would bow without hesitation in any case where I had not strong personal convictions leading me to opposite conclusions. Nor would I speak a harsh word of any man, and nothing now would be a more pleasurable duty, if it were the subject of the hour, than to pay a tribute to the courage and devotion to duty exhibited by Fitz-John Porter on occasions other than those which are the subject of this debate. But to-day we are to review only the occurrences of those ill-fated days in August, 1862, which brought disaster to our arms at Bull Run and General Porter's connection with them. And before proceeding to present my conclusions, permit me to say that it is simply impossible to go into this case in all its details. After all has been said that I care to say many points will remain untouched. It is quite certain also that I will submit nothing new, for although the case has not heretofore received consideration here, the argument has been going on for years in the press of the country and until it is exhausted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the facts, how came the case here, and what is our duty in relation to it?

Twenty years ago Fitz-John Porter was arraigned for trial before a court-martial composed of officers distinguished alike for their learning, their patriotism, and their courage. Gentlemen could not have been found, perhaps, better fitted for that grave and important duty, and the record of their action shows that the trial was fair, that they gave the accused opportunity to produce every witness he thought material to his defense, that the hearing was impartial, the facts critically examined, and that in passing judgment they were moved by neither passion nor prejudice. The officers who sat in this now historic case were of high rank, six of them regularly educated in the profession of arms, and all of them had rendered conspicuous service to the Union in the war of the rebellion. Some of them had been with the accused through the eventful and disastrous campaign of August, 1862, while between himself and others there had been most intimate personal relations. The president of the court was his personal friend, and the venerable Hitchcock distrusted his ability to perform his duty impartially because of his personal regard. The members of the court were his friends, soldiers like himself, and we may rightfully conclude they entered upon his trial hoping the evidence might justify them in relieving a brother officer from the grave offense imputed to him. To the personnel of the court no exception whatever was taken at the time. There was nothing done hastily or rashly. The case was important to the accused, equally important to the country, and it received the deliberate and intelligent consideration of nine officers who were in all respects the peers of any in the service of the country. These gentlemen gave the facts a most thorough and searching examination.

The officers who sat on this court, though mercilessly assailed by the defenders of Fitz-John Porter, need no vindication, for their deeds and their fame are enshrined in history. Who were they? General Hunter, its president, was early in the service and one of the most highly respected officers in the Army. Need I speak of Garfield? Many of us personally knew him and can bear testimony to the clearness of his judgment and to his courageous impartiality. General Hitchcock, venerable in years, was honored and respected by all, while General Ricketts and Casey were equally honored and equally respected. General Buford was a graduate of West Point, and of acknowledged learning and fairness. General King was a gallant and an educated soldier, and Generals Slough and Prentiss were volunteer officers of high character for culture and integrity.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have thought it well to say this much of the court, because the accused, by his instrument, has wantonly assailed it and imputed to it a want of intelligence and of honesty, and has thought it necessary to his vindication to destroy the fame of the distinguished men who tried him. Of the court it is said:

> But in a critical study of the evidence it is difficult to see how with honesty and intelligence it could have made so many mistakes. It is to be regretted that the oath of secrecy prevents the disclosure of the vote by which its conclusions were reached. But for that we might discriminate between the majority and minority. * * * The court derives no authority from its personality. It consisted of nine officers of high rank, it is true, but rank affords no sanction where acts are contrary to justice and common sense. "By their fruits ye shall know them," not by their rank. * * * The verdict was not fairly derived from the evidence. * * * It is necessary to look for some influence outside of the evidence to account for such strained conclusions. * * * We can not escape the conclusion that the court-martial was organized to convict, and its proceedings were a mockery of justice.

The country will be slow to credit a defense that finds it necessary to attack the reputations of the dead, Hitchcock and King, Casey, Slough, and Garfield, and their living associates, by meanly insinuating that they lacked honesty and common sense. But not content with assailing the court, the accused seeks to strike down Halleck and Stanton, Pope and McDowell, King and Ricketts, and all those who have dared to testify to a material fact against him or challenge the propriety of his conduct on the days in question. This defense has been deliberately arranged so that an acquittal is to be heralded to the country as a censure of many of our most honored names, living and dead. The fame of these are as sacred to us as that of Fitz-John Porter, and whatever others may do, for one I can not sympathize with a cause that is upheld by such methods of defamation.

But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, let me say a word before passing for the finding of this court, now wantonly denounced as wanting honesty and common sense, and as being organized for the sole purpose of convicting the accused. In the light of the history of those days I assert, sir, that the judgment of the court-martial was accepted by an intelligent and loyal people as a just finding on the facts and as a fit retribution for the high crimes of which the accused was found guilty. It had the approval of the merciful and conservative Lincoln, and that the finding was abundantly supported by the facts was then controverted only by the accused and those who with him were hostile to General Pope and who sympathized with the deposed chief of the Army of the Potomac.

But now we have reached the important issue. Those who advocate the passage of this bill assume that the finding of the court-martial by which Fitz-John Porter was condemned was unsupported by the facts, or if supported by facts then before the court, that since then evidence has been discovered that removes all suspicion of his guilt. The burden of the proof is on those who assert these facts. Are they proven? To establish them we are confronted by the report of three distinguished officers who were appointed by President Hayes to inquire into the facts and who met at West Point in June, 1878. Generals Schofield and Terry and Colonel Getty, of the Army, constituted this board, and to criticise the work of men who stand so deservedly high in the esteem of the people is, I know, a most ungracious duty. However, the late General Burnside in commenting on the report of this board said:

> If action upon the bill recommended by the majority of this committee is to be insisted upon and taken by the Senate, it may be found to be the duty of individual Senators to enter into a full discussion of the proceedings of the court and the board, with a view to giving a conscientious and intelligent vote upon the case. I will say, however, that I think the board committed a very grave mistake when, in summing up its conclusions as to the resemblance which the charges and specifications before the original court bore to the facts of the case, it said:
> "We trust it is not necessary for us to submit in detail the results of this comparison, and that it will be sufficent for us to point out the fundamental errors, and to say that all the essential facts in every instance stand out in clear and absolute contrast to those supposed facts upon which General Porter was adjudged guilty."
> The undersigned thinks that it was very necessary for the board, if they desired to give their action weight with the President, Congress, or the country, that they should show in absolute detail the bearings which the facts of the case had upon the original charges. It seems very clear to the undersigned that some of the so-called "fundamental errors" of the court-martial which the board have summed up in a few words are not errors in fact. This statement is made after an examination of the four volumes of record in this most important case, but with no desire to make any charge detrimental to the military intelligence of the high officers who composed the board.

I indorse this and more. After a careful reading the report impresses me with the conviction that the evidence given by the Government was not given the weight due it. Important evidence seems not to have been considered at all. And yet, strange as it may seem, these three gentlemen, having no judicial powers, sit and review and reverse the finding of a regular court composed of nine officers in all respects their peers, and not only acquit Fitz-John Porter, but convert him into a hero and a martyr. Appointed to report the facts and their conclusions upon them, that the President may act advisedly on his application for relief, they avail themselves of the opportunity to pronounce a panegyric that reads more like the fulsome laudations of the advocate than the unadorned statement of a court. Is this criticism just?

Mr. ROSECRANS (in his seat). It is not.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. My friend says it is not.

Mr. SLOCUM (in his seat). They are weak men, are they not?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] says sotto voce: "They are weak men, are they not?" I said but a moment ago, if my distinguished friend had heard me, that they were men who stood deservedly high in the estimation of their country. But they were men, and I may say, not exactly in the language of Burns:

> But, oh! mankind are unco weak
> And little to be trusted,
> If self the wavering balance shake
> It's rarely right adjusted.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Was not that the case when they tried Porter, to excuse the Government for having put Pope in command?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If you will agree to give me time to answer all these questions I will do my very best in that direction.

Let us see. Speaking of the refusal of Porter to attack the enemy on the afternoon of August 29, they say:

> Such an attack under such circumstances would not only have been a great blunder, but on the part of an intelligent officer a great crime.

Again, and speaking of the same act of disobedience:

> It is not possible that any court-martial could have condemned such conduct had it been understood. On the contrary that conduct was obedient, subordinate, faithful, and judicious. It saved the Union army from disaster on the 29th of August.

The resources of the language are here severely taxed to find adjectives to strongly express their admiration for conduct which a court of nine intelligent officers thought, when the transaction was fresh in the memories of the actors in the conflict of that day, to be flagrantly disobedient and insubordinate. They acquit Porter upon every charge of disobedience of orders, but, judging by the report, they came very near censuring him for complying with one order of his superior officer and trying to render a tardy obedience to another. It seems that General Pope by a written order, dated at 8.50 p. m. of August 29, directed

Porter to immediately march to the field of the battle of that day. So far as I can see there was no charge, trial, or conviction for a disobedience of this order, but they avail themselves of the opportunity to say that "at first sight it would appear that in the prompt and unhesitating movement under this order"—that is, in obeying it—"General Porter committed a grave fault." However, upon a close examination, the board thought his conduct might be excused.

Again, when Porter was peremptorily ordered to move with his command from Warrenton Junction for Bristoe Station at 1 o'clock on the morning of the 28th of August, and he made, as the board found, some effort to get under way at 3 o'clock they thought him a little hasty, and that "it would have been wiser to have delayed the movement until 4." But I shall take occasion to call attention to the logic of this report as I proceed with the discussion. As it challenges the record of the court, the truth of the current history of the times, and severely reflects on the conduct of men who deserve well of the country, it ought to inspire no respect unless it is supported by facts in evidence. As I have said, the board was composed of officers of high character, but their judgment, I assert, is entitled to no more respect than that of the court whose action they review. It is my opinion, after a somewhat careful examination of this case, that it was impossible for the West Point board to reach its conclusions without discarding material evidence on the part of the Government and summarily rejecting the testimony of some of its most important witnesses.

Now, what are the facts and what the history of the Fitz-John Porter case? And here I must be brief. In the Peninsula campaign of the spring and summer of 1862 some one had blundered, and the Army of the Potomac not only failed to capture the confederate capital, but was compelled to retire from the James to the line of the Potomac. Richmond was no longer menaced nor the confederate army confronted by an opposing force, and early in August that army began to move northward through Virginia and in the direction of Washington. The war was being transferred from the front of Richmond to the vicinity of the national capital, and when the country realized that the siege of Richmond had been raised, that McClellan's campaign, from which so much had been expected, had proven a failure, a feeling something akin to despair took possession of the people.

It is no part of my duty to discuss the causes that led to this condition of affairs or to attempt to fix responsibility for it. The order removing the Army of the Potomac from the Peninsula had been issued, wisely or unwisely; the country was in peril; and it was the time of all times for cheerful obedience to lawful authority and unselfish devotion to duty. It was the time of all times to subordinate personal preferences to loyalty to the cause of the Republic; for the simple question was how to hurl back the tide of invasion and how to secure the triumph of our arms, and with it the suppression of the rebellion. We shall see after a while how Fitz-John Porter came up to this standard; certainly not too high a one for a major-general in the Army of the United States.

At this juncture General Pope was called from the West, where he had made a good military record, and assigned to the command of the Army of Virginia. This army, when he assumed its command, was distributed along the line of the Rappahannock and between Richmond and Washington. To give in detail the movements of the opposing armies during the month of August, 1862, is unnecessary, as we are now only concerned with the second battle of Bull Run and the events of the few days preceding it. If Porter be guilty, it is because of his conduct on the 27th, 28th, and 29th days of August. Let us come at once to those days. Let the events of those days be examined fairly, carefully, impartially. The country expects the inquiry to be made fearlessly.

Because of the alleged misconduct of Porter on those memorable days he was charged with having violated the ninth and fifty-second articles of war. His offense, as charged, was disobedience of the lawful commands of his superior officer and misbehavior in the presence of the enemy. Upon these he was brought to trial, found guilty, and sentenced "to be cashiered, and to be forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States."

The supporting specifications were numerous and may be condensed into these:

First. That he failed to obey the order of his superior officer directing him to move with his command at 1 o'clock a. m., August 28, from Warrenton Junction to Bristoe Station, and "on all accounts" to reach Bristoe by daylight on the morning of that day.

Second. That on the 29th day of August he disobeyed the order of Pope directing him to push forward upon Gainesville.

Third. That on the 29th day of August, being with his army corps between Manassas and the field of battle, within the sound of the guns and in the presence of the enemy and knowing that a battle was being fought and that the aid of his corps was needed, purposely failed all day to bring it on the field.

Fourth. That he disobeyed the order of General Pope dated 4.30 p. m., August 29, directing him to attack the enemy on the flank or rear.

These are not all the acts of alleged disobedience and unsoldierly conduct, but they are the essential ones and all I care to discuss, for if he is guilty of these, or any one act of flagrant and willful disobedience, he ought not to have the favor of this House.

Before proceeding further it is important to know what kind of obedience the soldier is required to yield his superior. The books tell us that the officer is to hold no counsel with fear. He must despise danger. Absolute obedience is the one leading and overshadowing demand of the military law.

The military system is essentially and necessarily despotic. It exacts prompt and unhesitating compliance with the lawful orders of those rightfully in command. The subaltern must not refuse, question, or hesitate when required by his chief to act—

> Not though the soldiers knew
> Some one had blundered;
> Theirs not to make reply,
> Theirs not to reason why,
> Theirs but to do or die.

These general rules are subject to this exception: If the subordinate knows the order was given under a mistake of facts and its execution bring disaster, he may disobey. Whether obedience shall be rendered is not left to the pleasure or caprice of the subaltern, for if it were so the army would be chaos and its discipline and efficiency at an end.

The necessity for exact obedience is apparent. The general movement, the plans of the attack or defense in all their details, are for the chief, and he commits the execution of the several parts to his lieutenants, and success depends upon the punctual and exact obedience of each officer to each order. Now, did Fitz-John Porter yield this prompt, this exact, this soldierly obedience to the orders of his superior? Did he respect General Pope's authority? Was he friendly or hostile to his commanding officer; and did he desire him to succeed or fail? Behind the conduct of every man is a purpose—a motive. If immediately before the events of these days, if while they were in progress, he was distrustful, manifested a spirit of insubordination, predicted failure, derided and sneered at his superior, he was certainly in a fit frame of mind to defy his orders and authority. That all this is true of him is conclusively proven.

The West Point board felt it to be its duty "to say that the indiscreet and unkind terms in which General Porter expressed his distrust of the capacity of his superior commander can not be defended." This puts it mildly, for from the very hour that Pope took command of the Army of Virginia Porter was snarling at him and belittling him. His letters to General Burnside prove this.

From the time Porter started to join Pope he furnished Burnside with all the information he could gather, including criticisms and comments of his own. These dispatches are of great importance, in my opinion, in judging of Porter's subsequent conduct, as they clearly show an utter want of confidence in Halleck, then directing operations from Washington, and not only a want of confidence in Pope, but a contempt for him and his ability. While on the march and before he reported to Pope he dispatched Burnside on the 25th as follows:

> I do not like to direct movements on such uncertain data as that furnished by General Halleck; I know he is misinformed of the location of some of the corps mentioned in his dispatches. * * * I have directed Sykes to go to Rappahannock Station, &c. * * * Does General McClellan approve?

The first order which Porter received from Pope was at once communicated to Burnside; but notwithstanding his report for duty and the receipt of a proper order from his lawful superior, he appears to have been unable or unwilling to recognize the fact that he was not under the command of General McClellan; for he says, after detailing the order:

> Inform McClellan, that I may know I am doing right.

On the morning of the 27th, while on the march to the vicinity of Warrenton village, he received another order from Pope, dated at Warrenton Junction (railway), August 27, 4 a. m., directing him to move direct to that point (Warrenton Junction)—to move "as rapidly as possible;" that the "enemy's cavalry have intercepted our railway communication near Manassas;" that "he [the enemy] seems to be advancing with a heavy force along the Manassas Gap Railway;" and that "we will probably move to attack him to-morrow in the neighborhood of Gainesville," &c. This order appears to have been at once forwarded to Burnside, for I find a dispatch, dated the afternoon of the 27th, which states:

> Everything here is at sixes and sevens, and I find I am to take care of myself in every respect. * * * Our line of communication has taken care of itself in compliance with orders. * * * The enemy captured all Pope's and other clothing, and from McDowell the same, including liquors. No guard accompanying the trains.

A sharp and caustic truth this; swift to censure, and not above giving sanction and publicity to the false and scandalous charges against General McDowell and his personal habits.

Again, he writes:

> We are working now to get behind Bull Run.

Again:

> All talk about bagging Jackson, &c., is bosh. That enormous gap was left open and the enemy jumped through.

And, once more:

> I expect the next thing will be a raid on our rear, by way of Warrenton pike, by Longstreet, who was cut off.
>
> * * * * * * *
> It would seem from proper statements of the enemy that he is wandering around loose, but I expect they know what they are doing, which is more than any one here or anywhere knows.

I might multiply these statements indefinitely, but I need not. Can obedience and fidelity come from an officer who sneers at the courage and strategy of his superior? It is clearly disclosed in this correspondence that he wants to be out of Pope's command and away from the Army of Virginia. He looks hopefully toward McClellan, and is anxious to join him at Alexandria. The bitterness with which he alludes to Pope shows a frame of mind that was ready to connive at defeat and rejoice over a failure. In the light of these facts we should read the conduct of Porter. At sundown on the 26th of August Stonewall Jackson took and occupied Bristoe Station, on the line of the railroad, and immediately sent forward a detachment and captured Pope's depot of supplies at Manassas. Pope is now at Warrenton Junction and Jackson is between him and Washington.

Upon reaching Warrenton Junction on the morning of the 27th Porter had a personal interview with General Pope, the result of which he at once communicated to General Burnside in a dispatch. In that interview Pope communicated all the information he had, but it appears to have made no impression upon Porter, except to confirm him in the opinion that Pope was incompetent and that his own judgment was infallible. His dispatch to Burnside was dated Warrenton Junction, August 27, 4 p. m., nearly twenty-four hours after Jackson had placed himself in the rear of Pope's army, and when his commander had reiterated the belief that a general engagement could not long be delayed. I call especial attention to some of its features. He said:

Wagons are rolling along rapidly to the rear and * * * I see no cause for alarm, although this may cause it. Sigel got to Buckland bridge in time to put out the fire and kick the enemy who is pursuing his route unmolested to the Shenandoah or Loudoun County. * * * No enemy in our original front. * * * A letter of General Lee, seized when Stuart's aid was seized, directs Stuart to leave squadron only to watch in front of Hanover Junction. Everything has moved north. I found a vast difference between these troops and ours, but I suppose they are new, as to-day they burned their clothes when there was not the least cause. I hear they are much demoralized, and needed some good troops to give them heart, and I think head. We are working now to get behind Bull Run, and I presume will be there in a few days if strategy don't use us up. The strategy is magnificent and tactics in the inverse proportion. * * * I would like also to be ordered to return to Fredericksburg to push toward Hanover, &c. * * * I wish Sumner was at Washington, &c. * * * I do not doubt the enemy have large amount supplies, and I believe they have a contempt for the Army of Virginia. I wish myself away from it with all our old Army of the Potomac, and so do our companions. I was informed to-day, &c., that this army was pushed out to save the Army of the Potomac—an army that could take care of itself. * * * There is no fear of an enemy crossing the Rappahannock. * * * Most of this is private, but if you can get me away, please do so. Make what use of this you choose, so it does good.

On the same day this letter was written to Burnside, and at nearly the same hour, an engagement was going on at Bristoe. Hooker had moved up the railroad, attacked Ewell's command, and after a severe fight, in which the Union forces lost some three hundred in killed and wounded, drove it from Bristoe, when Ewell went forward and joined Jackson at Manassas. Here, after his interview with Porter on this day at Warrenton Junction, Pope joins Hooker at Bristoe. McDowell's and Sigel's corps, with Reynolds's division, were at Gainesville, and Reno's and Heintzelman's corps, with Kearny's division, at Greenwich. Jackson, with 20,000 to 25,000 troops, is four miles north from Bristoe, while Pope's main command, except Hooker's division, which was with him, is from eight to ten miles to the south and west. That the situation was critical is not denied. It was at this time General Pope sent Porter the following order:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Bristoe Station, August 27, 1862—6.30 p. m.

GENERAL: The major-general commanding directs that you start at 1 o'clock to-night, and come forward with your whole corps, or such part of it as is with you, so as to be here by daylight to-morrow morning. Hooker has had a very severe action with the enemy, with a loss of about three hundred killed and wounded. The enemy has been driven back, but is retiring along the railroad. We must drive him from Manassas and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is If Morell has not joined you, send word to him to push forward immediately; also, send word to Banks to hurry forward with all speed to take your place at Warrenton Junction. It is necessary on all accounts that you should be here by daylight. I send an officer with this dispatch who will conduct you to this place. Be sure to send word to Banks, who is on the road from Fayetteville, probably in the direction of Bealeton. Say to Banks, also, that he had best run back the railroad trains to this side of Cedar Run. If he is not with you, write to him to that effect.

By command of Major-General Pope.

GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Colonel and Chief of Staff.

That this order was delivered to General Porter by Captain De Kay at 9.30 o'clock on the night of its date is not controverted. The order is certainly explicit. It commands Porter to move with his corps to Bristoe, to start at 1 o'clock the next morning, and to reach there at daylight. The order is urgent as well as explicit: "It is necessary on all accounts that you should be here at daylight." More than that, it tells him there had been a very severe action with the enemy that afternoon, in which our loss was about three hundred, and that the enemy was near by. Pope sends a guide to point out the way, and his messenger supplements the written order by informing Porter as follows:

The last thing General Pope said to me was that I should remain and guide the column to Bristoe, leaving at 1 o'clock, and that he expected you to be there certainly at daylight.

There could be no mistaking as to what was required. Obedience was then important, for Hooker's command had fought that day, was nearly out of ammunition, and Jackson's combined force only four miles away. Under the circumstances no soldier, it seems to me, who was proud of his profession, loyal to his superior, or inspired by a true devotion to the cause he had espoused, would have hesitated a moment in attempting to obey. But the order was not obeyed, nor was there an effort put forth in that direction. Fitz-John Porter did not put his corps or any part of it in motion at the hour named, nor did his command or any part of it join Pope at Bristoe at daylight. I do not insist that it was important under the order that the movement should commence at 1 o'clock; it was only important that it began in time to insure the arrival of the command at the point designated at daylight. It is admitted that the order was not obeyed, and Porter defends his action by asserting—

First, that his subordinate generals advised against it;

Second, that the night was too dark to march;

Third, that the road along which he was required to move was made impassable by a blockade of wagons; and

Fourth, that his troops were much fatigued by the long march of the previous day.

Mr. Speaker, Fitz-John Porter did hold a consultation with his subordinate generals, and they advised, it is said, against making an attempt to march. If that consultation meant anything more than the preparation of an excuse for a predetermined act of disobedience I am unable to correctly interpret human conduct or human testimony. Captain De Kay, who carried the order, swears that when Porter read it his first comment to some of his general officers present was: "Gentlemen, there is something for you to sleep on." The fault-finding spirit, the want of confidence, the determination to sit in judgment on Pope's orders, culminated in a council of war. What made this consultation necessary? The question whether he would obey an order directing him to move his command was a very simple one. His failure to communicate to his council information of Hooker's engagement, the urgent and imperative character of the order, and his sneering remark to Captain De Kay convince me that he was more anxious to influence his subordinates than to be influenced by them. Had he informed them fully of the facts of Pope's surroundings, of the positive terms of the order, and then submitted the question to the deliberate judgment of his fellow-officers and acted upon their conclusions in good faith, it would have mitigated his offense. However, sir, I am not ready to admit that even under these circumstances his conduct would have been subordinate and soldierly. There are occasions of great peril when a conference should be had, and where the superior may act upon the advice of his inferior officers. This was not such an occasion. Here there was a plain order and a duty equally plain. He did not read the order to nor inform Generals Butterfield, Sykes, and Morell of its urgency or importance, but contented himself by explaining that it was "an order to march at 1 o'clock," and when it was said the night was dark and the troops fatigued, he accepted the statement without dissent, and immediately ordered the movement to be delayed. This is in brief the evidence of these generals upon that point.

Here is what they said:

General Sykes said:

General Porter informed me that he had received an order directing his corps to march at 1 o'clock.

Question by the judge-advocate. Do you remember whether you were made acquainted with the urgent language of the order, stating that by all means General Porter must be at Bristoe Station by daylight the next morning?

A. No, sir, I did not; for I am satisfied that if the urgency had been made known to us we would have moved at the hour prescribed.

General Sykes subsequently attempted to modify this opinion so far as to claim a certain discretion on the part of a corps commander; but I am content to let this—the opinion which as a soldier he gave at once when the matter was first clearly presented to him—answer.

General Butterfield said:

Question by the accused: Will you state what was said by General Porter in relation to that order and what the order was?

A. The order, I believe, was for General Porter to move his forces at 1 o'clock in the morning to Bristoe.

Question by the judge-advocate: Did you see the order the 27th from General Pope or know anything about the urgency of its terms?

A. I did not read it.

General Morell says, in answer to the question as to "what occurred:"

General Porter said to us that he had received this order to march at 1 o'clock that night. We immediately spoke of the condition of our troops, they being very much fatigued, and the darkness of the night, and said that we did not believe we could make any better progress attempting to start at that hour than had we waited until daylight. After some little conversation General Porter said, "Well, we will start at 3 o'clock; get ready." I immediately left his tent.

I need not notice this branch of the defense further. Had these subordinate officers known all the facts, that the order was issued from a field of battle, that a large force of the enemy was near by, that an officer had been sent to guide the command, that the terms of the order were most peremptory, I am sure they would have counseled unhesitating obedience.

But, Mr. Speaker, Porter was at least tardy to the point of unsoldierly indifference; he did not move at 1, nor indeed so early as 3 o'clock. And I call the attention of the House and of the country to the testimony of Col. Jacob S. Buchanan in support of this assumption. This testimony has been the subject of some adverse criticism because, after sixteen years, he was mistaken in a date. He puts the march from Warrenton Junction as occurring on the 29th instead of the 28th of August—a mistake easily made and wholly immaterial to the merits of the question.

That he was with Porter's command on the night of the 27th and the morning of the 28th of August is not controverted, and that he speaks of what happened at this time is not denied. His testimony is not to be disregarded because of this trivial discrepancy. I have known Colonel Buchanan long and well. He is a distinguished citizen of my State, a lawyer of ability, a gentleman of high social position and of unquestioned integrity. No man of any party in the large circle of his acquaintance would hesitate for a moment to accept his statements.

On the 26th of August, Colonel Buchanan with a detachment of cavalry escorted some batteries of heavy artillery from General Burnside's command to Warrenton Junction and remained there until 7.30 o'clock on the morning of the 28th. As to what happened on that morning he testifies as follows:

Q. What conversation had you with General Porter before he started off to Bristoe Station?

A. On the evening before he started somebody gave me an order to be in readiness to move at 3 o'clock in the morning. I was in front of General Porter's headquarters at 3 o'clock in the morning, but saw no one until after the break of day. Then some one came to me and told me to let the men get their breakfasts and let their horses be fed. That was done, and I immediately went back to the place I occupied. Some time afterward, after sunrise, I saw General Porter. I wanted to go back to Fredericksburg to my regiment. I only had about ninety men with me, and I expected to go back the day before. I rode out with him in the woods where he was in camp until we got into an open field. He asked me to send a detachment of the command I had forward to clear the road toward Bristoe Station two or three miles; this was done. I waited some little time, and the infantry began to move. About that time he handed me a letter, and directed me to give it to General Burnside—I can not get his language, but the idea was that there was no disaster that was threatening as yet, and he hoped for the best.

Q. You did not accompany any of your detachment toward Bristoe?

A. No, sir; I believe I waited until four or five of the men came back.

Q. When did you get this order from General Porter to send a detachment down there?

A. After I got out of the open woods into the field.

Q. What time of day would you say it was, having reference to daybreak?

A. The sun was probably an hour high.

I fully believe the statements of Colonel Buchanan, and it shows that Porter did not begin to move even at 3 o'clock—indeed, was not in motion until the hour had passed when he was expected at Bristoe.

Was the character of the night such as to justify the disobedience of this order? Will it be contended that on a starlight August night, when there was neither rain nor storm nor bad roads to interrupt the march, troops could not be moved through a comparatively open country the short distance of nine miles? This movement was not to be over an unknown route, for a pilot was ready to guide the way. There was no enemy to oppose. Witness after witness testified that the night was a clear, starlight one, and the roads good. Captains Macy, Murray, and Campbell, and Privates Hill and Stine, of the Nineteenth Indiana Volunteers, so swear. These men were actors in this drama. For twenty years they have been my neighbors, and I know them to be intelligent and truthful.

But, sir, the following facts will force every intelligent mind to the conclusion that the darkness of the night did not occasion this extraordinary delay. The mere opinions of witnesses are worthless in their presence. It is an unquestionable and incontrovertible truth, I think, that on this notable night bodies of troops belonging to almost every brigade and division of both armies were marching both north and east of Porter, and at no great distance from him, without serious inconvenience. This was probably the only instance in either army where an order to march on that night was disobeyed.

Of the Union Army Gibbon's brigade, Duryea's brigade, parts of Ricketts's and Kearny's divisions marched portions of this night. On the confederate side Hill, Ewell, Lawton, and indeed all of Jackson's command, marched from Manassas either to Sudley Church, Centreville, or Groveton, each traversing a distance as great as was required of Fitz-John Porter's corps. It can not be doubted—indeed the fact is not challenged to my knowledge—that nearly all the troops on both sides that subsequently took part in the battles of the 29th and 30th of August were in motion on this night to secure new positions. I hope that I do not state the conclusion too strongly when I say, in view of this evidence, that the excuse of darkness is but a shallow and shadowless pretense.

Was the road obstructed by wagon trains so as to render the movement of troops over it that night impossible or impracticable? If this were true and Porter did not know it, it affords no apology for his disobedience. If he did know it, then, in view of the imperative order before him, he should have taken immediate and efficient measures to open the way or to find another by which to reach the point to which he was ordered. As I have said already, the essence of this order is that he should reach Bristoe at daylight. The time of starting was fixed in it at 1 o'clock, but "on all accounts" his command must arrive at daylight. Now, if Porter knew the way was obstructed and saw or apprehended that to delay the movement until 1 o'clock would prevent his making Bristoe at the time he was commanded to be there, he should have without hesitation put his troops in motion at an earlier hour. That he could not move by the usually traveled road was no excuse if there was another open to him, or if he could have reached his destination by avoiding roads altogether. I am safe in saying that the learned and experienced military gentlemen who present the defense will not deny the soundness of these propositions.

Was there a route other than the wagon-way? Parallel with the wagon-road there was a railroad track the whole distance to be marched. Infantry, if the opinions of the most intelligent military men are to be respected, could have been easily moved over this track, and in this emergency there should have been no hesitation in attempting it. The evidence shows there were wagon-trains on this road that night, but I assert there was no effort to clear the way, and that the obstruction was not sufficient to prevent the movement of Porter's command. If I am able to understand the evidence there were no obstructions at all for a considerable part of the way, and troops might have passed the trains at any point. Between Warrenton Junction and Kettle Run—a distance of some three miles—there was, I admit, what some of the witnesses term "a jam," but for the rest of the way wagons were only to be found at wide intervals. These facts are fully shown in the evidence of Captain De Kay, Colonel Clary, and Captain Fifield, and corroborated by General Sykes and Lieutenant Monteith.

By prompt and energetic action with a small force the road could have been cleared, but no action was taken.

Col. Robert E. Clary, called by the accused in 1862, answered, on cross-examination, as follows:

Question. In your opinion, could or could not General Porter, after the receipt of his order to move, which receipt was at 9.30 p. m. on the 27th of August, have cleared the road entirely of wagons by 1 or 2 o'clock that night, so that his march would not have been much impeded?

Answer. I think the troops could have passed over during the night had a sufficient force been sent in advance to have cleared that road of those obstructions, which, at the time I passed over it, extended only three miles, I think. When I passed over the road it was between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning. What the obstructions had been previous to that time I am unable to say.

Q. Will you state whether at 1 o'clock the character of the night and the state of the road was such as, in your judgment, to render practicable the march of General Porter's troops to Bristoe Station, to arrive at or about daylight?

A. Not without the preliminary steps which I have previously stated ought to have been taken.

Q. Were or were not the first three or four miles of the road from Warrenton unobstructed.

A. They were, as I passed over them.

De Kay swears that the road was good, although he had difficulty in getting down by horseback, owing to the wagons; that he had passed the last wagon at Catlett's, two or three miles from Warrenton, and that he stated to Porter his infantry could take the railroad track, as many small squads of men had gone up that way. General Duval rode that night from Warrenton to Catlett's Station and Bristoe. He says:

I think troops could have marched; there were places where they could not have marched in regular order; they would have had to go around wagons in some way, but there would have been no difficulty in discovering the road; troops could not have moved in the regular order of marching, &c.

If any attempt was made that night to clear the way I have failed to find the evidence of it. After daylight Lieutenant Wild was sent forward with a half-dozen cavalry for that purpose and that was all until Porter's command was on the march. The evidence on the point as to the extent of the obstructions on the road to Bristoe is voluminous, and a careful examination of it will, I am sure, convince any candid inquirer that the wagon-trains interposed no insurmountable obstacle to a forward movement of troops that night.

But, sir, it is insisted that these troops of Porter's command were fatigued by long marches and were in no fit condition to march even in obedience to an imperative order from the general in command. What are the undisputed facts? General Morell's division, after a march of from seventeen to nineteen miles, arrived at Warrenton Junction at from the middle of the afternoon until sunset on August 27. General Sykes's division marched only fourteen miles, reaching camp at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. Is it possible that it will be seriously contended that to have marched these troops after a rest of from seven to fourteen hours was impracticable? They had but nine miles to make. Had they made Bristoe by daylight their entire march for the preceding twenty-four hours would have been but a fraction over a mile an hour. Would this have been extraordinary? This feat has been surpassed hundreds of times by our volunteer troops. It is a poor compliment to the endurance and patriotism of the American soldier to even doubt his capacity or his readiness to make such a march. Forced marches—long and fatiguing—are by no means an unusual occurrence in time of war, and the history of the world is replete with instances in which long and rapid marches through storm and mud or over rugged mountain sides were made without hesitation and without murmur from either officers or men.

Let us see how other soldiers judged of their duty in similar circumstances. I quote from General Jacob D. Cox:

In Georgia, on the 25th of May, 1864, the Twenty-third Corps was marching late in the evening, trying to reach Pumpkin Vine Creek, after crossing the Etowah River. Hooker was in advance, and his trains in this case also filled the road. The column was necessarily broken, the men picking their way among the wagons, straggling out by the roadside when it was possible to march there, and being wearied and worried to the last degree by the obstacles. Just before dark distant firing was heard. Schofield ordered that the column should close up and push on as fast as possible. A severe thunder-storm came up, followed by pouring, drenching rain, in which the corps continued to march till midnight, and then went into bivouac by the roadside, not a wagon or tent of their own being near them. Instead of seeking shelter, General Schofield himself pushed forward to see what had been going on; and in trying to pass some wagons his horse fell with him into a gully which could not be seen in the darkness and he was severely hurt. But orders were sent for the corps to continue its march; after only a single hour of rest they marched again, and the gray in the east was just appearing when they reported to Sherman and asked for an assignment of their position on the field. Hooker had had, as in 1862, a very severe action, though it was at New Hope church this time. There was no council of division officers called to consider the propriety of marching, but orders were issued and the march was made, and every soldier knows that it is only in that way that campaigns are made successful.

Had the brave men of Sykes's and Morell's divisions been ordered forward that night they would have obeyed, as the American soldier always did, with alacrity.

The West Point board justify General Porter's conduct in failing to obey the order of August 27 by a logic somewhat surprising. After quoting the order the report says:

This order plainly contemplated an agressive movement against the enemy early on the 28th, and required the presence of General Porter's corps at Bristoe Station as early as possible in the morning to take part in the pursuit of and attack upon the enemy. The order did not indicate any anticipation of defensive action at Bristoe, but, on the contrary, it indicated continuous, active, aggressive operations during the entire day of the 28th, to drive the enemy from Manassas and clear the country.

Is it true the order contemplated a purely aggressive movement on the 28th, and that Porter's presence was required to take part in it and to take part in the pursuit of a retreating enemy? What part of the order justifies this construction? I suppose this language is relied on: "We must drive him [the enemy] from Manassas, and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is." This is tortured until it is made to notify Porter that an aggressive movement was to be made early in the morning; that his troops were to take part in the attack and pursuit, and that operations were to be continuous, active, and aggressive during the entire day. It was therefore—and this is the conclusion of the board—necessary that the troops should not be fatigued by a long march, but should arrive at Bristoe in condition for a long fight and pursuit.

With all due deference to these learned gentlemen, this logic seems strained and lamentably far-fetched. Pope simply expressed a purpose to drive the enemy from Manassas and to clear the country between that place and Gainesville, but as to when the movement is to be made, or the part Porter's corps is to take in it, the order is silent. Whether the movement was to be aggressive or defensive, it was none the less the duty of Porter to obey the order. "The order did not indicate any defensive action," it is said. It did not in terms, it is true, but it did inform Porter that a severe action had already taken place on that day, that a body of the enemy was then at Manassas, but four miles distant, and they were also in the country between Bristoe and Gainesville. For days before this the opposing forces had been at times in sight of each other. The enemy was not retreating, and Porter must have known, from the facts stated in the order and his own observation and experience, that the enemy might take the offensive.

Again, the report says:

It was a manifest physical impossibility to march over that road on that night or to remove the obstructions in the darkness.

A little further on we are told:

If the order had contemplated * * * an attack by the enemy at dawn of day, then it would have been General Porter's duty to start promptly, not at 1 o'clock, but at the moment he received the order, so as to have brought at least some fragments of his infantry to Bristoe in time to aid in repelling that attack.

It strikes me that these conclusions do not stand well together. It is asserted in unqualified terms that the march on that night was physically impossible, and then it is said quite as strongly that if an attack at Bristoe was anticipated it was Porter's duty to start at once—not at 1 o'clock, but immediately—so as to be at least able to give Pope the aid of some part of his command. I do not profess to understand the art of war nor the circumstances that will excuse a subordinate's disobedience of the order of his superior, but I never doubted that "a physical impossibility" of execution would be a defense whether the order contemplated aggressive or defensive operations. And it occurs to me that it was as possible to obey this order if Pope designed an attack as if he apprehended one. If it was a duty to promptly obey in the one case it was also in the other.

In time of actual war, when armies are confronting each other and fighting is imminent, cases are rare in which the orders of the officer supreme in command may be disregarded; and the mere fact that the order is difficult, that it requires great effort, or sacrifice of comfort or convenience, affords no defense whatever for non-compliance with its terms. I have dwelt too long already here. Porter refused obedience to the order of the 27th of August, did it clearly without justifiable cause, and that no disastrous consequences resulted does not relieve him from guilt. For this one act of willful disobedience he merited all the punishment the court awarded.

As the remaining charges depend for support upon the transactions of a single day, August 29, they will not be separately discussed.

Porter's command reached Bristoe at about 10 o'clock on the morning of the 28th. Here Pope detailed to Porter his plan of campaign. At 11 o'clock Pope left, Porter remaining. On this morning Porter sends Burnside another of his cynical dispatches. I have already alluded to it, but I give it now more fully:

My command will soon be up and go into position. Hooker drove Ewell some three miles, and Pope says McDowell has intercepted Longstreet. * * * I hope all goes well near Washington. I think there need be no cause of fear for us. I feel as if on my own way now. * * * More supplies than I supposed on hand. * * * I hope for the best, and my lucky star is always up about my birthday, the 31st, and hope Mac's is up also. You will hear of us soon by way of Alexandria.

Not content with this morning dispatch, at 2 in the afternoon of the same day he sent another, commencing in his usual incisive and critical way:

All that talk about bagging Jackson, &c., was bosh. That enormous gap, Manassas, was left open and the enemy jumped through, and the story of McDowell having cut off Longstreet had no good foundation.

Porter, perhaps, meant Thoroughfare Gap, as Manassas Gap is a gap through the Blue Ridge, distant from Thoroughfare Gap twenty or twenty-five miles, with a chain of mountains and a valley intervening, and no troops had "passed through" it either going or coming. This was, however, but a slight mistake for a man who had insisted that the enemy was on his way to the Shenandoah or Loudoun County.

There is a report—

he continues—

that Jackson is at Centreville, which you can believe or not. * * * I expect the next thing will be a raid on our rear by way of Warrenton pike by Longstreet, who was cut off.

Porter remained at Bristoe all of the 28th, and in what frame of mind we have seen. He feels for his superior a contempt which may be expected to culminate in disobedience. I leave him here to briefly review the situation. That we may understand the events of the 28th and 29th days of August, we must know something of topography, the country in which these movements are being made.

Manassas is at the junction of the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Gap Railroad. Centreville is six miles to the northward, Bristoe four miles, and Warrenton Junction thirteen southwest. Gainesville is eight miles west from Manassas, on the Warrenton pike, which runs from Gainesville northeasterly to Centreville. Groveton is on this pike and about four miles northeast from Gainesville. It will seen from this statement that Groveton is nearly west from Manassas about seven miles. Greenwich is nearly west from Bristoe, distant four miles, and equally distant from the Orange and Alexandria Railroad and the Warrenton pike. It is therefore southwest some six or seven miles from Manassas. I do not pretend exactness, but I am substantially correct in this statement if the maps are reliable.

On August 28th Jackson is in the neighborhood of Groveton, having taken his position there on that morning and the preceding night. Pope is with Hooker's division at Bristoe, Porter at Warrenton Junction, and Banks with his corps to the south and between that and the Rappahannock; McDowell and Sigel are at Gainesville, and Heintzelman and Reno at Greenwich. During the forenoon of the 28th Porter, as I have said, arrived at Bristoe, and Banks took his place at Warrenton Junction. Heintzelman and Reno, leaving Greenwich, followed Jackson by the way of Centreville. McDowell and Sigel moved from Gainesville toward Manassas, and having marched some distance, by order of Pope changed their course toward Centreville. Ricketts's division had been sent to Thoroughfare Gap to intercept at that point Longstreet, who was moving to re-enforce Jackson. He failed to make his mission effective, and fell back to Gainesville. On the evening of this day King's division of McDowell's corps struck the right of Jackson's force on the Warrenton pike between Groveton and Gainesville. Now, on the evening of this day the situation was this: A portion of Pope's command and the troops under Jackson were confronting each other near Groveton; Longstreet was coming to re-enforce Jackson by the way of Thoroughfare Gap, Warrenton, and Gainesville. A battle was imminent.

Now we come to the 29th of August. Porter is still at Bristoe. At sunrise, he says, he received an order dated from headquarters near Bull Run, August 29, 3 a. m., in the following words:

General McDowell has anticipated the retreat of Jackson. Sigel is immediately on the right of McDowell. Kearny and Hooker march to attack the enemy's rear at early dawn. Major-General Pope directs you to move on Centreville at the first dawn of day, &c. * * * It is very important that you should be here (near Bull Run) at a very early hour in the morning. A severe engagement is likely to take place, and your presence is necessary.

This order, Porter says, "suprised him, for it carried him from the field of action;" but he overcame his "surprise" sufficiently to hurry off a dispatch to Burnside, which shows more clearly than ever, if that were possible, the estimate that this corps commander placed upon his commanding officer, who had just informed him that a severe engagement was imminent. He wrote to Burnside:

I shall be off in half an hour, &c. * * * Sigel had a severe fight last night, &c. * * * Banks is at Warrenton Junction, McDowell near Gainesville, Heintzelman and Reno at Centreville, where they marched yesterday, and Pope went to Centreville with the last two as a body-guard, at the time not knowing where was the enemy, when Sigel was fighting within eight miles of him and in sight. Comment is unnecessary. The enormous trains are still rolling on, &c. * * * I hope Mac's at work, and we will soon get ordered out of this. It would seem from proper statements of the enemy that he was wandering around loose, but

I expect they know what they are doing, which is more than any one here or anywhere knows.

Comment is unnecessary, for this language interprets itself. It shows in what mood he began the operations of a day on which a severe engagement was likely to take place. In the very presence of the enemy and under orders to march to the front he expresses his contempt for Pope and his hope that he would soon get out of his command. Under this order Porter moved with his command toward Centreville until it had reached Manassas, when the order was countermanded. During the night before King had fallen back from the Warrenton pike toward Manassas and Ricketts had retired from Gainesville to Bristoe. The situation was now a grave one, for Longstreet, by the withdrawal of these divisions, had a clear road, by way of the Warrenton pike, through Haymarket and Gainesville, to Jackson at Groveton. The necessity for prompt and vigorous measures to prevent Longstreet from effecting a junction with Jackson was apparent. At this point and under these circumstances Pope, by a verbal message, directed Porter to move immediately on Gainesville. This was followed soon after by an order in writing, as follows:

CENTREVILLE, August 29, 1862.

Push forward with your corps and King's division, which you will take with you, upon Gainesville. I am following the enemy down the Warrenton turnpike. Be expeditious or we will lose much.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

This order was as explicit as it was simple. It was supplemented by Porter's knowledge of the importance of the movement. The thunder of the cannon admonished him that the battle was opening on the right. At early dawn his chief had written him that a severe engagement was probable. He knew that Pope was intending an aggressive movement, for Pope writes him, "I am following down the Warrenton pike. Be expeditious or we lose much." But the important question is, was the order obeyed in its letter or its spirit, and did Porter on this day, when in the sound of the guns and in the presence of the enemy and when a battle was being fought, fail to bring his command into action? Did he push forward? He moved at 9 in the morning, and at 11.30 reached Dawkin's Branch, a distance of near five miles and within three miles of Gainesville, and here he halted. His men were fresh. were then, as always, ready for the fray. He had a well-appointed command of near twelve thousand men of both regulars and volunteers. He was directed to make a movement from which great results were expected, but he did not "push forward." He halted; and why? Did he meet the enemy here and engage him? The halt was caused by information from a countryman, who told Griffin "to look out; that a trooper had been taken in front;" and in answer to a question as to what forces were there, he said, "None except a few mounted men."

General Morell met a mounted man (one of our own troopers, I suppose), who informed him that he had just left Gainesville, and that the skirmishers of the enemy to the number of four hundred were there, and that the main body was not far behind. It will not be seriously contended that Porter had knowledge of the contents of General Buford's dispatch at the time of halting. But there were clouds of dust in front and to the right, which he assumed was caused by a force of the enemy moving toward Jackson from Thoroughfare Gap. I take it that it was the duty of Porter to know whether the enemy was in his front, and to take prompt measures to ascertain the facts. General Thomas L. Rosser, of Stuart's Confederate cavalry, if his evidence is not a lie, was at this time engaged in manufacturing dust by dragging brush tied to horses' tails along the dusty road. His integrity is not assailed nor is the truthfulness of his statements challenged, so far as I can learn, by any witness. The very object of Rosser's work was to create the impression that troops were in motion. If Longstreet was then occupying the ground, why this ruse? But I will have occasion to call attention to this evidence hereafter. It is insisted that the forward movement was suspended in some way by the arrival of General McDowell; but General Griffin, who was in command of the leading brigade, says that before McDowell appeared the column was halted, and Porter said to the officers present that he had a communication to read them; that after it was read they went back about three hundred yards to a hill, where a battery had been posted, and "was there some time before McDowell rode up." The arrival of McDowell and the "joint order," therefore, had nothing to do with the halt. Here it was the joint order to McDowell and Porter was received about which so much has been said. I give the order entire. It reads:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Centreville, August 29, 1862.

You will please move forward with your joint command towards Gainesville. I sent General Porter written orders to that effect an hour and a half ago. Heintzelman, Sigel, and Reno are moving on Warrenton turnpike, and must now be not far from Gainesville. I desire that, as soon as communication is established between this force and your own, the whole command shall halt. It may be necessary to fall back behind Bull Run, at Centreville, to-night. I presume it will be so on account of our supplies. I have sent no orders of any description to Ricketts, and none to interfere in any way with the movements of McDowell's troops, except what I sent by his aide-de-camp last night, which were to hold his position on the Warrenton pike until the troops from here should fall on the enemy's flank and rear. I do not even know Ricketts's position, as I have not been able to find out where General McDowell was until a late hour this morning. General McDowell will take immediate steps to communicate with General Ricketts, and instruct him to join the other divisions of his corps as soon as practicable. If any considerable advantages are to be gained by departing from this order it will not be strictly carried out. One thing must be held in view—that the troops must occupy a position from which they can reach Bull Run to-night or by morning. The indications are that the whole force of the enemy is moving in this direction at a pace that will bring them here by to-morrow night or the next day. My own headquarters will for the present be with Heintzelman's corps or at this place.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

Generals McDOWELL and PORTER.

It will be observed that this order directs the movement to continue towards Gainesville. I repeat its language:

You will please move forward with your command toward Gainesville. I sent General Porter written orders to that effect an hour and a half ago.

The command was to halt only when communication was established between it and the force about Groveton. That communication could only be had by moving forward to the front and right.

The board of officers—the West Point board—assert that when McDowell appeared at the head of the column he arrested the forward movement of Porter by saying:

Porter, you are too far out; this is no place to fight a battle.

In order to establish McDowell's responsibility for doing so they appear to ignore entirely the testimony of that officer before the court-martial, which a most searching cross-examination was unable to shake.

McDowell, before the court-martial, swore that at that time a few dropping shots were fired in the front; that "the sound of battle seemed to be at its height on the right and toward Groveton;" that the question with him was "how soonest, within the limit fixed by General Pope," Porter's force "could be applied against the enemy;" that he saw the dust flying above the trees on the turnpike, indicating the passage of troops down toward Groveton; that he said to Porter, "You put your force in here and I will take mine (King's division) up the Sudley road;" that he left "with the understanding and belief that he (Porter) would put in his force at that point;" that during the conversation Porter said, "We cannot go in there anywhere without getting into a fight;" and that he (McDowell) replied, "That is what we came for." Before this conversation McDowell had communicated to Porter the Buford dispatch.

All this evidence, with the exception of the Buford dispatch, appears to have been considered of no importance by the board of officers; for they ignore it, and assert that McDowell said, "Porter, you are too far out; this is no place to fight a battle;" something that McDowell does not admit even under the ingenious cross-questioning of Porter's counsel. I do not question the veracity of those who swore that McDowell made use of the expression; but it will be difficult, I think, to make the country believe that General McDowell is not to be believed upon oath, or that he, too, should be added to the long list of victims necessary to be convicted of ignorance or perjury in order to acquit and vindicate Fitz-John Porter. Unless his testimony is absolutely worthless, he gave the distinct order to Porter to put his forces in; and he left with the belief that he would do so. To this order Porter responded by taking up a defensive position and ordering his men out of sight and under cover. Whatever may have been said by McDowell to Porter, the interview was of the shortest; for in a few minutes McDowell galloped back to his own command, directed King's division, with Ricketts's following, to the Sudley Springs road, and marched toward the sound of the battle near Groveton on the turnpike.

His absence left Porter still with his own command and Piatt's brigade, numbering certainly not less than ten thousand men, and amounting possibly to two or three thousand more. If the responsibility rested upon McDowell before his departure, I imagine that there can be no dispute about it resting upon Porter afterward. Porter, at all events, seems to have acted upon the assumption that he was solely responsible from that time, and all of his orders and his acts indictate very clearly that he so considered it. If McDowell swore to the truth before the court-martial he ordered Porter while he (McDowell) was in command to "put his forces in," and that he left believing that it would be done. This order was disobeyed. If after McDowell left Porter was solely responsible, the evidence shows that there was no effort worthy of the name to go to the aid of Pope, fighting on Porter's right front, and there was no attempt to develop the enemy in his own front. The movement upon Gainesville had come to a sudden and ignominious stand-still at the first sight of the enemy; the troops of the leading division were, to use the language of Porter's order, "put out of sight" and "in ambuscade," and from his headquarters at Bethlehem church, two miles from the front of his column, General Porter, with two orders to push forward, listened to the sound of cannon off toward Groveton, and contented himself with hiding his men away and making preparations to fall back to Manassas Junction.

Up to 2 o'clock, or for two hours after McDowell's departure and his order to "put your force in," Porter certainly had no evidence of any considerable force in his own immediate front; and during all that time the sound of the fighting on his right front was heavy and distinctly heard by his skirmishers; yet he remained inactive. We have already heard what Griffin said about the force; and Butterfield, who commanded the brigade that appears to have followed Griffin, stated before the court-martial that he had not the impression when he first arrived on the ground that the enemy in their front was in any considerable force, but that "subsequently" they made demonstrations that led him to believe "they had a force there." Some of the officers and men on the skirmish line did not think much of the force in their front up to 2 o'clock at least; and it is the merest guesswork to say that even the force which Buford reported as having passed through Gainesville at 9 o'clock had moved down the Manassas road and was confronting Porter.

At 2 o'clock, however, Colonel Marshall, in command of Porter's skirmishers, reported the head of a large column, and an hour afterward he says they drove in his skirmishers, and they kept coming down until 10 o'clock at night. I do not question the accuracy of Marshall's testimony, but from all the evidence I can gather beyond his own statement, and excluding confederate testimony, there is nothing to justify the impression that a large force was in his front. I do not believe that his skirmishers could have been driven in without a sharp fight, for I have a high opinion of the men of the Fifth Corps. But there is nothing to show that any loss was incurred that day by Porter's command, except two men killed by one of the four shots fired at his column early in the day and his own dispatch to McDowell that he had "lost a few men by infantry firing." Other officers of Marshall's regiment differ with him, it seems to me, in his estimate of the forces; but so far as I can ascertain they all agree in regard to the severe fighting on their right front toward Groveton. Captain Bunell, Captain Gecke, Sergeant Mohle, and others, were on the skirmish line, and they are entitled to equal consideration with their field officers.

Whatever the force in Porter's front (and I do not think it at all material in judging his conduct), no effort was made to develop it, attack it, employ it in any way; but possessed with the idea of Pope's incompetency, he employed himself in making arrangements to withdraw and stand upon the defensive. The four cannon-shots and the skirmish fire of the rebel cavalry had evidently made a profound impression upon Porter's mind, and they paved the way for what he did afterward.

On this point the testimony of General Sturgis is of importance. He reported to Porter with Piatt's brigade in the forenoon, and halted his men in the rear of Sykes's division, whose men were in the road all the day, in column, waiting, and then naturally went to the front to see what was going on. He saw the skirmishers, saw the "glint" of a gun as it came into position, and saw four cannon-shots fired. (These shots can be none other than the "few shots" referred to in General Lee's report when he speaks of their causing the withdrawal of the enemy.) General Porter then beckoned Sturgis. He rode up; and then and there Porter ordered him to take Piatt's brigade back to Manassas Junction, some three miles, "and to take up a defensive position, inasmuch as the firing seemed to be receding on our right." This order Sturgis swears was issued to him at 1 o'clock, and it simply is cumulative proof to show that Porter, the moment he came into the presence of the enemy, had no thought or intention of acting aggressively. Sturgis moved to the rear with his brigade, and on the way back saw Ricketts's division moving on the Sudley Springs road, following King's division, which McDowell was guiding toward the sound of the cannon near Groveton, and, to use his own language—

It struck me as strange that we should be going back, while they were apparently going in the direction of the firing, off to their right.

Sturgis was a stranger to the ground, the troops, and the situation; but his soldierly instincts told him that it was "strange," at least to be marching to the rear while other troops were pushing toward the sound of the battle. His command went back to the junction, but late in the afternoon was ordered forward again, reaching Bethlehem church about dark, where it remained. This order, which Sturgis swears could not have been issued beyond 2 o'clock, the board of officers insist must have been issued after 5, because it was about that hour that Kearny attacked on Jackson's left; and the sound of the firing near Sudley suggested to Porter at Bethlehem church that Sigel was falling back or had been driven back. If this was true, the board say, Porter "must instantly do what he could to avert disaster;" and so they say he issued the order to Morell "to push over to the aid of Sigel and strike in his rear," and at the same time sent Sturgis to the rear with Piatt's brigade to take up a defensive position. This, of course, places Porter in the attitude of an alert and active officer, preparing for any emergency; but in order to get him this additional vindication it becomes necessary for them to question the intelligence and veracity of General Sturgis, which they do not hesitate to do. The court-martial and President Lincoln have been condemned by the board, General McDowell's testimony has been ignored as worthless, and of course General Sturgis must not stand in the way of the vindication of Porter. Unless the testimony of Sturgis, like that of McDowell, is stupidly ignorant or willfully false, he was ordered to the rear to take up a defensive position before 2 o'clock, when the battle was raging on the right and when King's and Ricketts's divisions were pushing to the front on the Sudley road under the direction of McDowell. This, too, was before Marshall had communicated the presence of any large force in his front and when Porter had no knowledge of such force save the presence of cavalry and the artillery that fired the four shots, which appeared to have made such an impression upon him that he hesitated no longer about taking the preliminary steps to falling back. This is what the board say was "saving the Union army from disaster."

Porter, having determined that no forward movement should be made by his command, went back to Bethlehem church, two miles from the head of his column, shortly after he had ordered Sturgis back; and from that point he received and issued his orders, judging, or attempting to judge, by the sound of the cannon whether the hard-pressed troops on his right were holding their own or falling back. He appears to have had but little difficulty in convincing himself that they were falling back, for he at once began sending dispatches to McDowell and King, preparing the way for his withdrawal, and making statements of what he had tried to do, that, in the light of the testimony, are simply absurd. He sent one dispatch to Morell "to push over to the aid of Sigel," but he at once countermanded it, and the board justify him in doing so on the ground that he might have encountered twenty thousand of the enemy. This discovery they make from confederate sources, for at that time even Marshall, upon whom Porter relied for his information, placed the force in the front at no larger than a brigade. He sent another dispatch, in which he said:

Generals McDOWELL and KING: I find it impossible to communicate by crossing the woods to Groveton. * * * The enemy are in great force on this road, and as they appear to have driven our forces back, that force of the enemy having advanced and ours retired, I have determined to withdraw to Manassas.

And again:

Generals McDOWELL and KING: I have been wandering over the woods, and failed to get a communication to you. * * * How goes the battle? It seems to go to our rear.

And again:

The firing on my right has so far retired that, as I cannot advance and have failed to get over to you except by the route taken by King, I shall withdraw to Manassas.

Judging from these dispatches, Porter at the head of the whole corps had been making repeated and vigorous efforts to reach the left of McDowell's or King's command or of Pope's left, and had failed. He asserts that he could not advance, when I have shown that he made no effort to do so; and the frequent repetition of his favorite expression about "wandering over the woods" had no existence save in his active imagination.

The only attempt, so far as I can ascertain, made to reach out to the right is described by Morell and Griffin as having occurred early in the afternoon; and an examination of their testimony will show that it was feebly attempted and speedily abandoned by Porter's order. At all events, during that long summer afternoon, with the infantry fighting between Pope's force and the enemy plainly visible from Porter's skirmish line and with the artillery booming all day long, the commander of the Fifth Corps permitted his men to remain inactive, except to order them to march to the rear or to prepare to do so.

It has been urged with zeal that long before Fitz-John Porter arrived within striking distance of Gainesville or the Warrenton pike Longstreet was on the ground and occupied a position in Porter's front; that Longstreet had a superior force, and that an attack or a forward movement by Porter could only have resulted in defeat. Great emphasis is laid on this point. I am not willing to admit that Longstreet was on the ground then, nor that his presence there with a superior force would excuse the "masterly inactivity of Porter."

Let us see when Longstreet did arrive. I quote from a carefully considered argument by General Cox on this point:

In view of the difficulties which surround the case, it is very desirable to fix some conclusive and satisfactory starting-point in determining the very important questions of time on the 29th. It would seem that it may best be found in the arrival of Heintzelman's corps on the field and in the movement of Poe's brigade around Jackson's left flank. The very fact that this was the opposite extreme of the field from Porter, and that the hours are fixed without reference to him, makes the testimony disinterested as well as trustworthy.

Heintzelman came on the field about 10 in the morning, and tells what was then going on, including the movement of Kearny's division, in which was Poe's brigade. This is fixed by the entry made at the very hour in Heintzelman's diary, and is accepted by everybody. Poe is thus shown to be right in his statement of the time of his effort to outflank Jackson's left. He deployed between the Mathews house and the Sudley road after 10 o'clock, and moved forward, crossing Bull Run, and so far succeeded in his purpose as to create confusion and dismay for a time in Jackson's rear.

This can not have been earlier than half past 10, considering the character of the movement, and Porter's counsel recognize this fact by dating Poe's position near Sudley church on the map accompanying their argument at 11 o'clock. Here, then, we have a fixed point, about which there is no dispute. Let us hold fast to it.

General J. E. B. Stuart, in the memorandum attached to his report, says he was there when this attack was made; that he gave the directions for some of his artillery and troops to resist it; names the officers of both arms, one of whom was mortally wounded; states the time as about 10, and tells us that after the flurry was over he started to find Longstreet. Mark that this was contemporaneous evidence, both Heintzelman's diary and Stuart's report, and made without the remotest reference to Porter. It is corroborated by witnesses from both the confederate and the national armies in the most abundant way, but it does not need corroboration. If we know anything about that field, we know that Stuart started from the scene of Poe's attack to find Longstreet not earlier than half past 10 o'clock, and probably as late as 11. He took with him a considerable body of cavalry, Robertson's brigade at least, and rode by way of Catharpin Valley around Jackson's rear, thence across the country to Gainesville and out toward Thoroughfare Gap, meeting the head of Longstreet's column between Gainesville and Haymarket. Adopting, therefore, the time fixed by Porter and his counsel as that of Poe's affair on our extreme right (11 o'clock), taking also into account the ordinary rate at which a large body of horse would move in marching as Stuart marched and looking to the distance they had to go, it is quite within bounds to say it took Stuart an hour and a half to get to the point named, and that therefore the head of Longstreet's column was half-way between Haymarket and Gainesville at half past 12, certainly not earlier than noon. They were then two hours' ordinary march from Jackson's right at the Douglass house, and it would take forced marching to reach there in an hour and a half. It would seem proven, therefore, that they could not and did not make connection with Jackson before half past 1.

The simple chain of evidence which leads to this conclusion seems decisive, and it best harmonizes a host of other facts. It is also most in accord with the best contemporaneous evidence of other sorts on both sides.

Remember that Lee had no cavalry but what was with Jackson; that Longstreet had Ricketts's division in front of him, opposing his advance during the evening before, and had no reason to suppose his road was clear in the morning; that he must have skirmished, nay that he did skirmish, carefully forward, as Hood's report shows, and that Cadmus Wilcox, who came by the other gap, says in his official report that he reached the junction of the roads west of Haymarket at half past 9, and found Longstreet's column just passing there. This in itself makes absurd the Buford dispatch, on which so much has been built by Porter, and destroys it, except as evidence that Buford wrote it at half past 9 upon mistaken information. While Hood says that he himself got on the field earlier, he puts the time when the whole of Longstreet's column arrived at 2 o'clock. These and many other collateral things go to establish the fact as above stated.

This evidence ought to be considered conclusive. Here is the memorandum of Stuart made at the time. Here the time when a movement is begun is not fixed by the mere memory of a witness after lapse of years, but an unerring and living landmark. Heintzelman's diary—evidence equally certain—corroborates that of Stuart. Take the time now fixed with absolute certainty; take the movements unquestionably made after that time and before Longstreet appears, and his arrival could not have occurred before 2 o'clock. Add to the facts the indisputable one sworn to by Prosser, and all doubt is removed. If Longstreet was present by 10 o'clock in the morning, why is it that Stuart found it necessary to brush up a cloud of dust to deter a further advance of our troops. If Longstreet's twenty-five thousand men were marching on this road or on that quarter of the field, there was no need for additional means for raising dust. It is clear that this ruse was employed because Longstreet was not up, and to give Stuart time to hurry him forward. This evidence can neither be ignored nor laughed out of court. Stuart in his official report fully corroborates the statements of General Prosser, and Chaplain Landstreet swears he viewed the proceeding with interest because he knew its purpose. That 2 o'clock is as early as Longstreet could have arrived is a conclusion inevitable when all the evidence is fairly considered. There are differences of recollection on this point, I know; it could not be otherwise when witnesses have nothing, after years are passed, but unsupported memory upon which to depend.

But suppose I am mistaken as to the time, and Longstreet was actually in front of Porter, what then? Did Porter know it, and was his forward movement stopped because of it? All he could have known were the facts reported by the trooper and by General Buford's dispatch. If these were true, the seventeen regiments of infantry and five hundred cavalry passing through Gainesville made a force very little superior to his own. He was instructed by Pope to push to Gainesville; that Heintzelman and Reno were moving on the Warrenton pike and were then not far from Gainesville. McDowell pointed out the ground and commanded him "to go in there;" and, whether confronted by Longstreet or not, strict obedience under the circumstances was his duty. He did not obey, and for this act he was rightfully convicted.

But assuming that Porter was not under orders to advance, was it still his duty under the circumstances to have made an attack. The West Point board say that "there was nothing in the military situation that required him to attack without orders, and, in short, he had no choice as a faithful soldier but to do what he did."

This is high praise from so distinguished a board, but they seem to have forgotten that history is full of instances where officers situated substantially as Porter was have attacked with great results. It certainly is not necessary for me to call attention to the great Desaix on the field of Marengo to show what a single division can do when led by a man thoroughly in earnest and thoroughly devoted to his chief. Ordered the day before by Bonaparte to move in a direction that, as it happened, took him away from the battle-field, Desaix halted the next morning at the first sound of the cannon, and in disobedience of orders turned the head of his column in that direction. Courier after courier had been dispatched to direct him to the field that was to settle the fate of Italy for years, but long before they reached him he was rapidly marching in response to an appeal which no soldier disregards. At 3 o'clock, when he reached the field, the French were routed and Melas had sent dispatches over Europe announcing his victory. Some advised retreat, but Desaix said, "It is time to win another battle," and he charged at the head of his division, supported by the cavalry. He fell, but the battle was restored, the Austrians routed, and Bonaparte continued his great career unchecked.

At Waterloo, Grouchy, like Porter, failed to appreciate the situation, and the historian Thiers sums it up tersely and truly when he says of Desaix's action:

Happy inspiration of a lieutenant equally intelligent and attached! If fifteen years afterward the first consul had found a Desaix on the field of Waterloo he would have preserved the empire.

Mr. Speaker, suppose the gallant and distinguished Sheridan or the impetuous Custer had been here in command of ten thousand to twelve thousand as courageous troops as ever charged upon bayonet points or parks of artillery; that they had heard the roar of artillery and the unmistakable sound of battle in which their comrades were engaged and the cause of the Union was at stake, would either of these heroes, sir, have hesitated to attack the enemy? Would they have taken no part for a long and weary afternoon to help the battle in which their companions-in-arms were struggling with the enemy for victory? Let us reverse the positions, sir, and put "Stonewall" Jackson or the chivalric Stuart in the command of ten thousand confederates; does any living man suppose they would have parked their artillery or stacked their guns and remained inactive or would have failed to respond to the call to the field made by the bellowing artillery? Ah, Mr. Speaker, suppose McClellan had been in command instead of Pope, would Porter have hesitated, and doubted, and stood still? To be sure not.

After Porter had stood still from 11 o'clock until the evening of the day, after he had disobeyed the order directing him to move toward Gainesville, and after he had failed in every way to answer to the call to battle, he is given the following peremptory order. This order the West Point board, with some degree of reluctance, are constrained to admit required obedience. The admission, however, is qualified by the characteristic qualification that it was based "upon conditions essentially erroneous and upon expectations that could not possibly be realized." This was the now famous 4.30 p. m. order, and is in these words:

AUGUST 29—4.30 p. m.

Major-General PORTER: Your line of march brings you on the enemy's right flank. I desire you to push forward into action at once on the enemy's flank, and, if possible, on his rear, keeping your right in communication with General Reynolds. The enemy is massed in the woods in front of us, but can be shelled out as soon as you engage their flank. Keep heavy reserves and use your batteries, keeping well closed to your right all the time. In case you are obliged to fall back, do so to your right and rear, so as to keep you in close communication with the right wing.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

This order the board of officers say did not reach Porter until 6.30 p. m.; that Porter, upon its receipt, at once sent Colonel Locke to General Morell with orders to make the attack, and then he rode to the front himself; that upon his arrival Morell was about ready to attack, but darkness had come on; that the contest at Groveton had spent its force, so that Morell's attack could give it no aid; and that "Porter wisely ordered the preparations to cease."

In order to establish the first proposition and still further vindicate Porter the board again sacrifice the reputation of several witnesses, asserting that one (Captain Pope, I suppose) had "made statements and admissions inconsistent with and contradictory of his former testimony;" that another had confessed (overawed, I suppose, by the august presence of the board) that "he had deliberately made false statements;" and that the attempt by another person to support these already discredited witnesses resulted in so complete a breaking down under cross-examination that his testimony was entitled to no weight. With this start but little difficulty is encountered in arriving at the conclusion of the board that the peremptory order to attack reached Porter as late as 6.30 p. m.

Captain Pope, who carried it, swore before the court-martial that it was placed in Porter's hands by 5 o'clock. But, admitting that it reached him an hour later, and admitting that Longstreet, with twenty-five thousand men, was there at that hour, which Porter could not have known at the time even if true, was he justified in not attacking; would the attack, as stated by the board, have been a "blunder" and a "crime," or had he by his own unauthorized or unsoldierly acts placed his command in such a position that the execution of the order would have been impossible?

Pope, when he issued it, believed and had a right to believe that Porter had so obeyed former peremptory orders that he was in a position to obey this one promptly; and the only reason why he could not do so was his own unauthorized action and unsoldierly conduct in marching his command to the rear and in abandoning his advanced position.

The sun set on the 29th of August, 1862, at 6 o'clock and 36 minutes, and the board, as will be seen, place the receipt of the order suspiciously near to that time, on the theory, I suppose, that sunset and darkness are synonymous terms. It was received by Porter at Bethlehem church, two miles from the front, and at once forwarded to Morell, with orders (so the board say) to attack; that Porter at once rode to the front; that Morell had about completed his preparations for a reconnaissance in force under a previous order, but that darkness had already come on. If this statement is true, and Porter displayed no more energy in riding the two miles to the front of his command than he had done during the day, it is possible that, as the board say, "darkness was coming on." The fact that he failed to communicate the purport of the order to Sykes, who was with him at the time of its receipt and had been with him all day, was so contrary to Porter's usual custom when he received orders from Pope, that the suspicion is at once aroused that he intended to delay its execution. If, however, he rode to the front rapidly, there can be no question but that there was ample time to convert the reconnaissance which Morell was ordered to make into a real, powerful, and well-sustained fact.

Lee, in speaking of the battle on his left (our right), said that it continued until 9 o'clock. Officers on our own side sustain this assertion, and the experience of every man in this House recalls the hour or two between sunset and dark on a summer evening that makes it possible to move about easily and readily. What the result would have been had an attack been made even at that late hour is, of course, speculation, and I shall not follow the board of officers into that limitless field. The mere presence of Porter's column early in the day had caused Lee to detach from his left and center to meet it; and no one, not even a distinguished board of officers, is authorized in predicting terrible disaster and defeat in the event of an attack.

Sykes, who was with Porter when the order was received, in response to a question before the court-martial as to how far his division had retired before its reception, replied, "I don't know the precise distance. I was in support of Morell's division that was under the fire of the enemy." Griffin, before the court-martial, in answer to a question as to "whether he knew of any orders having been given by Porter that day to attack the enemy," answered, "I know that Morell received one somewhere near sundown." He was then asked, "What took place?" and replied, "We had started back toward Manassas when the order came down the road. The orderly was stopped by Colonel Warren, who read the order. We faced our command about and immediately started back. We were probably a mile and a half or two miles from the position referred to in my previous testimony as occupied by the battery. After I faced my brigade about I rode ahead to General Morell, who had received the order, and asked him if he was going to attack. He replied, 'It was too late, and the order had been given under a wrong impression.'"

If this order spoken of by Griffin refers to the "reconnaissance" that the board say Porter ordered Morell to make, it shows that before sundown the brigade that was in advance in the morning had marched to the rear from one to two miles before its receipt, and that Morell did not make any preparation to carry it out, as the board say he did. If it refers to the 4.30 order, it shows that Porter in open daylight and while the fighting was the severest and the heaviest on his right, had carried out his threat to withdraw to Manassas and was in march for that point. In either event he had abandoned his position in the presence of the enemy without a fight and deliberately and designedly moved to the rear. If any troops, even skirmishers, were left in the front while this movement to the rear was in progress I cannot find the evidence for it, and the reoccupation of the abandoned places does not lessen or mitigate the offense.

The truth is there was no intent to attack at any time during the day, and there was the intent expressed and acted upon from 1 o'clock to fall back at the first opportunity or excuse. At 1 o'clock Sturgis had been sent as far to the rear as Manassas Junction, and between 5 and 6 o'clock Sykes was moving in the same direction, followed by Griffin, at all events, who, as he had the advance in the morning, doubtless had the rear in the afternoon, thus leaving nothing between him and the enemy. Porter had made up his mind that Pope was being defeated, judging from the sound of the artillery alone, and he ordered the retrograde movement; but the receipt of the 4.30 order and perhaps other information undeceived him, when he recalled Sturgis's and Piatt's brigades from Manassas Junction, faced Sykes and Griffin to the front, and reoccupied the positions which he had abandoned.

The board of officers, however, justify him—glorify him, indeed—for they say "he saved the Union army from disaster on that day," and "that it is perfectly clear that he had no thought whatever of retreating from the enemy."

What the result would have been had Porter done his duty no one can tell. A well-informed historian, Comte de Paris, in his first edition of his history of our civil war, says:

His (Porter's) attack, therefore, could not have produced the results upon which the commander-in-chief had counted. But neither the impossibility of executing to the letter the order of the latter, nor even the instructions which McDowell may have given him during the day, afford any excuse for his having remained so long inactive in the presence of the enemy with two fine divisions while a great battle was being fought in his vicinity. In short, if the road he had to follow was barred against him—if, therefore, he could not cut the enemy's army in two and secure its defeat—it is equally certain that a vigorous attack made by him upon Longstreet's right would have drawn out all the forces of this general, and, by freeing the rest of the Union line, would probably have prevented the reverse which the latter sustained at the close of the day. We can not avoid, therefore, blaming his inaction at such time and under such circumstances.

This indifference on the part of Porter to the cannon's appeal, the manner in which he interpreted the orders of superiors, and the tardiness with which these orders reached him, were the inevitable consequences of the confusion we have already referred to in the general movement of the army.

I am aware this statement has been materially modified in the later edition of this work, but what considerations induced the revision I do not know. I only know that I believe the original statement to be correct in matter of fact and of opinion.

But, sir, the West Point board attempt to belittle the engagements of the 29th of August; that there was in fact no battle on that day, but only an artillery duel and a little skirmishing. Pardon me for giving evidence to the contrary. Pope, in his official report, says:

About 8 p. m. the greater portion of the field of battle was occupied by our army. Nothing was heard of General Porter up to that time, and his forces took no part whatever in the action, but were suffered by him to lie idle on their arms within sight and sound of the battle during the whole day. So far as I know he made no effort whatever to comply with my orders or to take any part in the action. I do not hesitate to say that if he had discharged his duty as became a soldier under the circumstances, and had made a vigorous attack on the enemy, as he was expected and directed to do, at any time up to 8 o'clock that night, we should have utterly crushed or captured the larger portion of Jackson's force before he could have been by any possibility sufficiently re-enforced to have made an effective resistance. I did not myself feel for a moment that it was necessary for me, having given General Porter an order to march toward the enemy in a particular direction, to send him in addition specific orders to attack; it being his clear duty, and in accordance with every military precept, to have brought his forces into action wherever he encountered the enemy when a furious battle with that enemy was raging during the whole day in his immediate presence.

Sigel, who commanded the First Corps, says:

In the course of about four hours, from 6.30 to 10.30 in the morning, our whole infantry force was engaged. At the last hour the enemy threw forward masses of troops, which were driven back, &c. * * * Schenck's division was then engaged. At this critical moment Kearny arrived on the field and deployed to our right, while Reno came to our support. Scarcely were these troops in position when the contest began with renewed vigor and vehemence, &c. * * *

Generals Carr, Grover, Heintzelman, Schurz, and Kearny, all present with commands, speak of the "battle" of that day. Confederate officers and contemporaneous history confirm and render indisputable this fact. Greeley, in his "American Conflict," has Sigel, with Schurz and Schenck's and Milroy's commands, fully engaged by 7 o'clock on this morning, and the fight continues until 2 o'clock p. m. The author proceeds:

At 4.30 p. m., McDowell being announced, Pope sent a peremptory order for Porter to go into action on the enemy's right, turning it if possible; and an hour later, presuming his order obeyed, directed Reno and Heintzelman to attack the enemy, which was gallantly obeyed.

Here Grover's brigade, of Hooker's division, made a most admirable bayonet charge, breaking two of the enemy's lines and penetrating the third.

Pollard's Lost Cause, a standard confederate authority, says:

On August 29, at 10 o'clock a. m., the artillery of the Union forces upon the right of Jackson's line * * *. The Federal Army was evidently concentrating upon Jackson with the design of overwhelming him before the arrival of Longstreet.

It is not necessary to pursue this line of proofs further, for all contemporaneous history records a battle, and a severe one, on the 29th day of August. This Congress will not—it dare not—pronounce all this record either a lie or a mistake.

I feel that I have detained the House too long already, although I have given but a condensed and imperfect statement of this now celebrated case. I must leave the discussion of the details here. Whether the charges are sustained an intelligent public will judge, uninfluenced, I expect, by the action of this House. We may pass this bill, put General Porter on the retired-list and make him the pensioner of the nation, but we can not recast the history of those sad August days or the ideas of a loyal people. It will stand for all time as the judgment of the brave men who periled their lives on these battle-fields that Fitz-John Porter was fairly tried and justly condemned by a court of his peers for willful disobedience of orders and misbehavior in the presence of the enemies of his country. The question presents itself again, why these crimes? Was he a coward? No, he was a man of undoubted physical courage. In commenting upon his motives I do not wish to employ epithets nor speak harshly. I do not for a moment believe he wished the ultimate triumph of the rebellion. What then?

The answer, if not already given, has been foreshadowed. He idolized McClellan; he felt outraged by that general's humiliation; hated Pope, and was willing to stand by and see him crucified. He hoped Pope would prove a failure; he prayed for it and predicted it. By the discomfiture of Pope he believed his former chief and comrade would profit. Feeling thus, is it surprising that he stood sullenly by and let the battle go on without rendering aid? Is it surprising he refused to execute the orders of a superior of whose courage and capacity he spoke with contempt? That he was not supporting his new commander seemed to be within the knowledge of the great and good Lincoln before these charges were made.

In Draper's Civil War it is said General McClellan himself has told us what were Mr. Lincoln's impressions as to the Army at that time:

The President informed me that he had reason to believe that the Army of the Potomac was not cheerfully co-operating with and supporting General Pope, and now asked me, as a special favor, to use my influence in correcting this state of things. The President, who was much moved, asked me to telegraph to Fitz-John Porter or some other of my friends and try to do away with any feeling that might exist, adding that I could rectify the evil and that no one else could.

In consequence of this urgent appeal to him McClellan sent to Fitz-John Porter his dispatch of September 1:

I ask of you, for my sake, that of the country, and the old Army of the Potomac, that you and all of my friends will lend the fullest and most cordial co-operation to General Pope in all the operations now going on, &c.

This tells the whole story. Two days only after the events of the 29th of August he is implored by McClellan to give what his oath, his soldierly honor, and his manhood required him to yield without exhortation from any one—co-operation and cheerful support to his superior officer. That such a request was deemed necessary speaks volumes. He was disloyal to Pope. On the 15th of December he admitted it to William Blair Lord, a reporter of this House. He said: "I was not loyal to Pope; there is no denying that." This is the key to his whole conduct. This disloyalty bore its harvest of crime and blood. It probably brought disaster to our arms, protracted the war, increased the woe and agony of the loyal, and added many a name to the list of the dead.

Sir, I have now given the reasons why I believed it my duty to protest against the passage of this bill. My duty has been performed, uninfluenced, I hope, by passion or prejudice or ill-will, and here I leave the case.

Congress may restore Fitz-John Porter to the Army, but it can not vindicate him; for an enlightened, conscientious, and patriotic people have pronounced against him the irreversible decree of guilty.

During the delivery of the foregoing speech, at the conclusion of one hour,

The CHAIRMAN said: The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] has expired.

Mr. MCADOO addressed the Chair.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask that my colleagne's time be extended.

A MEMBER. How long?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], who will be next recognized, that he is willing to yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I thank the gentleman very kindly. I certainly shall be pleased, if the opportunity should occur, to return the compliment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] is recognized, and yields thirty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, resumed and concluded his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has thirty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, as a representative of the State of New Jersey on the floor of this House I feel that I should be recreant to my duty if I did not on behalf of one of her honored citizens, General Fitz-John Porter, say a few words in advocacy of this bill. An humble civilian, and a young one at that, it may seem presumptuous for me to take part in this great warfare of words among the contending brigadiers and thunder-voiced sons of Mars.

In the first place I desire to take notice of some remarks made yesterday by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE]. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> I do not wish to reflect upon the gentlemen composing the board, and I am not going to do it; but what I have told you is true. Senator Randolph got the names of the men composing the court and sent them down to Willard's Hotel to be submitted to gentlemen pressing the case, to know whether they would be satisfactory or not, and they agreed upon the gentlemen who did constitute the court.
> Schofield was aspiring to be the President of this great country; Randolph carried New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania in his breeches pocket——

Sir, I have heard it said outside of this House that by the peculiar methods of "soap" the State of Indiana was at one time carried in the pockets of a particular gentleman; but I thank God that the State which I in part represent on this floor has never been carried in the breeches pocket or any other pocket of any man, living or dead. So far as Senator Randolph is concerned, in the State in which he was born, the State which he represented with so much honor on the floor of the adjoining Chamber, and among his neighbors and his friends he never was accused of doing by indirection what an honest, frank, open, honorable, and manly man would not do by direct methods. He has passed to join the illustrious dead, but his memory is still green and fragrant in the State which he loved and honored. I do not know and I can not conceive upon what evidence the gentleman makes the assertion; but I do not believe it to be true, and I am constrained in charity to believe that the gentleman has been misinformed in making it.

So far as this case is concerned I shall not enter into an argument as to military details. I prefer in a fair and manly way to take a general view of this case from the standpoint of a civilian, and endeavor to find out what is just and right in the matter. And when we come to review this court-martial, when we come to pass upon its judgment, I think it is pertinent to inquire as to the time when they made their decision. Was it a time when cold and exact justice was being done, or was it a time when passion sat upon the bench and prejudice was the advocate? At a time of civil strife, in the midst of warring factions, when partisanship ruled the day, on the very field of battle, as you might say, this decision was made which stamped an honorable man, an upright and conservative soldier, as a traitor to his country. We are not bound by the injustice of that decision. We are trying this case, as it were, de novo.

I think it is but right in these times of peace, when the passions of that unfortunate strife have cooled, when men's judgments are sober, that the finding of this court-martial should be reviewed by us, the representatives of the sovereign people. As to the finding itself, I ask attention in the first place to its severity in the light of after events. It can not be denied even by gentlemen on the other side of this House that had Fitz-John Porter carried out those orders the entire corps of the Federal army which he commanded would have been annihilated and destroyed, and therefore he was guilty, if guilty at all, of merely a technical disobedience of orders.

Mr. STEELE. I do deny it most emphatically; and I want to say that if our army was victorious on the night of that 29th of August without the aid of this corps, what logic is there in supposing they could not have made that victory a rout if this corps had come in?

Mr. MCADOO. I answer the gentleman from Indiana by saying that according to the testimony of General Longstreet and the testimony of others who commanded the confederate troops, had Porter advanced to carry out the preposterous order of General Pope he must have been annihilated.

I ask attention, as I said, to the severity of the sentence of the court. I will bring to bear upon the finding of that court the well-known maxim, "False in one, false in all." I say here to-day to gentlemen on the other side, that there are two findings of that court which were demonstrated then, as they are now, beyond peradventure or doubt, to have been false. One of the charges made against General Porter was misbehavior, under, I think, the fifty-second article of war—"shameful retreat!" This honorable court-martial—this court-martial whose finding we must not question or investigate even for the purpose of doing justice—this court-martial, without a particle of testimony, by a mere exercise of their imagination, as we must assume, found that General Porter had shamefully retreated, when the fact was that he had not moved from his position, but held it to the safety of General Pope himself.

I ask attention also to another finding. I submit to gentlemen on the other side that if they will coolly and impartially investigate the testimony they must conclude he was not guilty of misbehavior in not marching under that order to move from Warrenton Junction to Bristoe Station when we take into consideration the circumstances by which he was surrounded.

Why, sir, what were the conditions of General Porter's corps when that order was received? The last troops (Morell's division) which reached his camp after night had marched nineteen miles, hungry, tired, exhausted beyond endurance. These men did not reach their tents to sleep until 10 o'clock. He was asked to march, I think, a distance of from nine to ten miles, from Warrenton to Bristoe.

Mr. STEELE. Does not the gentleman know that Jackson marched thirty miles the day before?

Mr. MCADOO. Jackson is not on trial here, and we are now talking of the conditions of Pope's army and not the conditions of any other army. Why, sir, on the night on which he received this order the very elements were against him. By the evidence of all the witnesses, the night on which he received it was exceedingly dark, the gloom lighted occasionally by flashes of lightning, a drizzling rain falling the while. The road over which he was to make the march was rough, narrow, filled with stumps, crossed by streams, blocked by nearly three thousand wagons, and intersected by a railroad track on which trains were passing and repassing. It was almost impassable. To carry the order to him required the officer who brought it over three hours and twenty minutes. Troops could not move as fast as a single horseman. His officers protested that it was impossible to obey; yet he only partially yielded to their protest and ordered a prompt move to be made at 3 o'clock in the morning.

Besides this, what did the order which reached him at Warrenton Junction say to him? That General Pope was being attacked, that he was in danger, that he must come to the rescue of the Federal Army? Oh, no. It told him the enemy was in retreat. Why then should he not exercise his discretion? I think, sir, when it comes to the question of military rule the great Napoleon is superior to the little Pope, and the great Napoleon laid it down as a rule that when the man in the gap knows facts of which his superior officer is ignorant he has the right to act upon his discretion and save his men, and possibly the army. When Porter's troops moved in the morning his expectations were realized. The story of that march has been graphically told. Struggling teams, mired artillery, disheartened men, and distracted officers made up the picture of that unfortunate march in the early dawn between Warrenton Junction and Bristoe Station. Yet this most learned and just court-martial applies for this the almost indellible stain of traitor to an honorable and upright man.

Of his failure to attack Longstreet on the 29th a great deal has been said on the floor of this House. I speak, sir, from the standpoint of a man who was unfortunately too young to have taken a part in that great struggle—from the standpoint of a civilian, but I think as a lawyer and a man the evidence does show that he was not able to carry out the preposterous order of General Pope to outflank General Jackson. "Why," said General Longstreet, speaking of it, "outflank Jackson when he got the order! Jackson had outflanked him. It was impossible for him to outflank the man who had outflanked him."

As to the joint order, General McDowell when he joined forces was really the superior officer of Fitz-John Porter. General McDowell moved away and did not carry out that order. He did not ask General Fitz-John Porter to carry it out, but advised against carrying it out.

Mr. STEELE. He gave a positive order for him to go in.

Mr. MCADOO. The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken about that. General McDowell says, "Fitz-John Porter, you are in no position to fight a battle here."

Mr. STEELE. I find no such evidence in the record, but on the contrary I find the reverse.

Mr. MCADOO. The gentleman can read that when he has the floor, but I decline to be interrupted at this time. I have already yielded half of my time to a gentleman on the other side.

Now, sir, this case hinges in the minds of men on what? On a motive. If there is no motive there is no case. There can be but one solution of this question. Either Fitz-John Porter was a coward and a traitor or a loyal man and a good soldier. That he was not a traitor I have the evidence of the illustrious general who led the Union forces. We have evidence of the most illustrious generals and soldiers that Fitz-John Porter was always loyal to his country. No one has been able to place upon him the stain of disloyalty. In the adjoining Senate Chamber the gentleman who represents my State, General Sewell, a Republican, has given his testimony that Fitz-John Porter was a loyal man.

Further, that he was a coward! I would scorn, Mr. Chairman, to undertake to defend him from the charge of cowardice. If his record as a soldier staring in the face gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber, if the very catalogue of his battles, if his actions prior to the date of this occurrence, if his whole record as a conservative soldier, an honorable man, and an able, a valorous officer were not sufficient to sustain his character, I would scorn to notice the charge of cowardice. He proved on many a bloody field from Mexico to Manassas to be not only a brave and loyal soldier, but a chivalrous and daring man.

There is but one thing left, and that is, they say, he had a great dislike and contempt for Pope. Mr. Chairman, I do not wonder that he had a contempt for Pope. I do not think he would be a good soldier if he did not burn with contempt of the vacillating and incapable Pope. They say that it was the boast of that vainglorious champion that his headquarters were in the saddle. That may be the case, but God only knows where his brains were. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. Let me ask the gentleman with reference to his belief as to that order of Pope——

Mr. MCADOO. I have yielded all the time I intend to yield to gentlemen on that side.

I say, Mr. Chairman, this General Pope, in the face of the illustrious soldier and great captain of the confederate army Stonewall Jackson, played the part of an imbecile, and by his acts and tactics generally brought down defeat and disaster upon the armies of the Union. No military critic, as far as I am aware, has ever been able to sustain the tactics, the maneuvers, and the management of General Pope when he controlled the armies of the Union. Well, it is said because Fitz-John Porter had contempt for Pope that he sacrificed—what? That he sacrificed his own honor, his own character, his well-earned reputation to be revenged upon him. Why, Mr. Chairman, such a suggestion is preposterous, that this man would sacrifice his own good name, would sacrifice his own position, would sacrifice his reputation as a soldier simply because he had contempt for the imbecile who unfortunately commanded him. I do not believe, sir, that the motive was strong enough to impel him to such an act. But what more do they say? We find that although he had contempt for Pope, he yet obeyed orders from that officer, simply because they were the orders of a superior; although they were against the dictates of his own judgment, still he obeyed them. But, sir, they had to find a scapegoat somewhere for the disasters which followed. General Pope's mismanagement had brought defeat and discredit upon the Federal Army. His want of activity and skill had led good men to their graves in myriads, and they must find a scapegoat, and this alleged honorable, immaculate court-martial was convened to find it, and the unfortunate victim was found in General Fitz-John Porter. But it is vain for gentlemen upon the other side to try to put an obstacle in the way of slow-going justice. The eternal years belong to truth and justice. While she may travel with a leaden heel, she will yet strike down error with a strong iron hand.

I do not wonder, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], speaking of the court of inquiry and its composition and the men by whom it was formed, should criticise it in the manner in which he has done. It is a serious obstacle in his way. If that court of inquiry was right, then the gentleman from Indiana and those who follow him are wrong. If that court of inquiry was right, Fitz-John Porter has been grossly wronged. I am willing for my part to believe them right rather than the gentleman from Indiana.

Now, as the case stands to-day before the bar of public opinion and before this House, on the one side you have testimony from the man who was President of the United States and who led the Union armies, together with a galaxy of Union generals, jurists, statesmen, honest and able men, and on the other a few partisans, with nothing but the heat of partisanship, which has not yet had sufficient time to cool. Thus the conflict between passion and judgment rages. Where will the verdict of the House go? On what side will it cast its decision? On the side of this impartial testimony of the ablest men and leaders of the Army, or the side of the few partisans who can not forget the character of being partisans even on an occasion of this kind? It is, however, refreshing, it has been refreshing and stimulating to me, to see that there are glorious exceptions, as I have seen upon the other side gentlemen willing to forget their partisanship, to do justice to their sense of right, and advocating the doing of tardy justice to a wronged man.

Why, sir, in the State of New Jersey, where Fitz-John Porter lives, the Legislature of that sovereign State, without a division, time and again have petitioned for the redress of the wrongs done him. There, where he lives, where his character as a man, as a neighbor and friend is well known, they have unanimously asked that the Congress of the United States shall do him long-sought-for justice.

In conclusion, this unfortunate man, who has struggled with his burden through these bitter years of cloud and darkness, stands to-day without the doors of this House. I do not wish to appeal to the sentiment of gentlemen; I think the cold facts in this case justify Fitz-John Porter. I would scorn to ask mercy, but I demand justice for him. He stands to-day without the doors of this Chamber asking—what? Not your sentiment, stirred up by any flood of eloquence, not your mercy, but cold, even-handed justice. I say, sir, that we should have him go from these Halls back to his family and his friends restored to the confidence of his country, that he may be enabled to transmit to his children the most glorious of all inheritances—the heritage of an honorable, unstained, and noble name. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOCUM. I have no desire to cut off debate on this bill. It will probably continue on the Private Calendar for weeks unless the House chooses to take some other action. I shall make no movement in that direction myself. I like the debate; I like to have it go on. It was painful to me to read this morning in some of the newspapers of the day——

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] the floor again for another speech? Is the gentleman next in order for a second speech?

The CHAIRMAN. There are ten minutes remaining of the time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. REED. I have no objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] making a speech; but I wished to know if he was going to do it.

Mr. MCADOO. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] was entitled to another ten minutes; and he yields that time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM].

Mr. REED. The ruling has been heretofore that unless any time remaining was claimed when the gentleman sat down it could not be claimed thereafter. I think the present ruling of the Chair is correct. I merely wish to know what we are to be governed by hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide hereafter when the question of order is presented to him. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SLOCUM. I was about to say, when interrupted, that I was pained to read this morning in some of the papers of the day that this discussion was distasteful to the people, and was regarded as unprofitable. I think the newspapers in that respect are entirely mistaken.

The people of the United States for the last twenty years have been laboring under the impression that General Grant, General Schofield, General Terry, and others of that class knew something about military matters. It has become apparent to me in this discussion that the people are entirely mistaken; and that no more profitable thing can be done than for Congress to sit here and tell the world how much they know about military matters. If the members of Congress would only tell Grant and Sherman and Schofield and other such men all they know about military matters you could dispense with the military men and abolish the Army.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if we do not know about this matter how can we decide it?

Mr. SLOCUM. No, sir; there are not ten men in this House who know any more about it to-day than they did yesterday morning.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman does not understand me. I understood him to speak ironically as to the knowledge of members of this House. I ask him in good faith, if we do not know how can we decide?

Mr. SLOCUM. There was never such an absurdity perpetrated in any representative body as has been enacted here; for three hundred gentlemen knowing nothing about military matters to sit here and gravely discuss subjects about which they know nothing whatever and never can know. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Well, sir, what do we come here for?

Mr. SLOCUM. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. KEIFER addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. REED. Is the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] to be allowed to fling such imputations on the House and then close debate? Has he got tired of the discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has moved that the committee rise, and that question is not debatable.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say that I have no objection to the committee rising, but I desire to be recognized for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to know who is entitled to recognition next in the course of the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio who has just addressed the inquiry to the Chair is the gentleman next entitled to recognition.

Mr. KEIFER. As I have said, personally I have no objection to the committee rising.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee should now rise the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio at the next sitting of the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to inquire whether there are other gentlemen present who are ready to speak to-day.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I am ready to speak to-day.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I think those gentlemen who are ready to speak to-day should be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise is not debatable. If the committee desires to remain longer in session it will determine that by its vote.

The question being taken on Mr. SLOCUM's motion, there were—ayes 44, noes 65.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is recognized.

Mr. KEIFER. If the debate is to go on I do not desire to occupy the floor at this time; but will withdraw and allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] to be recognized in his own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee having refused to rise, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] yield to me for one moment to allow me to ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will that take me from the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the question and answer be taken from my time?

The CHAIRMAN. They will.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Then I regret very much that I am obliged to decline.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. It will only take a moment.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia for his question.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] in all sincerity whether his statement made a few minutes ago is in fact and in truth his view of this case? I am here as an utter stranger to the case, and supposed that we would be called upon to vote intelligently upon it. But if that gentleman is in earnest in saying that we do not know anything about it and never will know anything about it, then I am disposed to vote to let the judgment of the court-martial stand, because they were supposed to know something about such matters. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SLOCUM. What I meant by my statement was simply this: That this House of Representatives is composed of men who never made a study of military matters, and they are incompetent to understand these questions [renewed laughter]—utterly incompetent.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes; nobody but a West-Pointer can understand anything about military affairs.

Mr. SLOCUM. The idea of a man standing here and talking about the effect of directing a brigade to move in on the left, or a division to go in on the right, when ninety-nine out of one hundred men that he is talking to do not know whether a brigade is larger or smaller than a division, is utterly absurd.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. What did you bring the bill in here for, then?

Mr. HORR. Why bring the bill before such a set of ignoramuses?

Mr. SLOCUM. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. This is taking up considerable time.

Mr. SLOCUM. I appeal to the gentleman to give me an opportunity to say one word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] yield further?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. SLOCUM. This bill has been debated up to this hour more than three-quarters of the time by men who are opposed to it. When I stood on this floor I was interrupted constantly and persistently. The gentlemen opposed to the bill have not been treated in that manner, and their time has been generously extended. And it is now proposed to prohibit me from answering a question. That is not fair and not just, and I appeal to the manhood of the gentleman to stop it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I have yielded to you the time that you asked.

Mr. SLOCUM. One word more. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] says, "Why did you bring the bill in here?" We did not bring the bill here. James A. Garfield, in the Forty-third Congress, introduced a resolution to bring this bill here. [Laughter on the Republican side and cries of "Oh, no!"] Look at your record. He is the author of that bill; it came from his own recommendation.

Mr. HORR. That is not so.

Mr. SLOCUM. That is the way the bill came here.

Many MEMBERS. "Oh, no!"

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let him go on. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] can not kill this bill we can not.

Mr. SLOCUM. General Garfield, while a member of this House, introduced a resolution for the appointment of this board upon whose report we are acting to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman one question. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not recognize any gentleman until the committee resumes order. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I can hardly conceive of a question solemnly brought before this House, referred to a competent committee, reported back by that committee, and the consideration of the House and of the Committee of the Whole asked upon it, that does not constitute a proper subject of debate. I never before heard it said in this House, I never thought that anybody could say it, that this House was not competent, in its individual members and in its aggregate capacity, to dispose of any and all business that was brought before it. Yet that is the statement now made by the author of this bill. I leave it for him and for the House to consider how much respect to the House and how much disrespect is involved in his statement.

I profess to say to this committee that upon the question involved here we have as fair opportunity of investigation and as good means of ascertaining the truth as any body of men belonging to any profession. Nay, more; I know of no collective body of men anywhere that could arrive more certainly at a just conclusion in reference to all the facts submitted to us in the discussion and consideration of the pending bill, in my opinion, than could this House.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] is not the only soldier to be found in this body. There are men here on either side of the House besides him who have seen service. Though I do not approach the discussion of the question as a military man, I still think that I have a duty to perform in relation to it.

The first duty is to inform myself concerning the facts involved in this case. That I have tried to do, and I now propose to use a few minutes of the time of this committee in calling attention to facts about which I think I may properly decide.

Whether it is wise to send a brigade in here, or a division in there, in a military way, I will say frankly that I do not know. But I do know this: I can tell from this evidence whether or not the night of the 27th of August, 1862, was a dark night as well as can General Grant or the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM]. I can tell whether the road between Warrenton Junction and Bristoe Station, so far as the evidence shows, was encumbered with wagons as well as though I had been President of the United States.

I can tell whether Longstreet's forces were in front of Porter on that day as well as any other man, though I was not in the Army, except in that humble capacity filled by the private soldiers, that class of military men who were not regarded in the beginning nor long remembered, but out of whose fidelity and bravery grew upon other shoulders bars and stars. [Applause.] When it is suggested to me as a member of this House that I am incompetent to come to a conclusion on this question, I deny it. I am, as a member here, the peer of any other man. If I cannot decide this question, I will not make a mockery of myself and my action by voting upon it. [Applause.]

What are we asked to do? To take the opinion of a board—to take the opinion of a general. Sir, no man can make opinions for me. I respect the opinion of a man just as much as I respect the reasons which he gives for his opinion, and no more. As a lawyer I have been in the habit of hearing it said that even the decision of the highest court is worth only just so much as the reasons upon which it is founded. The opinion of any man is worth that much and no more. Upon a question merely military I would take the opinion of General Grant or the distinguished gentleman from New York in preference to my own judgment. But upon this question, which depends only upon evidence and evidence on the record, no man shall give me my opinion; I will form it for myself.

On the 27th day of August, 1862, the forces under the command of General Porter had gathered at nightfall at Bristoe Station. At 9 o'clock and 30 minutes, or between that time and 10 o'clock, an order came to General Porter to move at 1 o'clock on the next morning and be at Bristoe Station at daylight. The spirit of the order was not as to when he should start, but when he should be there. As a lawyer, as a man having some knowledge of the statutes, I deny that there is any rule of law declaring that a military order under particular circumstances is not to be obeyed; that circumstances may justify the disobedience of a military order. Turn to the statutes (for this is a matter of statutory provision in this country) and you will find no such condition, no such limitation. A military order must be obeyed, and if circumstances surrounding the party to whom the order is given are such as to prevent in any way its execution, that fact is merely ground for an ante-conviction pardon, so that the penalty may not attach. But the law is that there must be obedience to the order.

This order was brought to General Porter between half past 9 and 10 o'clock; and on all accounts he was notified that he should be at Bristoe Station the next morning by daylight.

Now remembering that no man who knows nothing about the evidence in this case should allow himself to vote upon it, knowing also that we can gather information all the time if we desire, because the record is before us and we can examine the statement of gentlemen arguing this case—I say that when this order was brought to General Porter he made no effort to obey it. He remarked, "Here is something for us to sleep upon," and while Morell and Sykes and Butterfield objected, he consented to defer the time of starting to an hour when, as he knew, he was expected at Bristoe Station.

One of the excuses is that his troops were tired. True, some of them were tired, but they were resting then; they had been resting for hours, and could yet rest for hours before the time designated for the execution of the order. What I know of military matters is very little; but I know that war is not a parade; that tired soldiers often have to march, and frequently they must march in the dark when a battle is impending, and they are not afraid to do so. It was a dark night, and yet Mr. Chairman, I state it as a fact that fourteen men, who were called as witnesses, marched that night and found no difficulty in doing so. Some of them scouted that road all night long for the purpose of seeing that there was nothing in the way. General Horace Boughton was one who, by order of Pope, scouted that road all that night long. More than that, almost the entire Union army was moving that night, dark as it was. There was no rain. A great portion of the confederate army marched that night on dirt roads. Tired out as they were, they marched farther than our troops. Why, sir, Jackson had marched in thirty-six hours over sixty miles. He could march for such a cause. And yet because the night was dark an accomplished Union soldier of brilliant record presents as his first excuse that the night was dark.

Again, it is said the road was filled with wagons. Yet the fact is shown by the testimony that a member of his staff said that with one hundred or one hundred and fifty soldiers he could clear that road the whole distance in preparation for the march. More than this, that very night the quartermaster-general of McDowell's command went on to have ready this identical road; removed all the wagons in anticipation of the march. They remained outside of the road until daylight came in the morning. Then they were put on the road again, and their presence obstructed the march of Porter. He arrived at Bristoe Station at 10.20 in the morning, when his order was to be there at daylight. He could have been there by daylight in the morning, but he declined to try to obey the order. He did not attempt to obey it. He arrived at 10.20 next morning.

As he was passing over the run at that point Surgeon Paxton, of the Thirty-second Massachusetts Regiment, standing near him, heard him say to somebody, "Go and tell General Morell to halt his division. I do not care a damn whether we get there or not." He started with that indifference, and with the same indifference substantially arrived at Bristoe Station, as is shown by the remark heard by Surgeon W. S. Paxton, of the Thirty-second Massachusetts Regiment.

Now, I will not stand here and say to this committee there is any defense in the proposition suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO] that General Porter ought to hold General Pope in contempt. That he did do it is unquestioned. That it was a defense to excuse him has not heretofore been urged by any advocate of General Porter. That was the expression in his mouth at the moment of completing that order, and I leave this committee with that statement in its hand. I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] that there is no living man, with that evidence in regard to that night and the obstruction in the road, who can judge better than any member of this committee; and he has strangely misunderstood its organization and its members when he says we can know nothing about it. We are not idiots, although we never have had epaulets upon our shoulders.

Mr. McKINLEY. If my colleague will yield to me I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I will yield for that purpose, still holding the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has forty minutes of his hour remaining.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX, of New York, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. SLOCUM, the House (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: The petition of citizens of Bedford County, Pennsylvania, for a tobacco-rebate appropriation—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. S. S. COX: The petition of Dr. Peter J. Reass, for relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DARGAN: The petition of citizens of Conway, Horry County, South Carolina, for an immediate appropriation to continue the improvement of the Waccamaw River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DEUSTER: Papers relating to the claim of John Whitaker—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DOCKERY: Papers relating to the claim of Lawson Moore—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of the heirs of J. J. Galtney—to the same committee.

By Mr. ELDREDGE: Papers relating to the claim of Mark Davis—to the same committee.

By Mr. FERRELL: The petition of James H. Nixon and others, for an appropriation to build jetties at Corson's and Townsend's Inlets, on the New Jersey coast—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GUENTHER: The petition of Henry J. Colwell and others, citizens of Michigan, and of J. F. Shafer and others, citizens of Florence, Wis., who purchased lands within the Ontonagon Railroad land grant, for relief—severally to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, the petition of Andrew Frederickson and others, citizens of Winnebago County, Wisconsin, for an appropriation to pay certain awards for damages caused by overflow of the Fox River—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. H. H. HATCH: The petition of M. M. Andrews and others, members of the Ralph W. Cummings Post, No. 67, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, praying that soldiers of the late war be allowed 160 acres of unoccupied Government lands—to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. T. J. HENDERSON: The petition of O. A. Hempstead and 19 others, citizens of Galva, Henry County, Illinois, for increase of the pension of James S. Herbert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOPKINS: The petition of G. A. Douglas and others, of Braddock, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, asking for compensation for Mrs. Sarah Clarke for services rendered as nurse—to the same committee.

By Mr. MORRILL: The petition of Levi Anderson, for increase of pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. MORSE: The petition of Catharine Callahan, for increase of pensions paid to the widows of soldiers and dependent relatives—to the same committee.

By Mr. PAYNE: The petition of Robert J. Dobson, for relief—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBERTSON: The petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Downs, in relation to pensions paid to soldiers' widows—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. H. ROGERS. The resolutions adopted by the Little Rock (Ark.) Cotton and Produce Exchange in relation to the Signal Service—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. W. F. ROGERS. Papers relating to the claim of George C. Ellison for compensation for services rendered and expenses incurred while acting as chief engineer in the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VANCE. Papers relating to the claim of Bryan Tyson—to the same committee.

By Mr. WELLBORN: The petition of W. M. C. Heill and others, for the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries—to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

Also, the petition of B. B. Brock and others, relating to alleged abuses of the United States Army in the Indian Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIS: The petition of Hines, Hadley & Co., of Wilson, Ky., for a tobacco-rebate appropriation—to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 21, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

THE NEW RULES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recall to the attention of the Senate the fact that the new rules go into force this morning, and the future proceedings of the Senate will be conducted under them.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR DEAF AND DUMB.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of section 4867 of the Revised Statutes and of the act of Congress of March 3, 1883, a report of the disbursements and other affairs of that corporation; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1482) making all public roads and highways post-routes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 3036) to enable the courts of the United States in the case of the improper grant of letters patent by reason of fraud and misrepresentation to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to correct an error in the enrollment of the act "making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other years," approved March 3, 1883, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred, if there be no objection, to the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. BECK. I think it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated the reference he indicated on account of the title of the joint resolution, which says it is to correct an error in enrollment.

Mr. BECK. There was some error in a conference report, and the Committee on Appropriations is the proper committee to correct it, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations. It is so referred.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Elisha Mulford and Samuel W. Dike, praying, as a basis of future legislation, for a thorough inquiry into matters connected with the divorce laws of the several States, and the collection of divorce statistics from their records and authorities; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of Patrick Furlong, late private Company G, Fourteenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Malinda Brooks, of Russellville, Ky., praying for an increase of her widow's pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying for an inquiry into the subject-matter of a letter concerning the disposal of undelivered and dead letters addressed to the Postmaster-General by Oliver Evans Woods, of that city, July 6, 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of A. W. Hicks, praying to be allowed pay, under a contract with Col. Charles Ellet, of the Mississippi ram fleet, for opening the Mississippi blockade June 3, 1862; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. I present a resolution of the National Educational Association, adopted at a meeting held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.; a petition of teachers of the Mount Holyoke Seminary; a petition of the faculty of Amherst College; a petition of the students of Amherst College; and a petition from a large number of citizens of Massachusetts generally, all praying for an appropriation for schools in Alaska. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of O. P. Morton Post, No. 14, Department of Missouri, Grand Army of the Republic, representing 200 ex-Union soldiers, praying that Union soldiers who were prisoners of war be pensioned; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Portland, Me., praying for such legislation as will check the rapid decline in our merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of R. G. Peters and 3 others, citizens of Michigan, and a petition of the Republic Iron Company and 8 others, land owners of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, praying for legislation to quiet their titles; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VANCE presented a petition of citizens of North Carolina, praying for indemnity for certain vessels destroyed by the French; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS. I present severally the petitions of Martha Fisher, of Elija Bray, of Hiram Johnson, of William Nuckalls, of Michael D. Deadrick, and of William A. Bryan, all praying for compensation for property taken and used by the Army of the United States. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Collier, Robertson & Hambleton and others, jobbers and dealers in manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars, of Keokuk, Iowa, praying for the enactment of a law providing for the payment of claims allowed for rebates under section 4 of the act of March 3, 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a preamble and resolutions of the Iowa State Medical Association, in favor of appropriations by Congress for the erection of a fire-proof building for the medical library and museum; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WILSON. I present also resolutions (which were intended, as appears by the letter transmitting them, for presentation to Congress) of George Strong Post of the Grand Army of the Republic of Iowa, in favor of a readjustment of the pay of soldiers for the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, so as to equalize it with gold; also a letter of the committee of the post, inclosing the resolutions and asking that they be presented to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks leave to present certain papers connected with the subject he has stated, which are not technically, as the Chair understands, in the form of a memorial. If there be no objection, the papers will be received, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of Andrew Frederickson and 14 other citizens of Neenah, Wis., praying that an appropriation be made for flowage on the Fox River, in Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the petition of J. F. Shafer, James Loughrey, James Tobin, Peter Sheridan, Asa E. Kemp, and John Edwards, residents of Florence, Wis., praying that the titles to lands sold them inside the Ontonagon land grant in Michigan be protected by the passage of Senate bill No. 691; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of Edward H. Merrill and 33 others, citizens of Ripon and Fond du Lac, Wis., praying for inquiry into the subject of divorce in the several States, as a basis of future legislation by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of Hall & Beiler and other dealers in manufactures of tobacco, citizens of Missouri, praying for a tobacco-rebate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. I have in my hand resolutions passed at the annual meeting of the Kansas State board of agriculture, requesting that certain action be taken by the members of Congress from the State of Kansas in favor of such legislation as shall circumscribe the limits within which pleuro-pneumonia exists and finally exterminate that disease; also praying for legislation to prevent the spread of Texas fever, and certain other legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exclude from the United States products of nations which exclude our products from their ports. These resolutions are intended for the Senate; and I ask permission to present them, and move that they be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to present papers, the contents of which he has described, on the subject of pending legislation. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolutions will be received, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the James Comerford Post, No. 68, Grand Army of the Republic, at Chippewa Falls, Wis., in favor of granting additional pensions to soldiers of the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Post No. 88, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of Post No. 393, Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of John A. Rawlins Post, No. 61, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of Post No. 28, Department of Dakota, Grand Army of the Republic, and the petition of Post No. 7, Department of Colorado, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the opening to settlement of the Sioux reservation; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented two petitions of ex-soldiers of Elkhart, Ind., praying for a donation to the soldiers of the late war in fee-simple by the Government of one hundred and sixty acres of land without restrictions of any kind whatever; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of citizens and soldiers of Caldwell, Ohio, praying for the passage of what is known as the equalization-of-bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of A. A. Carpenter, Jesse Spalding, J. B. Goodman, H. H. Porter, J. H. Whitbeck, J. G. Van Schaick, and others, residents of Chicago, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 691) to confirm and declare legal the acts of certain officers of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of merchants of Chicago, Ill., praying for the future protection of mails on the postal cars from destruction by fire; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I present a petition of several thousand citizens of San Francisco, including, I believe, every business house in the city, and signed by a great many other people of influence, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a building for the post-office and the United States courts in that city. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I also present a paper, which is intended to be a memorial to Congress, but not technically so, from lumber manufacturers on the Pacific coast remonstrating against the abolition of the protective tariff on lumber, which I move be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent to present a paper on the subject of the duties on lumber which is not in the form of a memorial. If there be no objection, it will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that Congress will take some measures to protect the commercial correspondence of the country while in transit in railway cars from destruction by fire; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition of citizens of Jacksonville, Fla., and of a committee of them, praying for the improvement of the Saint John's River. The petition states that the value of the vessels and cargoes arriving at and departing from the port of Jacksonville in 1882 amounted to $3,827,000; that the steamboat tonnage, inland and local, is $2,042,000. The petition also states an annual loss to commerce by delay and increase of insurance and increased freight charges of nearly $600,000. It also states that the improvement of the Saint John's River under the jetty system is an assured success; and in view of these facts the petitioners ask an appropriation by Congress for the continuance of the work. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a petition of letter-carriers of Akron, Ohio, praying for the passage of a bill to provide for a leave of absence, without loss of pay, for thirty days in each year. The petition is indorsed by the postmaster and assistant postmaster of that city. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration the petition of J. W. Niles, representing the association of colored people known as the "Indemnity Party," of Arkansas, and other colored citizens, asking for the equal protection of the laws in securing homesteads, &c., and have directed me to report the same back with a recommendation that the committee be discharged and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. Having some knowledge of this matter, I do not know what the Committee on the Judiciary can do any more than the Committee on Public Lands can do with it. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] presented the petition, and it was upon his motion that it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and I call his attention to it now inasmuch as it has been reported back from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the petition?

Mr. GARLAND. It is the petition of J. W. Niles which the Senator from Ohio presented very early in the session. It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and they now ask to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection at all.

Mr. GARLAND. It is a matter that relates, as I understand, to some complaint in reference to the entry of lands there, and I supposed the Committee on Public Lands was the appropriate committee; but as I have not the matter in charge I make this statement of it.

Mr. PLUMB. The petition relates to certain alleged acts of violence committed upon these people while they were, as they claim, taking steps to enter public land, and does not in any way relate to the acquisition of the title itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate discharge the Committee on Public Lands from the further consideration of the petition? If there be no objection the committee will be discharged. The Senator from Kansas moves that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 355) to confirm the title to certain lands in Platte County, Missouri, and authorize patents to be issued therefor to Kinsey B. Cecil, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 289) to confirm the homestead entry of Hugh Foster, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 290) to confirm the homestead entry of John Waishkey, jr., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 639) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue to George K. Otis duplicates of certain land-warrants lost while in the possession of the officers of the Government, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 42) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 802) to fix and render certain the terms of the United States circuit and district courts in the eastern and northern districts of Texas, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 309) to amend section 673 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the quorum of the Supreme Court of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary have also had under consideration the bill (S. 328) to authorize Allexey W. Von Schmidt to bring suit in the Court of Claims, and have instructed me to report it back and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Patents. The bill proposes to permit Mr. Von Schmidt to bring suit against the Government for the use of an invention of his and to recover damages, and we think the proper committee to take charge of the matter is the Committee on Patents.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 22) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 15) to provide for the further protection of citizens of the United States and others against the violation of certain rights secured to them by the Constitution of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I am also directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 415) regulating maritime liens and remedies and to secure uniformity in the enforcement of the rights of material-men in courts of admiralty, to report adversely thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire the bill to be placed upon the Calendar or indefinitely postponed?

Mr. HOAR. I will call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] to the bill, and ask him if he would like to have it placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am receiving daily communications in reference to the bill, and I should like to have it placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 311) to refer the claim of Alice E. De Groot and Theodore R. B. De Groot, administrators of William H. De Groot, deceased, to the United States Court of Claims, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 310) to amend the law relating to the bonds of executors in the District of Columbia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; which was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I am also instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 432) to disqualify justices of the Supreme Court from sitting in the trial of causes which have been previously heard before them in their circuits or otherwise, to report it back with a recommendation that the committee be discharged and the bill indefinitely postponed, as the matter which it incorporates has been included in another bill reported from that committee.

The report was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 265) for the relief of Alonzo Gesner, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 503) to increase the endowment of the University of Alabama from the public lands in said State, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROWN introduced a bill (S. 1168) to appropriate $100,000 to erect a building for the accommodation of the post-office and internal-revenue department in the city of Columbus, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1169) for the relief of Mrs. Catherine E. Whitall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1170) for the relief of Richard Hawley and sons; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1171) for the relief of Robert M. Flack; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1172) for the relief of J. B. Cornell and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 1173) granting a pension to Catharine Bullard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1174) granting a pension to Clara Wible; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1175) granting a pension to Anna M. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1176) granting a pension to John K. Hummer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1177) granting an increase of pension to Georgetta Harp; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS (Mr. HARRIS in the chair) introduced a bill (S. 1178) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; to provide for a settlement of the claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of said railroads, and to secure to the United States all indebtedness of the companies therein mentioned; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I desire to say in connection with this bill that it has been prepared by the Commissioner of Railroads, and is a very important bill. The object of it is, if possible, to bring to a termination the controversy that appears to be perpetual between the United States and these railroad companies about what they shall pay in respect of their bonds and in respect of the security that we have for them, and provide for closing up the transaction by a new arrangement on a long bond to take the place of their obligation to repay the United States, and provide certain legal securities and other arrangements for carrying out the transaction.

It is quite clear to my mind that it would be well, if it is possible, to make some arrangement by which we shall provide for the United States being certainly reimbursed by these companies for the vast sums of money it has advanced. Whether the time that is provided for and the method is precisely what it ought to be, I am not sure. That deserves consideration. We ought also, I think, in the same connection (although it is not in the bill), to provide some authority in the President of the United States to secure the interests of the United States in case of an attempted foreclosure or sale or other disposition of this property under the mortgages that are prior to our lien.

This being in substance and effect a judicial bill to terminate this controversy that has hitherto been reported upon by the Committee on the Judiciary, I move that the bill be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to introduce, or I introduce without leave, as my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says I may under the new rules, though I am not quite sure of it, another bill.

The bill (S. 1179) to provide for a special jury in the supreme court of the District of Columbia in certain cases therein was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Although it provides for enlarging the territorial district in the United States court, I thought at first this bill probably had better go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. My friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] thinks it should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I have no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 1180) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary T. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont, as his understanding of the rule is important to the whole Senate, to Rule VII of the new rules, which reads:

> The presiding officer shall then call for, in the following order:
> The presentation of petitions and memorials;
> Reports of standing and select committees;
> The introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Then the first clause of Rule XIV of the new rules reads:

> 1. Whenever a bill or joint resolution shall be offered, its introduction shall, if objected to, be postponed for one day.

That is the whole existing rule on the subject. It is intended to prevent the necessity of a special asking for unanimous consent whenever a bill is introduced.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad the Senator from Massachusetts puts that construction upon the rule. I studied it with some care and was not quite able to convince myself what was the intention in that respect, but it being now stated, and nobody having any different view, it will certainly be a convenience, as it still leaves, I believe, the opportunity not to have a bill brought in unless the Senate is willing.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that that change of the rule was made on my motion, and that reason was fully stated in the Senate when it was made. It was made for that reason.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 1181) granting a pension to Ann Lally; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1182) for the relief of Capt. William H. Gill, military storekeeper, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1183) granting a pension to Hugh O'Neil; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1184) for the relief of William P. Reid; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1185) for the relief of Belva A. Lockwood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1186) for the relief of William H. Whiteside; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1187) to extend the benefits of the pension laws to the widows and minor children of soldiers, sailors, and members of the Marine Corps; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, introduced a bill (S. 1188) for the protection, promotion, preservation, and extension of the forests of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1189) for the relief of the heirs at law of John Graham; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BECK. I have been requested to introduce various bills, all for reference to the Committee on Claims. I think most of them were introduced in the last Congress by my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is now absent.

The bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims, as follows:

A bill (S. 1190) for the relief of Archibald White;

A bill (S. 1191) for the relief of A. C. P. Shoemaker;

A bill (S. 1192) for the relief of Alfred Ray and John W. Ray, executors of the estate of Enos Ray, deceased;

A bill (S. 1193) for the relief of A. C. Meadows;

A bill (S. 1194) for the relief of J. A. Hodges;

A bill (S. 1195) for the relief of Salmons Wooten & Co.;

A bill (S. 1196) for the relief of John W. Rowlett;

A bill (S. 1197) for the relief of Miles Kelly; and

A bill (S. 1198) for the relief of the owner of the land and his tenants on which the Camp Chase military prison was located.

Mr. ANTHONY introduced a bill (S. 1199) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1878; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JACKSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1200) granting a pension to Mrs. E. G. C. Abbott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 1201) for the relief of William Gallick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1202) to provide for and aid in the construction and to regulate the operation of a ship canal between Lakes Union and Washington and Puget Sound, in Washington Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 1203) to provide for the preparation of a centennial history of the Government of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a bill (S. 1204) authorizing the construction of a public building for a post-office in the city of Houston, Tex.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 1205) revising the postal laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GARLAND introduced a bill (S. 1206) for the relief of the estate of William Wright, deceased; which was read twice by title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1207) for the relief of the estate of Moses S. McCord; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1208) for the relief of Wilson G. Gray; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 1209) to grant title to certain lands in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PIKE introduced a bill (S. 1210) in amendment of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty," approved March 17, 1882; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1211) to extend the duration of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 1212) to authorize the extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway to a point on the military lands at Fortress Monroe, Va.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. One would suppose from the title that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Railroads, but it involves some land that belongs to Fortress Monroe. I therefore move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California (by request), introduced a bill (S. 1213) for the relief of Tully, Ochoa & Co., of Arizona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1214) for the relief of H. S. Stevens, of Arizona, and Charles Dahlman, of California, late assignees of William B. Hooper & Co., of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1215) for the relief of Bowers & Richards, assignees of James M. Barney, all of Arizona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1216) for the relief of Robert W. Dunbar; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1217) for the relief of certain officers who have served a specified number of years as captains or as company and regimental staff officers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1218) granting increase of pension to Samuel Baker, quartermaster of Col. James Fenton's regiment, war of 1812; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 1219) to donate condemned cast-iron cannon to the citizens of Waterville, Me.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1220) for the relief of the heirs of Michael O'Brien; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 1221) for the relief of Leonidas Russell and Martha L. Russell, his wife; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 1222) to place John Jones, late captain of the First Minnesota Battery, on the retired-list of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LAPHAM (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 43) for the erection of a bronze equestrian statue to Simon Bolivar in Washington or New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, it was Ordered, That all papers on the files of the Senate in regard to reappraisement of the steam-transport-boat Planter, and for a distribution of the proceeds thereof, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the two claims of Mrs. Priscilla W. Burwell be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH MEXICO.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the present consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That any further consideration of the reciprocity treaty between Mexico and the United States be had in open session of the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. ANTHONY. The resolution must be introduced in executive session. It is not in order here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Yes; I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the resolution goes over.

Mr. INGALLS. There is objection to its reception.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the resolution goes over, I shall ask that it be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point is made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] that it is not in order in open session to receive what belongs exclusively to executive session.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I object to the reception of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order here; it is executive business

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to be heard on the question raised by the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would hold that the resolution is not in order in legislative session.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is a suggestion in regard to the resolution in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the resolution is not in order, and any discussion of the question here would be equally out of order. The question of order having been raised, and having been disposed of by the Chair, no debate is in order unless there be an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair for that purpose; no other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move that the doors be closed.

Mr. MORGAN. I second the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the doors be closed and that motion is seconded. It is the duty of the Chair, therefore, to clear the galleries and close the doors without putting any question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will order the Sergeant-at-Arms to clear the galleries and close the doors.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suggest to the Senator that that would exclude——

Mr. EDMUNDS. No debate until the doors are closed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order is being executed, and no debate is in order until it is executed.

The doors were therefore closed; and at the expiration of 12 minutes were reopened. While they were closed, after debate,

Mr. VAN WYCK withdrew his appeal; so that the decision refusing to receive the resolution was sustained.

DISCRIMINATIONS AGAINST AMERICAN PRODUCTS.

Mr. GIBSON. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table, to be called up hereafter:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to ascertain and report to the Senate what discriminations, if any, have been made by foreign governments against the people of the United States by allowing drawbacks in favor of their own exportations that come in competition with ours in the open markets of the world, or by subsidies or special bounties in favor of their steamship lines, or that impose export duties upon commodities largely consumed in the United States, or that prohibit or restrain the importations of the productions of the United States by unusual laws and regulations, or by higher rates when on American vessels, or by special reciprocity treaties, or otherwise, and also the force and effect of "the most favored nation" clause as found in commercial or reciprocity treaties, with such recommendations as the Committee on Foreign Relations may deem necessary and proper.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

FRAUDULENT IMPORTATIONS OF WOOL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate copies of official reports from Treasury agents and collectors of customs tending to show fraudulent undervaluation or classification of wool imported into the United States, and such further information in the Treasury Department as may enable Congress to provide guards against such frauds.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. LAPHAM. During the recess of Congress a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations have been engaged in the taking of testimony on the subject of fish and fisheries, and what legislation, if any, is deemed necessary for their protection. The subcommittee closed the testimony this morning. Considerable of this testimony has been already printed; but the Public Printer informs us that it is necessary to have a formal resolution for the convenience of his accounts. I ask leave, therefore, to introduce the following resolution for present consideration:

Resolved, That the testimony taken by the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations relative to the protection of fish and fisheries be printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Fish and Fisheries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senate to Rule XXIX of the new rules on the subject of printing:

1. Every motion to print documents, reports, and other matter transmitted by either of the Executive Departments, or to print memorials, petitions, accompanying documents, or any other paper, except bills of the Senate or House of Representatives, resolutions submitted by a Senator, communications from the Legislatures or conventions, lawfully called, of the respective States, and motions to print by order of the standing or select committees of the Senate, shall, unless the Senate otherwise order, be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The Senator from New York moves, if the Chair understands him aright, that this resolution be now considered.

Mr. LAPHAM. I supposed it came within the exception of the rule

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not come within the exception, but it falls within the right of the Senator to have the Senate "otherwise order."

Mr. LAPHAM. It is a matter of form really.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair only called attention to the matter in general.

Mr. LAPHAM. Nearly all the testimony has actually been printed, and this is only a matter of form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask a question for information. There is a rule also that the Senate by itself can order not exceeding $500 worth of printing.

Mr. LAPHAM. This will not cost a quarter of that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know how large this body of testimony is.

Mr. LAPHAM. About five hundred pages.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The restriction mentioned by the Senator from Connecticut relates to motions to print additional documents, which is not this case.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

TRADING POSTS IN CONGO VALLEY.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the subject of the settlements and trading posts now being made and established in the valley of the Congo River in Africa, and report as to any action that may be properly taken by Congress or the Executive in the furtherance of our commerce in that quarter, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 19th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River.

LEWIS D. ALLEN.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some days ago, on the 16th of January, 1884, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made an adverse report on the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Lewis D. Allen, and I asked that it might be placed on the Calendar till I could examine it. I had some recollection, and have refreshed that recollection by hunting up the history of the case, and I find that I once reported the case adversely myself, and I think the report of the Senator from Massachusetts is entirely right. I ask now that the bill be indefinitely postponed, as was recommended by him.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman interested in that bill called upon me this morning and thought that the report of the committee had omitted some important matter in his favor, and I told him that if he would make a communication in the proper way of his matter I would consider it and bring it to the attention of the committee if it seemed to deserve it. I think, therefore, under the circumstances it had better stand on the Calendar until we have that opportunity.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the bill was put on the Calendar at my instance, I felt it my duty to call it up and have it disposed of. I do not care what disposition is made of the case. It is not on the Calendar now by my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill remains on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Chair, pursuant to the new rules——

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the rules we go to the Calendar, do we not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir. The Chair, pursuant to the new rules, lays before the Senate the Calendar of General Orders. The Calendar of Resolutions, as the Chair construes the rules, is disposed of. All resolutions, after having lain over one day under objection, being again presented to the Senate and not disposed of, go on the Calendar with other business. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 19) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bills before that bill, as I understand them, never have been referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must lay before the Senate the bills in their order on the Calendar. The only doubt the Chair had was that some of these bills had got on the Calendar that were really laid on the table, and in that case they would not properly be on the Calendar; but for safety the Chair will commence at the beginning and lay before the Senate the first bill on the Calendar, order of business No. 3, being the bill (S. 228) to appropriate and expend $50,000,000 derived from the internal-revenue taxes and sale of public lands for the education of all the children living in the United States.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That bill has not been reported from a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, this bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill has never been referred to any committee. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who introduced it, is not present. I move that it be passed by. As a matter of course, we shall not let it be acted upon when it has not been even referred or read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill be passed over.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask once for all whether the bill now retains its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It retains its place, but it will not be again taken up until the Calendar is all gone through with. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 404) to reorganize the legislative power of the Territory of Utah.

Mr. HOAR. I thought a single objection took a bill out of its place for that day only; that it required a motion to place it at the foot of the Calendar, to have a bill so situated that it does not come up until the whole Calendar has been gone through with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to think that under Rule VIII, under which we proceed until 1 o'clock, we take up bills and resolutions on the Calendar under the five-minute or so-called Anthony rule, this being the substance of the rule offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on former occasions, and proceed with them, and we either pass them by or dispose of them. If they are passed by, the Chair does not understand the present rule to require the Chair to lay them again before the Senate on the next day or until the Calendar is entirely gone through with; but between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock the Chair thinks it will be in order to move to take up such a bill.

Mr. HOAR. But, if the Chair please, at 2 o'clock is it not then the duty of the Chair, if there be no special order at that time, to lay what remains on the Calendar before the Senate, and does not that require the giving those cases which have not been by special order of the Senate placed at the foot their old place on the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand it, the direction being to begin with the first subject on the Calendar next after the last subject disposed of in the previous proceeding, so that if a bill is passed over it is disposed of, as the Chair thinks, for the time being. The next bill on the Calendar has been reported, a bill to reorganize the legislative power of the Territory of Utah.

Mr. LAPHAM. May not a bill now, as formerly, be passed over, reserving its place on the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be passed over by unanimous consent, reserving its place on the Calendar, to be taken up at any time.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask with reference to the bill just called that it may be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator by that mean to be again laid before the Senate to-morrow morning?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; to be again laid before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that, and will state my reason. This bill has never been referred to any committee, and is not before the Senate. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] has made his speech upon it, though, and he can call it up at any moment. I object to its having to be called every time we go to the Calendar; therefore I move that it be passed over the same as the bill before it. If it had been reported from a committee, I would not object to proceeding with it.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that there is nothing to be done in this case at all except to agree upon a reference. Neither the Senator from Illinois, who introduced the bill, nor myself, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, desires to debate the reference now, and it may be agreed upon. Then why not consent that the bill may stay just where it is?

Mr. COCKRELL. It does stay so that it can be called up any morning, except that when we go to the Calendar it will not be called again and the same thing gone over every day.

Mr. HARRISON. Our rules were devised, I think, to avoid just what we are getting into, and I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate only goes on by unanimous consent. Until 2 o'clock an objection carries a bill over unless a motion be made to continue its consideration. The Senator from Missouri objects in this case.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to say that the suggestion made by the Chair just now in regard to the place this bill will take upon the Calendar after 2 o'clock, being as I understand it not a ruling of the Chair but merely an impression, I should like to call the attention of the Chair to that subject again when it becomes a practical question, without acquiescing in that impression.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair regards it as desirable that all points of discussion under the new rules should be settled to the satisfaction of everybody, if possible. The next bill on the Calendar, No. 5 in the order of business, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 405) to repeal the internal-revenue laws now of force, and abolish the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that that lie on the table for the present, to be called up by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that this bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill will be reported, being Order of Business No. 6.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 406) to reduce revenue, promote domestic industry, and increase foreign commerce.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that that bill and the next order of business on the Calendar, being the joint resolution (S. R. 16) proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to alcoholic liquors and other poisonous beverages, be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire objects to the present consideration of the bill and joint resolution indicated, and they are accordingly passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order of Business No. 8 will now be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 572) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library.

Mr. HARRISON. I object to the present consideration of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

Mr. SHERMAN. This mode of treating bills that have been read a second time and have not been referred it seems to me is not fair and just. Whatever may be the technical and literal construction of the rule, it was never designed, I am free to say, to place bills in this particular category in the position of bills duly reported for consideration, because it is known that these bills are merely left on the Calendar for the convenience of Senators to speak upon probably at some convenient time, and then to be referred to an appropriate committee. I do not think the Senate should pass on any of the bills on this list until we come to No. 9 in the order of business, reported by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. They are not there for the purpose of consideration, but merely for debate on reference. I hope, therefore, that by unanimous consent until we get these new rules in running order bills standing in this position may hold their place without objection until a motion is made to refer them. They should not be considered as bills on the Calendar for consideration. What I suggest may be done by unanimous consent. It may be necessary in order to make the meaning clear hereafter to modify and change the rule, which I suppose can be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that he thinks these bills do hold their place; they stay in their present order on the Calendar, but the course of proceeding carries the Senate beyond them, so that in regular order they would not be again reached until the whole Calendar had been gone through with and we should again begin at the beginning. But the Chair thinks under the rules, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock each day it is in order to move to proceed to the consideration of any of these bills, under which motion they can be taken up and referred.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then after 2 o'clock it is in order, without any debate, to move to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all I desire. It would not be right now, in the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], to put his bill in such a position that he could not during the morning hour move to proceed to consider it and make his speech upon it, and then have it referred.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not, and that is not desired at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. With that understanding I have no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to suggest whether or not a motion that these bills lie on the table would not put them all in the same category, take them off the Calendar, and put them within the reach of the parties who have introduced them, to do just exactly what the Senator from Ohio suggested, to wit, call them up at any time for the purpose of reference or for the purpose of speaking upon them, instead of having them repeated on our Calendar every day and submitted to us as part of the current pending business? To do that, when it is known that they will not be called for consideration in the ordinary category of bills on the Calendar, seems to me to be something of an incongruity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not able at this moment to express any opinion as to when a motion would be in order to take up a bill from the table unless it should be under the call of resolutions; but there may be some provision in the rules which provides a time when a motion of that kind may be made. The rule now under the eye of the Chair with respect to the order of business says that—

At the conclusion of the morning business—

Which is before described, being petitions, and reports, and bills, and concurrent and other resolutions—

the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of bills and resolutions.

And that shall go on, without any motion to do anything else, until 1 o'clock. After 1 o'clock a motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of committee, or other subject upon the Calendar shall not be entertained by the presiding officer unless by unanimous consent. That seems to describe bills and resolutions that are on the Calendar; but the Chair has never understood that a bill which had by vote of the Senate been laid upon the table was on its Calendar of general or of special orders.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me, as was suggested just now, that this matter is not technically in order at this time, but as several Senators have said something about it and the Chair has, I perhaps may be indulged in stating my view of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt that no gentleman will object to the discussion of the question now.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the mechanism of this rule is provided to carry out the intention and provide for the convenience of the Senate, as on examining it Senators I think will all see.

In the first place there is a provision for dealing with unobjected cases upon the Calendar. That is in Rule VIII. That is the old Anthony rule. We intended to incorporate the Anthony rule into the rules of the Senate, and that provides that until 2 o'clock, unless the Calendar of unobjected cases be sooner finished, the Calendar shall be called and cases not objected to shall be considered. There is no provision in that rule whatever for changing the place upon the Calendar of anything at all. It simply provides that if nobody objects these cases, one after another, shall be taken up. If objection be made, then you proceed with the next case, not because the old one has lost its place on the Calendar, but because it has ceased to be a case not objected to, and that is all.

Then not later than 2 o'clock, or when you get through the unobjected cases, the Calendar of general orders is taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning with the first subject on the Calendar next after the last subject disposed of in proceeding with the Calendar, not the last subject disposed of in proceeding with unobjected cases, and it never was intended that this single objection (which simply took the case from the consideration of the Senate during this little time before 2 o'clock) should be considered as a disposition of the case within the meaning of our rules. That means where the case has been laid on the table, or where it has been recommitted to a committee, or where it has been finally disposed of by an adverse vote. Then you take up the Calendar in its old order beginning at the head, and then the motions are in order as questions of privilege, which are provided for, to wit: first, a motion to proceed to the consideration of a revenue bill; second, a motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar, and so on. That is a provision for dealing with questions under the general rules of the Senate. There is no five-minute rule about it; there is no limitation as to the right of debate about it, as to the number of times a Senator may speak, except the general rule of not speaking more than once on any one day until other Senators have got through.

That view, I respectfully suggest to the Chair—although the question will not arise until the Calendar comes up by and by—is what the Senate all meant when they adopted these rules, and is the only view which carries out the purpose of the Senate, and the only view which can possibly be taken; or otherwise we shall be compelled instantly to repeal or modify this rule if the other rule comes in play, that in the first hour, before 1 o'clock, it shall be in order for any single Senator objecting to declare that any measure to which he objects shall be put at the foot of the Calendar and not in order until every other bill on the Calendar, although it may be at the head now, shall have been reached by a separate motion which disposes of it in some of these ways. I think the Chair will see that I have given the only practical exposition of the rule.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, when the bills now on the Calendar that appear to have been read twice and not referred were introduced, the several Senators who introduced them requested that they do lie on the table. I think by reference to the Journal that will be found to be the fact. I observed next morning after a number of these bills were introduced that they appeared on the Calendar. I was of the opinion that they ought not to appear on the Calendar at all. I called the attention of the proper clerk, as the gentleman now at the desk will remember, to the fact that they were on the Calendar, and stated to him that in my opinion they ought not to be there. He, however, informed me that the Calendar had always been made up in that way. These bills are now, as I understand it, all on the table, and I submit that they ought not to be upon the Calendar, and that the Clerk ought to be instructed not to place them upon the Calendar. If they were not on the Calendar we should have none of this difficulty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has expressed to the Clerk, and the Calendar to-morrow will be made up accordingly, an opinion concurring with that of the Senator from Wisconsin. A bill laid on the table is not properly on the Calendar of general or special orders; but the Chair is not now advised whether all these bills fall under that category or not. The Journal will be examined, in order that to-morrow's Calendar may show only those bills which have not been laid on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] as to the interpretation of this rule, and after the interpretation we shall not have two Calendars, but we shall have one Calendar with two places for beginning the calling of cases. One will be immediately after the conclusion of the morning hour, when unobjected cases will be called, and that call will be proceeded with until 2 o'clock. That will always be in advance of the other call, which begins at 2 o'clock. Now you take this morning for example: we commence with the first case and we go on, and before 2 o'clock we have reached the fiftieth case, say, on the Calendar. Then at 2 o'clock we go back to the beginning of the Calendar and take up the cases and dispose of them in their order, let it consume a longer or a shorter time. They are to be disposed of so that every case shall have an opportunity of being considered without objection, and then the regular call will be proceeding all the time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Where is the authority under the rules to place these cases on the Calendar at all?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not talking about these cases; they do not belong to the Calendar. I am talking about the reported cases. The cases to which the Senator refers do not belong upon the Calendar; he is right; but I am speaking of the construction of the rule as to how we shall proceed with business. I think there is no question but that before 2 o'clock we proceed to consider unobjected cases and go just as far as we can, and then after 2 o'clock we begin at the beginning of the Calendar and go on considering everything in its order and disposing of it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think that is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. We shall then have two places to begin the call of the Calendar, one as soon as the morning business is through and the other when 2 o'clock arrives.

Mr. CONGER. That would be the construction of the rule adopted here if we followed the practice of the other House, that in the new print of the Calendar from day to day it should be stated where under Rule VIII the call closed the previous day, so that every gentleman would know where the new call would commence for unobjected cases. That has been the practice there.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, there will be one morning call of unobjected cases.

Mr. CONGER. Each Calendar printed by the other House shows where the call for unobjected cases closed and where it will begin, running through the whole Calendar, and being changed from time to time as the cases are changed under the call. That order can be given to the Secretary and that will dispose of all cases under the eighth rule, and the same might apply to all cases under the ninth rule, with a reference to the rules in each case.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next case on the Calendar will be reported, being No. 9 in the order of business.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 19) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to suggest that that bill is of great importance and probably can not be considered under the five-minute rule. I do not want to delay its consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. I will state to the Senator that the bill is in order now until 2 o'clock, and when 2 o'clock arrives this bill will be in order as the first bill on the Calender and not liable to be displaced except by a majority vote of the Senate. Therefore it will save time I think if the Senator will allow it to be read now and go on.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and having proceeded for some time,

Mr. CONGER. Is this proceeding under the eighth rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). This is proceeding under the eighth rule.

Mr. CONGER. Then I object to its further consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that this bill will come up as in order at 2 o'clock. It will then be in order unless the Senate by a majority vote shall decide to order otherwise. Therefore it is really an economy of public time to allow the bill to be read now up to the time when it will under the general rules of the Senate be in order.

Mr. CONGER. I hope it may go over to-day. I have not had my attention called to the bill until its reading, and there are some provisions lacking in this bill and some contained in it which I think have not had full consideration, and I hope it will not be considered to-day. For that reason I object to it now so that it may go over.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator allow me to say this to him: We all desire that each member of the Senate should properly understand the bill before it is voted upon; but the bill will be in order at 2 o'clock and it will be 2 o'clock two minutes hence. This is no new bill. It has already received the approval of the Senate in 1879 and again in 1881 after a very full and exhaustive debate and explanation. As the bill will be up in order at 2 o'clock, I trust the Senator will not raise the objection which will allow only two minutes to take up another bill and then lay it aside and take up this bill again.

Mr. CONGER. There are other bills before this on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. No, this is the first bill.

Mr. BAYARD. There are no other bills before this. If he will examine the Calendar the Senator will find that it is the first bill in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan objects and the bill goes over under the rule. The next bill on the Calendar will be read.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to ask a question for information. It now lacks one minute of 2 o'clock. Being of a practical turn of mind I do not care to waste the time of the Senate even for a moment, but is it not in order to move notwithstanding the objection that this bill be considered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Then, sir, I make that motion, and I wish to say as my basis for it——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 19, Order of Business No. 9.

Mr. BAYARD. Now, Mr. President, I will remark that under the rules of the Senate this bill is properly before this Senate as the regular order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is very clear, the Chair will observe to the Senator from Delaware, under either construction of the rule which has been suggested that this bill is not quite yet in order. If the construction of the rule intimated by the Senator from Vermont the President pro tempore of the Senate be the correct one, this bill has gone to the foot of the Calendar, and it is not in order under the ninth rule until all other cases on the Calendar have been disposed of. If, on the other hand, the construction of the rule suggested by the present occupant of the chair be the proper one, it will be necessary to dispose technically of the three or four matters preceding this on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD. But I would respectfully submit to the Chair that, according to the rule, in this one hour after the expiration of the regular morning business there is no regular order but this bill, and I ask that we proceed to the consideration of the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit to the Senate this question under Rule IX: Is it requisite at 2 o'clock to proceed with the Calendar in its order without regard to objections which have been made when the Calendar was in order under the eighth rule?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if I understand the situation of this matter it is this: While the Senate was operating under the eighth rule this bill to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims was reached in its order upon the Calendar. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] interposed an objection. When that objection was interposed the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] moved to proceed with the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection, and that is the shape in which the business was when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. That being so, can it be possible that the objection to the bill made by the Senator from Michigan, which was staid in its effect by the motion of the Senator from Delaware to proceed notwithstanding the objection, shall now be given full effect because we have reached 2 o'clock? It seems to me, Mr. President, that the effect of the objection was destroyed by the motion to proceed notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Indiana will pardon the Chair, that suggestion of his is a mere suggestion as to the form of putting the question, and not a matter of substance, because under the ninth rule the Chair is of opinion that when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives all the business provided for by the eighth rule terminates and the Calendar comes up under the ninth rule. If there then be a pending motion to take up a particular matter on the Calendar, that motion falls back under the execution of the eighth rule; but under the ninth rule, in the second clause, among the privileged motions is:

> Second. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar.

So that the Senator from Delaware is instantly entitled to renew his motion, and it is a mere question of putting the same motion over twice.

Mr. HAWLEY. But I think it does make a difference whether the Chair takes that course or not. It happened as a matter of pure accident that Rule VIII and Rule IX strike the same bill. Whatever was pending before 2 o'clock under Rule VIII is dead. It is a pure accident that under Rule IX we happen to hit the same bill, which is entitled to the full privileges of any bill on the Calendar. It is not subject to the limitations of the Anthony rule. I hold that the bill under consideration is before the Senate under the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question which the Chair submits to the Senate. The question which the Senator from Indiana raises is that the motion made by the Senator from Delaware before 2 o'clock is now to be disposed of notwithstanding the arrival of 2 o'clock, and the Chair simply reminds that Senator that as whatever bill comes up on the Calendar a motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill is in order after 2 o'clock, it is a simple question of the renewal of the motion.

Mr. HARRISON. It may be that there is not in this instance any great practical difference as to how this matter is approached; but my point is this: This bill never was passed over by reason of an objection; the effect of an objection under Rule VIII never operated upon this bill, because when that objection was made there was a motion made, notwithstanding the objection, to proceed to the consideration of the bill. Now, how would this stand if the bill did not occupy this position? Would the Chair, in proceeding under Rule VIII, to-morrow call this bill again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Indiana that as the Chair understands it the six preceding bills upon the Calendar have all been disposed of by an objection. If that objection does not place them at the foot of the Calendar, which was the question the Chair proposed to submit to the Senate, then they must be disposed of under the ninth rule, either by some action of the Senate in various ways or by a motion to proceed with this bill No. 9 in the order of business.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought we had agreed that the preceding eight numbers which we find upon the Calendar were really not properly there at all, but were bills upon the table, which should not have gone upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator then in the chair simply said that such of them as were upon the table were wrongly placed upon the Calendar, and that he would give directions to have the Journal examined for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not have reference to all of these preceding eight numbers, and it may be that the Chair is right in saying that in proceeding now under Rule IX those preceding numbers, if they are properly on the Calendar, should be called before No. 9. As to that I think no one will interpose any objection. The objection was to giving the effect to Rule VIII of putting Order of Business No. 9 at the foot of the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that he has examined the Journal, and that none of these bills are on the table. Therefore it is the opinion of the Chair, 2 o'clock having arrived, that the Calendar should be called in its order, under the ninth rule, beginning with Order of Business No. 3.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask whether it would be in order by unanimous consent to pass over the first eight numbers upon the Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be in order, undoubtedly.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask, then, unanimous consent of the Senate that we may unravel this knot by passing over these measures which have been placed in this shape for the convenience of Senators, and upon which nobody wants any action now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to passing over the first eight numbers without prejudice to whatever rights they have on the Calendar?

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection myself to that proposition, but I have already stated my objection to taking up this bill to-day, and I make my objection for the purpose of carrying it over to-day. Now it stands in this way: Under the eighth rule this bill was under consideration, with an objection, and with a motion pending to proceed notwithstanding the objection. The hour of 2 arrived, and that leaves that bill with its objection and with its motion still pending, as I understand, because the next rule says that proceedings under the ninth rule shall commence not later than 2 o'clock. They must commence at 2. That stops all proceedings under the eighth rule. Then this bill under Rule VIII is not before the Senate, for it, with the motion appropriate to it, has gone over until the time is reached for that rule to operate again. The first thing under that rule, if we reach it to-morrow will be to take up this same bill with its pending motion to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand the Senator to say that an objection under the eighth rule affects the status of the bill at all under Rule IX? It can not have any possible effect upon it.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman may understand me to say that there is, under Rule VIII, a pending proposition to proceed to the consideration of that bill, which goes over, and when we proceed again under Rule VIII the question pending will be the motion of the Senator from Delaware to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. That may be true; but before we reach this number again under Rule VIII we have reached it under Rule IX, and that disposes of it.

Mr. CONGER. Ah, the gentleman, in order to be in the position he speaks of, has asked unanimous consent to take this up, which has not been granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to passing over the first eight numbers on the Calendar without prejudice to their rights on a future day? The Chair hears none, and it is so agreed. The Senator from Delaware now moves to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 9.

Mr. BAYARD. That being the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in order under the present status.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. Under the rule the motion is not in order, I submit. This is the first case by unanimous consent given, and it needs no motion. There is objection to proceeding with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That depends on the question whether the proceedings which took place carried this bill to the foot of the Calendar. The Chair thinks they did not. The Chair is of opinion that this bill stands now entitled to the right of way as of right under the rule; but the Chair, in deference to the suggestion made by the honorable Senator from Vermont, the President pro tempore, received the motion.

Mr. CONGER. But under the new rule, if I may make the suggestion, no bill can go to the foot of the Calendar except under Rule IX and on motion. Although I am opposed to taking up this bill, I have no hesitation in saying that in my judgment, the previous bills having been set aside by unanimous consent as not being properly on the Calendar, this now comes in as the first business on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will so direct.

Mr. CONGER. And it does not need any motion to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will direct the Secretary to proceed with the reading of the bill in accordance with his own opinion unless some Senator raises the point, in which case the Chair will submit it to the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. That being so decided, and properly, I now move to pass over the bill for the present, and for the reasons which I have stated. There are many provisions which ought to be in the bill that are lacking, and there are some in it which are objectionable. The bill requires some consideration, and I have had no opportunity whatever to even examine it until I sent for it just now. I ask simply that it may be passed over without prejudice until another day.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, may I ask whether Senate bill No. 19 is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill No. 19 is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the reading of the bill has not yet been completed. While the bill is in the process of being read the Senator from Michigan proposes a motion to postpone. The Chair would consider that the Senate before voting on it has a right to have the reading of the bill completed for information.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be completed, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will finish the reading of the bill, and then the motion of the Senator from Michigan will be in order.

Mr. CONGER. We are starting under these rules, and I do not wish to cavil about them. In my judgment—and I ask the opinion of the Chair—if the reading of a bill, when a motion is made to pass it over, can be demanded under the rules, it may occupy the entire morning. I suppose the object of allowing, by the third clause of the ninth rule, a "motion to pass over the pending subject, which, if carried, shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the Calendar," was that the Senate might, by passing over a bill without being delayed by its reading or anything else, pass it over without prejudice and proceed to other business on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is a privileged motion, too, under the ninth rule and in order at any time.

Mr. CONGER. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will read the rule:

> And in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn.

And it goes on to name three or four motions that may be made at any time under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so holds. The Senator from Michigan moves to pass over the pending bill. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BAYARD. Is that in order pending the reading of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will so hold under the phraseology of the rule.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to say to the Senate that the question of its proceeding to consider any measure is entirely under its control; but at some time or other the bill on the Calendar must be read, and I submit to Senators that they allow the reading of the bill to be completed, and if they desire to postpone the bill let that motion be made; and when that motion is made then the Senate will decide it. Perhaps there may be something to be said upon it. Surely it is but proper to allow the reading of the bill to be completed; there will be no loss of economy of the Senate's time in permitting that to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The debate proceeds only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senator from Michigan to withdraw his motion until the reading of the bill is completed.

Mr. CONGER. I must say for myself that to understand a bill of this character and have time to know what I would object to and what I would approve of, I must, and every Senator must himself, leisurely and with time examine it. It will be no advantage to me to have this bill read at the desk, only as it gives me time to look it over myself.

Mr. BAYARD. But the Senator is aware that the bill must be read at one time or another before even any motion is made connected with it or any amendment can be acted on. If the Senator will withdraw his objection to the reading of the bill, then after that he can make any motion he sees fit.

Mr. CONGER. I desire when we take up this bill for action that it shall be read and be fresh in the minds of all, and I desire that we may proceed with it under the rule. If the Senate see fit to take up such a bill as this and act upon it without having had any opportunity to examine it, they will so order; but under the rule, as a privileged motion, I have the right to make one of either of the three or four motions specified in Rule IX. This is the third clause. There are two others that might be made. It is a privileged motion, and it takes away, as I understand, the reading of the bill and all other business, and must be decided without debate. My own remarks, as well as those of the Senator, are beyond the rule undoubtedly, and I should not have made any remark except that this is the first case under the new rules where this question has come up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate pass over the pending bill? [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to submit——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator that debate proceeds by unanimous consent only; the rule requires the question to be put without debate. If there be no objection the Senator from Delaware will proceed.

Mr. BAYARD. This bill has passed the Senate twice almost in the identical words in which it is now brought forward a third time. It has been fully debated on each occasion, in 1879 when it was brought here under the charge of the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and in 1881 when under the charge of the late Senator from Ohio, Judge Thurman. It is brought here again under the unanimous report of the Committee on Private Land Claims. It relates to a general law, and is intended to supersede the necessity of a large body of separate acts upon individual cases. If it please the Senate with a knowledge of these facts to postpone a measure of this kind that is essential for the settlement of private rights in a manner approved by the continued and reiterated voice of the Senate after full understanding, of course it is in their power to do it.

Mr. CONGER. May I say one word in reply to the Senator, although contrary to the rules?

I do not like myself, and I think there are other new Senators here who do not like, to have it said that before we came into the Senate at all the Senate acted upon this and we are all agreed about it. Since the first discussion one-third of the Senators in number, and perhaps a large proportion of them in fact, have changed; since the second discussion another third have changed, bringing new Senators into this body, either the same men or others who have never been here before. I submit that it is not exactly courteous to say to new members that the Senate has decided this and they have nothing to do but follow the lead. I can not do that for myself, with all respect for these ancient Senators. It may not be a part of my duty that I should.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask unanimous consent to say one word in respect to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed, there being no objection.

Mr. MILLER, of California. This is an important measure and affects land claims to a very large extent in some of the Territories of the United States. Since the bill passed the Senate at the last Congress a very great opposition to it has been developed on the part of many people who are interested in land claims that are affected by it. I do not think it is well to undertake to force a bill of this importance upon the Senate at this time when Senators have not had an opportunity to investigate the matter. I was not aware of the great opposition to it until yesterday. I have not had time to examine it, and I should like to have time to look into it, because it is a matter of very great importance to many people in the Territories on the Pacific. I feel it my duty to make a thorough investigation of it, which I can not do if the bill is proceeded with now. I would appeal to the Senator from Delaware not to press this bill at this time, but let it go over without prejudice, and we can take it up some other day and dispose of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate pass over the pending bill?

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, may I say one word? The Senator from California and the Senator from Michigan must understand that nothing is more agreeable to me than to consider the convenience and personal courtesy due to my associates here; but this is a matter of public business; it is a bill which has been pressed on this committee for many years; as I said before it has met the approval of the Senate, and I am the mere organ of the committee to bring it before the Senate and ask for its earliest consideration. Having that fact before it and the Senate hearing the statements of the two Senators on the other side of the Chamber it can vote on the subject, but I do not feel at liberty to treat the matter as a personal one under my control to be brought up and postponed at will, and therefore the Senate at its own discretion will deal with the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate pass over the pending bill?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. BAYARD. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GARLAND. Before the vote is taken I wish to make a statement in reference to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to be permitted to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARLAND. If I recollect aright, this bill has passed the Senate twice in the last four years.

Mr. BAYARD. I have stated that fact.

Mr. GARLAND. I was out when it was stated. I wish to say to the Senators from Michigan and California that this is an important bill, and we can take it up now as the first one on the Calendar and progress with it until we get to some point of difficulty, when the matter may go over. The danger is that if the bill is passed over now other legislation of importance may be taken up, and we shall not see this bill again. I know the fact that this bill is important. The last time it was before the Senate we stopped somewhere in section 12 on a question with reference to mining interests, some amendment being offered, I think, by Judge Davis, who is not now a member of this body. I would suggest to Senators that if they wish the bill to progress we had better go on with it now. There can not be much debate about it. If we settle on the general principle of the bill the details will not take much time, I apprehend, because the Senators who have been here three or four years are familiar with it, it having been debated pretty thoroughly.

There are one or two features of the bill to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware who reported it when we get to them, but I suggest that we proceed with the bill and get as far as we can and let it stand as the regular order, if we adjourn to-day without completing it. I think we ought to make some progress with it. If we do not it will be left behind, and there will be great difficulty in getting at it again.

Mr. CONGER. As arguments have been permitted in this matter by consent, I suppose I may be allowed to say a word more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONGER. There are provisions in this bill authorizing the issue of scrip equivalent to the Porterfield scrip and the Valentine scrip, which have met and will meet with the opposition of every right-minded man in the Western States. The right is given in this bill to have land scrip issued which may be located anywhere in the United States where the Government has public lands, as in the case of the Valentine scrip. The right is given to go with that scrip into any city and take Government land on which there has been a Government building that is not now used by the Government, for this kind of scrip can be located upon it in the heart of a city, as the Porterfield scrip and the Valentine scrip have been used. It may be located on the home and the land of a homesteader being a squatter and take it away, as has been done with these other kinds of scrip repeatedly.

There is no provision for saving the rights of minors and of persons disqualified mentally to manage their own concerns. There is a provision here which gives the first claimant, if he can go along into court and without anybody who has an equal right being heard at all, a right to proceed and get a patent from the United States good as against everybody but the United States.

If this bill has passed the Senate three or four or five times, I say it is time the people of this country knew what kind of bills pass the Senate. If I am right in my conjecture in regard to this bill, I charge it as being unjust and infamous, who ever passed it, wrong in principle, wrong in law, unjust and inequitable. Now, if it is to be taken up without one hour or one day to give an opportunity for examination to those who believe as I do that this bill will work wrong to individuals and to all the States and Territories in which Government lands lie by giving a precedence and a preference to those who can in an obscure court in some far-off Territory get some decree by which they shall be declared entitled to seven or eight leagues of land and if the land is occupied by somebody else they have the right to have scrip issued to them, which they can lay in forty or eighty acre lots or any subdivision under our land laws on any lands in any State or Territory belonging to the United States, if such a bill as that is to be forced through, and if it has the character and the qualities which I think it has from my hasty reading, then it is time the Senate did devote a little more consideration to it and a little more examination to it.

We have had enough of that kind of scrip. Homesteaders have been driven from their home, from the place upon which they had expended years of toil and of suffering; the man and his wife and his family have been driven off by those who hold just such scrip as is provided for these old Mexican claim-holders driven from home under the blazing sword of such laws as this.

I have said enough to call attention to the character of this bill as I find it, and I have said enough to indicate what it does contain that is wrong and what it does not contain that is right that it ought to contain. Some way of settling these claims that have been pending from fifty to one hundred years may be desirable; but unless there is some great job and steal lying behind this, there is no great necessity for pressing it this morning. It may lay over safely a day or a week. It has lain nearly twenty-five years since the commission was established to settle these claims. The doors have been opened continually for those who held these claims to go before commissions three or four times and to come to Congress any day or any year with their claims. This bill covers the old remnants that are left, and now it is provided that a man may go to a court in any of the Territories, to a court in Utah, to settle rights against minors, against non-competents, against any class that may not have had their attention called to this, and this bill provides that patents may issue from the United States to the successful prosecutors of these claims before these courts. This bill needs something more; it needs some other restrictions; it needs some amendments. I can not tell now what, and in what order, and in what language those amendments for the safety of the people, even of the rights of the United States, and for the safety of the settlers upon these lands, ought to be made. It is not enough to tell me that such a bill as that with the provisions I find in it has passed or has been allowed to pass time after time. It may have been passed as it is proposed this shall be, without lying over, without waiting for examination.

Mr. HARRISON. I think——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent that the Senator from Indiana shall proceed? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I am asking a privilege, Mr. President, which I was intending to deprecate. I think the abuse has been very apparent in the discussion to which we have just listened. It might be well enough in advance to state the reasons pro and con why time should be given in order to meet the convenience of Senators, that they might inform themselves as to the contents of this bill; but such a discussion as we have just listened to from the Senator from Michigan of the merits of the bill itself is hardly fair at this stage of the proceeding. I have not familiarized myself with the details of this bill. The only interest I have had in it has come from the complaints not of the owners of Mexican grants, not of men who are to acquire scrip or to establish titles under the vague and undefined grants of the Mexican Government or Spanish Government, but from honest citizens of the States who have gone to the Territories and who have been driven from places where they have located for the pursuit of legitimate business by the extension and swelling of these grants by local and natural boundaries. That is the interest I have felt in it. The bill, as I understand, was reported by the careful Senator from Vermont, and has several times met the sanction of the Committee on Private Land Claims of this body.

Now, I do not want it to go over; but it is hardly fair in this preliminary debate to cast such insinuations against those of us who have thought we should serve the public and serve the interests of settlers by providing some tribunal of law whereby the boundaries of these grants might be definitely established upon evidence.

But, Mr. President, enough of that. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Delaware whether, under the circumstances, the friends of the bill might not agree that this motion should prevail, with the understanding on the part of those who have expressed a desire to look into the details of this bill that further objection to its consideration will not be made after to-morrow.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I must crave leave to occupy the attention of the Senate for one moment in regard to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAYARD. Each man here, sir, is the guardian of his own reputation, and he must speak and act in such way as in his opinion will best protect it. Therefore the suggestions that have been thrown out, not in the regular order of debate, but so gratuitously thrown out in advance by the Senator from Michigan, are such as I propose to take no notice of whatever except to make the comment that this measure, if ever there was one carefully prepared in the Senate of the United States or in either House of Congress with a view to guard the public interest and also the rights of weak individual owners, to prevent that which he has termed "big steals" of the public property, this measure is that one. It is intended to prevent a multiplicity of bills in the interest of those who are strong enough to obtain influence for their passage, and vest unknown, unmeasured areas of land in single or in corporate hands to the absolute destruction of the smaller individuals and real holders. The interests of the United States have been sedulousy guarded by the careful and eminent jurists who have prepared and considered the measure now before this body. The former Senator from Illinois, Judge Davis, the former Senator from Ohio, Judge Thurman, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], not to mention the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and every other member of the present Private Lands Committee, have scrutinized with care the provisions of this bill. They have presented it twice heretofore to the Senate, who have twice confirmed it by large majorities; and they bring it here again in the interest of public justice and of private right, in order to frame such a course of procedure and provide such a tribunal as shall execute our guarantees as a government and fairly be capable of ascertaining the individual rights and the duties of all claimants under the Spanish or Mexican grants.

That was the object of this bill. If a bill with such preparation, with such approval as I have stated, should be spoken of as the Senator from Michigan, apparently without examination of its contents, has seen fit to do, then it seems to me that no measure can be placed beyond assault. But as this bill I apprehend upon the examination of the Senate will meet its approval, and as they will see in it the most carefully prepared provisions to protect the United States and to protect individual holders in their rights and to prevent so far as we may those vast aggregations of property in single hands that to-day are straining republican institutions all over the land, I am loath to interpose any objection to delay if it is for the purpose of examination; and I would suggest that there may be an agreement to fix an early day for the consideration of this important bill.

It is proper the Senate should know that a dozen other bills are now pending before the Committee on Private Land Claims, the further consideration of which may be dispensed with if this bill shall receive the approval of the Senate. In other words, we have prepared a general measure to meet the whole class of cases instead of attempting to try ex parte individual cases in a committee-room. If I can have the assistance of Senators who have made this suggestion of passing over this bill to bring it up at an early day I shall feel that I have accomplished what is my duty and have done some public service in so doing. I will ask why it can not be agreed—to-day is Monday—that we may take this bill up on Friday morning next. I will ask whether that agreement may not be made? If so, I shall withdraw objection to postponing its present consideration until that time.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I can speak only for myself. I am willing so far as I am concerned to have such an understanding. I do not know how the Senator from Michigan feels.

Mr. BAYARD. That will give the time necessary for examination.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to its being taken up at any reasonable time hereafter if it does not contain provisions which I say render it an undesirable and improper bill to pass, which will appear from the discussion. The only thing I have desired and asked is time to look at the bill and examine its provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Delaware that the operation of the pending motion is merely to postpone the bill until to-morrow, until the Calendar is next taken up.

Mr. BAYARD. Would the effect of that be to allow this bill to come up to-morrow then?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will take its place without prejudice.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, it comes up to-morrow.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would much rather we should assent to the proposition made by the Senator from Delaware. One day is not enough. I have no prejudices on this subject and no feeling about it, but I received certain information which led me to say that I should look out for this bill when it did come up, and I think it deserves serious consideration. I am as ready to give weight to the opinion of the eminent Senators the gentleman from Delaware has referred to as anybody, but I agree with the Senator from Michigan that I am to vote on my own judgment, giving all due weight to authority. I have serious doubts about some portions of this bill; and I should like a day or two to read it; I should like to be able to look at the Spanish and Mexican treaties; I should like to be able to look at the report on this subject, if one has ever been made. The bill stands on the Calendar now without any report from the committee.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator whether Friday next will suit him?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly, I will agree to that.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator to let it go until Monday next and then be considered.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well; I will ask that the bill be made the special order for Monday next at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Delaware, that this bill be made the special order for Monday next at 2 o'clock? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 346) to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes so as not to exclude retired Army officers from holding civil office in the Territories was announced as next in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

Mr. GARLAND. The bill was passed at the last session of Congress by unanimous consent. It is merely to give some relief, by allowing retired Army officers to act as officials in the Territories, that it is thought possibly may be of advantage to the people there.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not care to object to the consideration of this bill, but I want to say that I do not think it ought to pass. These men are on the retired-list of the Army, receiving a very considerable salary, which I think ought to satisfy them so far as official emolument is to go, and I am opposed to the theory or idea, which has been considered in various quarters, that we should use up certain Army officers by giving them civil employment. It was seriously recommended by a former Secretary of War ad interim that the heads of bureaus should be Army officers, and that in every way the surplus of officers——

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to a point of order. Will the Senator from Kansas wait until the bill is read?

Mr. PLUMB. The bill has been read, I understand.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. PLUMB. As I was saying, it has been recommended by a Secretary of War, or by a person who was afterwards Secretary of War, that the overflow from West Point should be accommodated by making the officers thus graduated the heads of bureaus in the various Departments of the Government, and so on in such a way that finally all the Army should find places in the civil employment of the Government. Now this is not going so far as that, but it is a step in that direction. It is, besides, violating the theory of another provision of the statutes which prevents a person from receiving the compensation of two offices.

I do not know what Territory the authors of this bill may have had specially in mind, but the limited experience I have had in Territories convinces me that no Territory can seriously be in lack of aspirants for all the offices to be filled by election or by appointment. There will be no necessity either to resort to a draft or to resort to the Army Register for the purpose of getting suitable men or men who are supposed to be suitable to fill all the offices which are required to be filled.

Mr. President, I propose to meet this question now. I never want to see the time when an Army officer will hold any civil position or be required by law to perform any civil duty. I do not want to see those instruments which we keep up for the destruction of human life ever put into that civil employment, which concerns itself with the productive power of the country, with the arts of peace, and with the performance of the peaceful functions of government. The Army, as I think, has no place, either in gross or in detail, in the administration of a republican government except in time of war and for the purposes of war, and, as I said, this is only a step now in the direction of pensioning, if I may use that term without offense, all the excess of Army officers upon the civil places of the Government, and thus closing the avenues to the ambition of the people of the country who have not been fortunate enough to be educated at West Point and to be in receipt of a salary at least sufficient to afford a decent living.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I introduced this bill, and it is not amenable to the objection made by the Senator from Kansas. That Senator need never fear trusting the people. This bill gives the people the right to make their selection of officers, and I for one will always intrust the people with power.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, Mr. President, if that be it, why not go still further, and say they may elect persons who are not citizens and elect women and elect members of the regular military establishment in active duty? If the Senator is so willing to trust the people, why not go that far?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are reasons, Mr. President, that the country has always recognized why officers in the regular Army and upon the active-list should not hold certain appointments. We do not propose to interfere with them. There are a great many bad things we might do or might propose to do, but there are none of them in this bill. The case that gave origin to this suggestion, if I recollect correctly, was this: There is a disabled officer, who has been passed upon by the board as unfit for any active service, living, I think, in Washington Territory. His income is small, for his office was of a low grade. The people where he lives chose to elect him clerk of the county court. It was found upon looking at the statute that he could not hold the position. That poor fellow may work at anything else under the sun; if he is a shoemaker he can make shoes; he may get a clerkship in a railroad office, or be a clerk in a dry-goods store if he can hobble about and do the work; but the Government proposes to say that the danger to republican institutions is such that all the people of his county in a Territory may not make that man the clerk of the county court. I say with the Senator from Missouri, if we can not trust our fellow-citizens to give a broken-down, retired officer some little petty appointment, to elect him constable or clerk of the county court, the country is in great danger.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Anthony,	Fair,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Frye,	Jones of Florida,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Garland,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Butler,	George,	Manderson,	Sherman,

Edmunds,	Hoar,	Platt,

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT ON OREGON COAST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 701) making appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that this bill be passed over. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that there are two other bills introduced by him which have been read twice without reference.

Mr. DOLPH. They are of the same character and I desire the same order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks that these three bills be passed over. If there be no objection that order will be entered. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

THOMAS B. SHANNON.

The bill (S. 332) for the relief of Thomas B. Shannon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury charged by law with the settlement of the accounts of Thomas B. Shannon, as collector of customs at the port of San Francisco, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, to credit him with the sum of $4,777.36, the amount paid out of the subtreasury at San Francisco upon a draft erroneously signed by him in favor of Messrs. J. C. Merrill & Co. during that fiscal year, but it is to be shown to the satisfaction of the accounting officers and of the Secretary of the Treasury that the draft was signed by Shannon in due course of business and in good faith, without actual fault or neglect on his part, that diligent effort was made to recover the amount paid on the draft, and that the amount so paid is utterly lost to Shannon and to the United States.

Mr. MAXEY. Is there a report in that case? If there is I should like to hear it read.

Mr. MILLER, of California. There is a report. The bill has passed the Senate twice. The report explains the whole case.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. BAYARD December 18, 1883, as follows:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 332) for the relief of Thomas B. Shannon, of San Francisco, Cal., beg leave to submit the following report, with an amendment to the bill:

Thomas B. Shannon became collector of customs at San Francisco in July, 1872, and at the time of his entry in service a system of rules and regulations issued from the Treasury Department was in force, which, contrary to his suggestions in certain important particulars, was continued until he left said office.

As collector of customs he was obliged, ex officio, to disburse public moneys by check; and all such checks were by these Treasury regulations made payable to bearer and not to order. The check-books, in blank, were furnished by the Department, and no others were to be used by the collector. Under the practice at the various custom-houses, where the amount of duties upon an invoice was not immediately and accurately ascertainable, a deposit was made by the importer, which deposit, upon a subsequent and definite calculation of duties, was either increased to meet the amount due to the Government, or diminished by the check of the collector, previously countersigned by the naval officer, for the amount of rebate to be paid the importer.

The house of J. C. Merrill & Co. was largely engaged in the importation of sugars, and as the deposit was generally so arranged as to be in excess of the probable amount of duties, it was a frequent occurrence to refund to them considerable amounts to balance their overdeposit for duties. One of the blank checks was furtively abstracted by some unknown person from the book of blanks kept by the refunding clerk, which abstraction was made from a page remote from that upon which the last check had been filled up and entered, so that its abstraction was not reasonably discoverable until the check was reached in the usual order of consumption of checks.

The check in question was made out for $4,777.84, dated September 13, 1875, and duly numbered. From the testimony before the committee, of the detectives and clerks, the signature of the naval officer was forged, and the check, thus apparently approved by the naval officer, was presented, in what appears to have been the regular course of business of the custom-house, to the collector for his signature, which was by him unsuspectingly attached. Upon the discovery of the fraud, a few days subsequently, the amount was promptly made good by the collector out of his private funds on September 21, 1875.

It is obvious to this committee that such an order of business was insecure and lacked the reasonable features of protection to the public interests and Treasury and the officers, but it also appears that the business was conducted under the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department, which the officers, including the collector, were not permitted to amend. Indeed, Mr. Shannon objected to the practice of drawing checks to bearer for these large amounts paid in rebate of duties, and drew the attention of the assistant treasurer of the United States, Mr. William Sherman, to the obvious danger of such practice, but the objection was not sustained, and the practice was continued.

Mr. Shannon, it seems, had suggested additional checks to accompany the refund of duties, such as the autograph initials of the auditor of the custom-house, and of the accountant of the naval office, and drawing the checks to the order of the person entitled to receive payment, but his suggestions were not suffered to prevail.

In September, 1875, a period of financial consternation in California followed upon the failure of the Bank of California, and a considerable amount of money, overdeposited by importers, was in the custom-house, rendering the early liquidation of duties especially necessary. The house of J. C. Merrill & Co. had been for a long time engaged in the importation of sugars, and large amounts had been paid them by way of refund of duties, the last payment having been made in July, 1875, and for an amount closely approximating the sum demanded upon the forged check. It was under these circumstances, and controlled by the regulations of the Treasury Department, using the blank checks prescribed by the Department, drawn to bearer, by the regulations of the Department, and countersigned only by the naval officer, that Collector Shannon, by reason of the ordinary and apparently regular routine of business in his office, signed the check for $4,777.84, to which the counter-signature of the naval officer had been forged.

It appears the collector made no demur as to his strict legal liability, and promptly paid over to the assistant treasurer the amount of the forged check, and has been without the use of the money from that time to this. He employed a detective to examine into the case, and the aid of all the officers of the United States of that district was also called into requisition.

Reports from J. F. Evans, the special agent of the Treasury; of J. F. Miller, auditor of the custom-house; of Henry Hook, refunding clerk; of J. C. Merrill & Co., the importers; of William Sherman assistant treasurer; and of J. W. Lees, captain of the detective force of San Francisco, which were before your committee, all combine to show the earnest and vigilant effort made to discover the guilty party in the transaction; that suspicion fell upon a person not connected with the custom-house, who is now dead. No suggestion of any personal dishonor or neglect upon the part of the collector has been made from any quarter.

Following the proposition laid down by the Court of Claims for the relief of honest officers who have been victimized in similar cases, your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill for the relief of Thomas B. Shannon.

Affirmative proof of his honesty and fidelity is attested by a letter from Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, dated February 19, 1881, to Mr. Shannon, which is in the hands of your committee.

This committee have also submitted the draught of the foregoing report with the accompanying papers to the Secretary of the Treasury, and have in their hands a letter to him from H. A. Lockwood, the Acting Commissioner of Customs, dated January 23, 1882, in which he states:

"The allegations of the claimant are not disputed by the accounting officers."

(See also report No. 126, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.)

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

The bill (S. 153) providing a civil government for the Territory of Alaska was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). There are various amendments to the bill reported from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. There are some amendments, most of them merely verbal, reported by the committee. I ask that they be taken up and disposed of, and afterward any other amendments received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment reported by the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 4, after the word "Government," the committee report to strike out the words "in all matters;" and in line 5, after the word "district," to strike out the words "wherein the same may be affected;" so as to read:

That there shall be appointed for the said district a governor, who shall reside therein during his term of office and be charged with the interests of the United States Government that may arise within said district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 14, after the word "due," to strike out "enaction" and insert "execution;" so as to read:

He may also grant reprieves for offenses committed against the laws of the district or of the United States until the decision of the President thereon shall be made known. He shall be ex officio commander-in-chief of the militia of said district, and shall have power to call out the same when necessary to the due execution of the laws and to preserve the peace, and to cause all able-bodied citizens of the United States in said district to enroll and serve as such when the public exigency demands; and he shall perform generally in and over said district such acts as pertain to the office of governor of a Territory, so far as the same may be made or become applicable thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 22, before the word "acts," to insert the word "official;" so as to read:

He shall make an annual report, on the 1st day of October in each year, to the President of the United States, of his official acts and doings, and of the condition of said district, with reference to its resources, industries, population, and the administration of the civil government thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 2, before the word "jurisdiction," to insert "criminal," and after the word "jurisdiction" to strike out the words "civil and criminal;" and in line 3, after the words "United States," to insert "and the civil jurisdiction of district courts of the United States exercising the jurisdiction of circuit courts;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That there shall be, and hereby is, established a district court for said district, with the criminal jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, and the civil jurisdiction of district courts of the United States exercising the jurisdiction of circuit courts, and such other jurisdiction, not inconsistent with this act, as may be established by law; and a district judge shall be appointed for said district, who shall reside therein, and hold at least two terms of said court therein in each year, one at Sitka, beginning on the first Monday in May, and the other at Wrangel, beginning on the first Monday in November. He is also authorized and directed to hold such special sessions as may be necessary for the dispatch of the business of said court at such times and places in said district as he may deem expedient, and may adjourn such special session to any other time previous to a regular session. He shall have authority to employ interpreters, and to make allowances for the necessary expenses of his court.

Mr. MORGAN. I would inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it is the intention of the committee to give this court jurisdiction of capital felonies?

Mr. HARRISON. This is a United States district court, and it is intended to confer upon it the criminal jurisdiction which the district courts exercise in the States, and, in addition to that, the civil jurisdiction, I believe it is expressed, of the district courts when sitting as circuit courts. I am not sure since the Senator suggests it whether it would cover jurisdiction in capital cases.

Mr. MORGAN. I was going to suggest that if it was the object of the committee to give jurisdiction to this court of capital felonies it would be necessary to insert in line 3 the words "and circuit," so as to read "district and circuit courts of the United States;" because I do not understand that the district courts of the United States have jurisdiction in capital felonies.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator whether in his opinion the same purpose would not be better accomplished by putting in line 4, after the word "civil," the words "and criminal," so as to read, "and the civil and criminal jurisdiction of district courts of the United States exercising the jurisdiction of circuit courts."

Mr. MORGAN. That will meet the idea. An indictment can originate for a capital offense in a district court, but it must be transferred to the circuit court for trial.

Mr. HARRISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] who was with me on the subcommittee, to the suggestion that the words "and criminal" be inserted after the word "civil" in line 4.

Mr. GARLAND. I think that is correct and would meet the point, which is one of some doubt as to phraseology, suggested by the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], to insert in line 4, after the word "civil," the words "and criminal;" so as to make the amendment of the committee read:

And the civil and criminal jurisdiction of district courts of the United States exercising the jurisdiction of circuit courts.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it is the intention in the amendment of section 3 to leave out the word "civil" where it applies to district courts.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not understand the question of the Senator.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 3 of section 3 the committee propose to amend by striking out the words "civil and criminal" where the reference is to district courts, inserting "criminal" before the word "jurisdiction" in line 2. Was it the intention of the committee to leave out the word "civil," so as not to confer in the section upon this court the civil jurisdiction of a district court?

Mr. HARRISON. That was the intention. I do not recall now—perhaps the Senator can suggest some branch of civil jurisdiction which under the general laws of the United States is vested in a district court that it would be important to embrace here.

Mr. DOLPH. The district courts have original jurisdiction of admiralty cases. I do not know whether it is the intention that all those controversies are to be settled in that court or whether they are to be still referred to the court in Oregon.

Mr. HARRISON. It was the intention of the committee to give this court to be constituted in the district of Alaska full jurisdiction of all matters arising within that Territory properly cognizable in the courts of the United States sitting either as circuit or district courts.

Mr. DOLPH. That being the case, I think the word "civil" should be restored, and inserted in line 2 of section 3 before the word "criminal."

Mr. HARRISON. I see no objection to that.

Mr. GARLAND. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] proposes to amend the amendment of the committee, in line 2 of section 3, by inserting after the word "the" the words "civil and;" so as to read: "the civil and criminal jurisdiction of districts courts of the United States."

Mr. HARRISON. I will propose that amendment as a committee amendment, as the amendments of the committee are to be considered first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana whether the Oregon civil and criminal laws, which are declared to be in force in the Territory of Alaska by this bill, are to change with the changes made by that State, or whether they are the present civil and criminal laws only, not to be changed?

Mr. HARRISON. We have not yet reached the section to which the Senator refers. We are now upon the third section. I think, however, that it was not the intention, nor would the language do so, to incorporate the changing legislation of Oregon, but the purpose was to accept the Oregon code as it is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 4, line 13, after the word "deeds," to insert "and mortgages and other contracts relating to real estate," and in line 19, after "hereinafter," to strike out the words "to be;" so as to read:

He (the clerk) shall be ex officio recorder of deeds and mortgages and other contracts relating to real estate and register of wills for said district, and shall establish secure offices in the towns of Sitka and Wrangel, in said district, for the safekeeping of all his official records and of records concerning the reformation and establishment of the present status of titles to lands, as hereinafter directed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 23, before the word "instruments," to strike out the words "accounts and;" so as to make the proviso read:

That the district court hereby created may direct, if it shall deem it expedient, the establishment of separate offices at the settlements of Wrangel, Oonalashka, and Juneau City, respectively, for the recording of such instruments as may pertain to the several natural divisions of said district most convenient to said settlements, the limits of which shall, in the event of such direction, be defined by said court; and said offices shall be in charge of the commissioners, respectively, as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 4, before the word "courts," to strike out "district" and insert "circuit;" so as to read:

That there shall be appointed by the President four commissioners in and for the said district, who shall have the jurisdiction and powers of commissioners of the United States circuit courts in any part of said district, but who shall reside, one at Sitka, one at Wrangel, one at Oonalashka, and one at Juneau City.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. While we are upon section 5, it has been suggested to me that there might be some question whether the laws of Oregon, which are made applicable to the Territory, might not be subject to the changing legislation of that State. I will therefore move, in line 7, of section 5, after the word "criminal," to insert the word "now;" so as to read:

Such commissioners shall exercise all the duties and powers, civil and criminal, now conferred on justices of the peace under the general code of the State of Oregon, so far as the same may be applicable in said district, and may not be in conflict with this act or the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the words in the ninth line of the section, which relate to the laws of Oregon, "so far as the same may be applicable in said district," in conferring duties and powers, civil and criminal, upon such officers "under the general code of Oregon." Why is it necessary to leave it open to any question as to what is or is not applicable in the district? Who is going to decide what is applicable or what is not applicable? It appears to me that those words may lead to complications and difficulties.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say in response to the Senator that the courts before which the question shall be raised whether a certain law of Oregon was or was not in force in the Territory must decide. There may be, and always is, in the legislation of almost every State, some legislation that by its very terms and character is local; as, for instance, there might be in the legislation of Oregon, if they allow special legislation, something that was applicable to a particular district, and punished in a certain way, some offense in a particular county.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That would not be a general law of Oregon, however.

Mr. HARRISON. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests, certain duties as to reporting fees and matters of that kind might be imposed by a State law. I do not think there will be any trouble in the practical administration of this question. All of those things that are not in their very nature local to the State of Oregon and that might be transplanted to another district or State would be included under this bill.

Mr. MILLER, of California. My object in making the suggestion has been attained. I only wanted the construction which the Senator from Indiana has placed upon it to go upon the record, so as to have it understood.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest that it is only the general laws of the code of Oregon that are made applicable. It seems to me that the words "so far as the same may be applicable in said district" will lead to embarrassment in the administration of this act and they ought to be dropped. I do not see the necessity of them. It is only the general laws that are made applicable in any event. Such local laws as the honorable Senator from Indiana refers to are not included.

Mr. HARRISON. But, if the Senator will allow me, such a law as I suggested would probably be published with the general laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be reported.

Mr. DOLPH. Before leaving the fifth section I think what was intended would be better understood by striking out, in the eighth line of the section, the word "general," before "code," and inserting "civil and criminal;" so as to read, "under the civil and criminal code of the State of Oregon."

Mr. HARRISON. I defer to the Senator's better knowledge of the present state and form of the legislation of Oregon.

Mr. MILLER, of California. There is a civil and a criminal code in Oregon?

Mr. DOLPH. They are all embraced in the same volume.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The phraseology suggested by the Senator from Oregon would be better than that found in the text.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask how comprehensive those codes are? Do they deal with the subjects generally?

Mr. DOLPH. The civil code codifies and embraces all the general laws relating to criminal proceedings.

Mr. HARRISON. If that be true, then the language suggested by the Senator from Oregon would embrace what the committee intended; yet it seems to me the terms used here are general enough to embrace what is in the mind of the Senator from Oregon as well as in my own, and that possibly the phrase he suggests instead might put some limitation that we would not either of us desire.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps, as we have put in the word "now," it might be well to substitute for the word "code" the word "laws;" so as to read, "under the general laws of the State of Oregon."

Mr. HARRISON. I think that suggestion is good. I ask to substitute the word "laws" for "code."

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest that the word "general" may be omitted in the eighth line, as in the ninth line the phrase occurs "so far as the same may be applicable."

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me the word "general" has an important and an appropriate place there, and that when we make it read "now conferred on justices of the peace under the general laws of the State of Oregon" we have accomplished what we all intend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, in line 8 of section 5, after the word "general," to strike out the word "code" and insert the word "laws;" so as to read:

Now conferred on justices of the peace under the general laws of the State of Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 6, before the word "duties," in line 12, to insert "discharge the;" so as to make the section read:

That the marshal for said district shall have the general authority and powers of the United States marshals of the States and Territories. He shall be the executive officer of said court, and charged with the execution of all process of said court and with the transportation and custody of prisoners, and he shall be ex officio keeper of the jail or penitentiary of said district. He shall appoint four deputies, who shall reside severally at the towns of Sitka, Wrangel, Oonalashka, and Juneau City, and they shall respectively be ex officio constables and executive officers of the commissioners' courts herein provided, and shall have the powers and discharge the duties of United States deputy marshals and those of constables under the laws of the State of Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 7, line 6, after the word "act," to insert "or the laws of the United States;" so as to read:

That the general laws of the State of Oregon relating to civil actions and proceedings testamentary and of probate, and also in respect to crimes and punishments, are hereby declared to be the law in said district, so far as the same may be applicable and not in conflict with the provisions of this act or the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment that he has incorporated in section 5 by inserting the word "laws" in the place of "code." In section 7 "the general laws of the State" have a qualified meaning attached to them. Section 7 reads:

That the general laws of the State of Oregon relating to civil actions and proceedings testamentary and of probate, and also in respect to crimes and punishments, are hereby declared to be the law in said district, &c.

Does the Senator interpret that to qualify the general laws incorporated in section 5?

Mr. HARRISON. I would say to the Senator that section 5 simply confers jurisdiction, and refers to the laws of Oregon simply with a view of fixing the limits of the jurisdiction.

Mr. GARLAND. That is, it is independent of and not necessarily attached to what is expressed in section 7?

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me not, because we might adopt a law that was broader than the jurisdiction conferred; but the jurisdiction can not be broader than the law adopted. I think, however, I will suggest to the Senator that perhaps we should make the first line of section 7 read, "the general laws of the State of Oregon now in force."

Mr. GARLAND. Yes; I was going to make that suggestion directly. I think that is a proper suggestion.

Mr. HOAR. That should also be in the last line of the preceding section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves, in section 7, line 2, after the word "Oregon," to insert the words "now in force;" so as to read:

That the general laws of the State of Oregon now in force relating to civil actions and proceedings, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Perhaps to make the measure uniform I should ask to go back to the last line of section 6, and after the words "under the laws of the State of Oregon" insert the words "now in force," so as to make that limitation applicable also to the constables and marshals. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana what will be, after this act goes into effect, the governing law as to the descent of estates? I do not speak of personal property, but of real property, the title to land—inheritance, I should rather say.

Mr. HARRISON. Except the lands the title to which is by this bill confirmed in the missionary stations there are no land titles that are recognized, unless it may be in connection with mines. The bill does not provide for extending the land laws of the United States to the Territory at present, for the reason that that subject is under consideration by the Committee on Public Lands, and a revision of the land laws is likely to be made. Therefore, we did not extend the land laws; but possibly the Senator's suggestion is right, that we should insert here something incorporating the laws of Oregon as to the descent of real estate, though practically it would have little application, for there is no land owned there.

Mr. HOAR. I see there are provisions authorizing the holding of land for some educational purposes. Land is to be confirmed at missionary stations in religious societies, and they would be unable to alienate such land unless there were some provision for it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. They ought not to do it.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator make a suggestion of amendment to that effect?

Mr. HOAR. I did not rise to make a suggestion, but to put an inquiry. I think probably it would be wiser to leave it out of this bill, and put it in some other bill when the proper time comes.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana to insert in the 8th line of section 6 the word "Kodiak," which is a town or village about midway between Sitka and Oonalashka, from five hundred to six hundred miles from Sitka. It is a town of more importance than Wrangel and of as much importance as Oonalashka. There should be a commissioner and justice of the peace at that place, and also a deputy marshal. I move to amend all the way through so as to insert "Kodiak."

Mr. HARRISON. Perhaps the Senator from California will allow us to go through with the committee amendments, and then he can move that amendment. I should be inclined to defer to his better knowledge of the geography of the coast there upon a matter of this kind, and if he will prepare and make those suggestions when we get through with the committee amendments, I would prefer that course.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Very well; but I think it would be better to do it as we go along.

Mr. DOLPH. I am not aware as to whether section 7 was discussed by the committee and what the intention of the committee really was in regard to extending the laws of Oregon over the Territory of Alaska. In section 5 as now amended it is provided that the commissioners to be appointed "shall exercise all the duties and powers, civil and criminal, now conferred on justices of the peace under the general laws of the State of Oregon;" but section 7 only extends certain laws of the State of Oregon over the Territory of Alaska. It extends the laws relating to civil actions and proceedings testamentary and of probate and the laws in respect to crimes and punishments; but unless I have overlooked some other provision it does not extend any of the laws that create or define public and private rights. While it provides a code of procedure for the conduct of civil actions, it does not define the rights which are to be adjudicated by the courts of justice. It seems to me that the whole of that limitation should be stricken out and instead of it a clause should be inserted that the general laws of the State of Oregon shall be in force so far as applicable to that Territory, the same as has been done in section 5.

The criticism I make is that it is attempted here to extend the code of procedure so far as it relates to the conduct of civil actions and the laws in respect to crime, but the general laws defining rights, among others the descent of real estate and the distribution of personal property, do not appear by the section as at present worded to be extended over the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not sure whether the words used here are not broad enough. I think the intention of the committee was (and I speak in the hearing of the Senator from Arkansas) to extend to the district of Alaska all the laws relating to civil actions, to private rights, and to crimes, as they now exist in the State of Oregon, so far as they are applicable and not in conflict with the laws of the United States. I see no objection in the beginning of section 7 to strike out, commencing in line 2, the words "relating to civil actions and proceedings testamentary and of probate and also in respect to crimes and punishments;" so that the first part of section 7 would read:

That the general laws of the State of Oregon, now in force, are hereby declared to be the law in said district, so far as the same may be applicable and not in conflict with the provisions of this act or the laws of the United States.

I ask the Senator from Oregon whether the amendment I have indicated suggests any difficulty to his mind.

Mr. DOLPH. I can see none. The amendment would be the same provision substantially that has been adopted in section 5.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he has noticed the proposed amendment, and whether it seems to him to be in the line of what he and I intended as the subcommittee on this bill?

Mr. GARLAND. The question I propounded a few moments ago had reference to this idea. It would be very difficult for Congress to sit down and make a special code for that Territory. I confess, on looking at the bill here again now for the third time, it is more limited than I intended as one of the committee it should be limited with reference to civil actions, proceedings testamentary, and of probate, &c. I think myself it is better to adopt the general code in so far as it is applicable and not inconsistent with the present laws of the United States. That is my impression, and it was the impression that I had upon the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment I proposed a short time since, inserting the words "now in force" after the word "Oregon," in line 2, having been adopted, I believe if I move to strike out the words "relating to civil actions and proceedings testamentary and of probate and also in respect to crimes and punishments," the clause will read as we all have agreed. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 7, line 16, after the word "court," to insert the words "where the amount involved is $200 or more;" in line 18, after the word "upon," to strike out the words "provision in civil cases for the costs thereof" and insert "the filing of a sufficient appeal bond;" and in line 19, after the word "appealing," to insert "to be approved by the court;" so as to read:

In all civil cases at common law any issue of fact shall be determined by a jury at the instance of either party; and an appeal shall lie in any case, civil or criminal, from the judgment of said commissioners to the said district court where the amount involved is $200 or more, upon the filing of a sufficient appeal bond by the party appealing, to be approved by the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the bill, as now proposed to be amended, is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. HARRISON. The bill as reported was a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. BECK. And the amendments?

Mr. HARRISON. Some of the amendments which have been made as we have progressed with the bill have simply been in the direction of meeting criticisms to the phraseology of the bill, and have not at all departed from the scope of the bill as it was agreed to by the committee.

Mr. BECK. Now, one other question: Why have the laws of the State of Oregon, which must be a good deal more complicated than those of the Territory of Washington, which lies nearer to Alaska, been selected in preference to the laws of Washington? There are very few white people, I understand, in Alaska, and the Territory of Washington being all under the authority of the United States, and its laws a good deal more simple than those that have grown out of the civilization of Oregon, why was Oregon selected in preference to Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. Not because the committee had made any careful study of the laws either of the State of Oregon or of the Territory of Washington, but because it was supposed that the Oregon code was in a more mature and satisfactory shape. I would rather apply to any Territory a code of laws adopted by the mature legislation of a State than the immature and imperfect legislation of an adjacent Territory. Alaska has, I may say, already been attached to Oregon for some judicial purposes. I suppose that was in the mind of the person who framed the original bill, and in presenting the bill, remodeling it, as I presented it to the Senate this session, I took it just as I found it in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported from the Committee on Territories will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, line 20, after the word "court," it is proposed to strike out the words "appeals and writs of error from the said district court shall lie to the United States circuit court for the district of Oregon;" and in line 22, after the word "said," to strike out "circuit" and insert "district;" so as to read:

And the final judgments or decrees of said district court may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States, as in other cases.

Mr. LAPHAM. I hope the amendment of the committee in this respect will not be adopted. The Senate will perceive that an appeal is provided in both civil and criminal cases from the judgment of the commissioners to the district court where the amount involved is $200 or more. Then the amendment now proposed entirely wipes out any appeal from the judgment of the district court to the circuit court for the district of Oregon. It entirely wipes out any intermediate hearing of a case, civil or criminal, and leaves only the remedy by appeal to the Supreme Court. Of course it can be readily seen that a large class of cases tried in the district court can never be reviewed, and it will be seen that, as in the case of a man who is tried for the crime of murder for a capital offense, it is provided in this section that the "district court shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all cases in equity or those involving a question of title to land, or mining rights, or the constitutionality of a law, and in all criminal offenses which are capital." A man may be tried for an offense involving his life under this bill in the district court, and there is no mode of review left to him. He can not get to the Supreme Court. There is no review of a criminal case in the Supreme Court of the United States, except upon a certificate of division, which is a rare occurrence.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question in that regard?

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is a citizen of the Territory of Alaska under this bill in any worse position than a citizen of a State? Is there any appeal now from the decision of a circuit court of the United States in a case of murder to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. LAPHAM. Very clearly not, but bills are pending for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I say to the Senator that whenever his bill passes it would be applicable here, and allow an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LAPHAM. That may or may not be so. That would depend upon the provision of the bill. We are here putting in a provision in this bill which, if adopted, will prevent an appeal from the district court to the circuit court of the district of Oregon, and will prevent any intermediate examination of either a civil or criminal case.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that we are adopting here a practice not for the first time, that is, constituting a district court of the United States a circuit court for certain purposes and conferring upon it the jurisdiction of a circuit court. We have adopted that here. The district court of Alaska is to be under this proposed law a circuit court of the United States, and there being one judge exercising the functions of circuit and district judge both, an appeal can only be under the law as it is now to the Supreme Court of the United States in capital criminal cases such as those to which the Senator has referred. As the Senator from Florida has said, there is no such appeal under the general law. This bill leaves the jurisdiction of the courts and the rights of parties as to appeals precisely where they are left by the present law in all those cases where a district court of the United States is given the functions of a circuit court.

Whenever the amendments to the general law regulating the jurisdiction of courts to which the Senator from New York has referred are adopted, as I hope they may be, because I regard it as an extremely hard case that a man should be tried in any court upon a capital charge and not be allowed to bring the proceedings of his trial in review before another court—whenever we shall amend that defect in the law, which is applicable to all the States alike, the amendment will under the very terms of this bill apply to the district of Alaska.

Mr. LAPHAM. There is now a general law which allows a review in a criminal case tried before a district court in the circuit court. That law was passed while I was a member of the other House, and is now in force. The difficulty with this amendment is that it not only takes away that right, but it takes away all right of appeal in civil actions from a district to a circuit court in cases involving a less sum than justifies coming to the Supreme Court of the United States, which is now fixed, if I remember aright, at the sum of $5,000. So all the litigation in Alaska Territory in the district court below the sum of $5,000 must end with the trial in the district court; there can be no further examination of those cases.

Now, I submit that the first draught of this bill in that respect was far better than it is made by the amendment. The amendment is absolutely unjust to suitors. The great mass of litigation in that Territory will be for amounts that never would justify coming to the Supreme Court of the United States, and yet they will be cases which ought to be reviewed in a circuit court; and as we have adopted the code of Oregon for other purposes, a review in the circuit court of Oregon is the proper reference, as was first proposed in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. There is one review allowed by this bill. The commissioners' courts are constituted courts of record for the trial of causes, and an appeal is allowed to the district court. There is one review allowed in all those cases, and it seemed to us that to allow appeals in these cases, especially civil cases below $5,000, from the district court in Alaska to the circuit court in Oregon, so remote from the place of trial, would be more likely to produce ill results than good results.

Mr. LAPHAM. The Senator will pardon me. If he will look back to section 7 he will find that it reads:

But the said district court shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all cases in equity or those involving a question of title to land, or mining rights, or the constitutionality of a law.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from New York whether under the laws of the United States this jurisdiction in equity is not exclusive in the circuit courts of the United States now?

Mr. LAPHAM. Suppose that be so?

Mr. HARRISON. Then we have left it here in this circuit court precisely as it is in New York and Indiana, and if the amount involved in the suit is less than $5,000 a citizen of New York or of Indiana, as of Alaska, has no appeal.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then why give a right of appeal in lesser cases?

Mr. HARRISON. A right of appeal where?

Mr. LAPHAM. What I do not understand in the philosophy of this bill is that a right of appeal is given from the commissioners' court, the inferior court, but when you come to the district court, where important rights are involved, no right of review whatever is given.

Mr. HARRISON. We give from this circuit court, called a district court, an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States upon precisely the same terms and in the same classes of cases that appeals under the general laws of the United States may be prosecuted from any circuit court. In constituting these inferior courts with the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, the framers of the bill thought it right that there should be a review in the Territory in the district court, where it could conveniently be had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator to allow us to finish the reading and disposition of the committee amendments. I understand the Senator himself desires to prepare an amendment. I shall make no objection to the bill going over as the unfinished business after we have got through with the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada withdraw his motion?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn. The next committee amendments will be reported.

Mr. HARRISON. Before we pass from section 8 I desire to propose an amendment to it in line 18. I believe it was the intention of the committee that as to the title to the lands occupied by the mission stations the limitation of six hundred and forty acres should apply to each station. In reading the bill it seems to me that as printed it probably would not be so construed. A proviso of section 8, beginning in line 17, reads:

That the title to the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes in said section, with the improvements theron erected by or for such societies, be confirmed and established in the several religious societies to which said missionary stations respectively belong.

It seems to me that might be subject to the construction that but six hundred and forty acres could be confirmed to the same religious society, no matter how many stations it might have. I therefore propose, after the word "acres," in line 18, to insert the words, "at any station;" so as to read:

That the title to the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres at any station now occupied as missionary stations, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I propose for consideration, but I do not ask that it be acted upon to-night, to add at the end of section 8 the following additional proviso:

And provided also, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause such surveys as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act to be made.

I understand the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is preparing a section which he would like to offer to-morrow. I merely propose this that it may be pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan proposes an amendment for information.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Michigan send it to the desk, and I may also make the same request of the Senator from Nevada when he prepares his amendment, so that these amendments may be printed and be on the table to-morrow?

Mr. PLUMB. I move, in section 8, line 9, to insert after the word "occupation" the words "or now claimed by them;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the Indians or other persons in said district shall not be disturbed in the possession of any lands actually in their use or occupation or now claimed by them, but the terms under which such persons may acquire title to such lands is reserved for future legislation by Congress.

I do not know by what tenure the Indians are there nor what ordinarily characterizes their claim of title, but it will be observed that the language of the proviso I propose to amend puts them into very small quarters. I think about 2 feet by 6 to each Indian would be the proper construction of the language "actually in their use or occupation." Under the general rule of occupation applied to an Indian by a white man, that would be a tolerably limited occupation and might possibly land them in the sea.

I do not want to make the condition of things up there any worse than it is now. There has been a good deal said about Indian schools and things necessary for the benefit of the Indians, concerning which I say nothing now, only I do not want to impose a government on several thousand Indians, for the purpose of assuming to consult the convenience of about four hundred white people, which shall do the Indians more hurt than it will do the white people good. Pending an investigation of this question I propose that the Indian shall at least have as many rights after the passage of this bill as he had before. I do not know that they have any rights at all; I only want to avoid the certain consequences which will result from the adoption of the bill with the language which I have quoted in it, and which of course would result in bringing to us the complaints of those innocent people, and of ultimately expending large sums of money in investigation, and finally in reimbursing them for their losses and otherwise compensating them and putting them in the condition of which they had been deprived.

Therefore I move to insert, after the word "occupation" the words "or now claimed by them," so that until we come to deal with this question in some permanent method, upon some system or plan, the bill shall leave the Indians exactly where it found them. I propose to add an amendment at the close of the section for the purpose of giving further effect to this idea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. HARRISON. The intention of the committee was to save from all possible invasion the rights of the Indian residents of Alaska. We were urged by some to extend the land laws of the United States to that Territory. The committee thought it unwise to do so, particularly in view of the fact that the subject of a revision of the land laws is now under consideration by the committee over which the Senator from Kansas presides. It was, however, believed to be necessary, and it was thought it could be done without injury to any one, to extend the mining laws of the United States.

It is claimed by some that there are very rich deposits of precious metals in Alaska. Some persons have gone there and attempted to locate claims, and there has been up to this time no color of right by which the location or extent of these claims or the title to them could be settled. We have, therefore, by the section to which this amendment is proposed, extended the mining laws, but it was not thought by the committee that the extension of the mining laws could possibly absorb any great extent of territory in Alaska.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We have had a very extended discussion here lately with respect to the operation of the Constitution and laws of the United States over a Territory. I should like to know what opinion the Committee on Territories holds in regard to the question of the operative force of the Constitution and laws of the United States within a Territory when they have not been extended to it by positive legislation of this Government. Does the Senator think the Constitution of the United States would be in force in a Territory without an act of Congress to apply it?

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Territories were able to devise this simple frame of government for Alaska without meeting any constitutional stumps. We provided for the extension of such laws as we thought the few inhabitants, the scattered population, of that Territory needed. We did not meet at all in the course of our discussion the constitutional question which the Senator from Florida has suggested, and I do not feel now like going out of my way, though I should be glad to accommodate him, to introduce into the discussion here so wide a question as the one he has named.

To come back to the matter I was speaking about, I have no objection to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] putting in the bill any amendment to this section which shall accomplish the purpose which he says he has in mind. It was the object of the committee absolutely to save the rights of all occupying Indians in that Territory until the report which is provided for in another section of the bill could be made, when the Secretary of the Interior could ascertain what their claims were and could definitely define any reservations that were necessary to be set apart for their use. We did not intend to allow any invasion of the Territory by which private rights could be acquired by any person except in so far as it was necessary in order to establish title to mining claims in the Territory. Believing that that would occupy but the smallest portion of the territory here and there, isolated and detached and small quantities of ground, we thought the reservation of lands occupied by the Indians or by anybody else was a sufficient guard against any serious invasion of their rights. But if the Senator will call attention again to this section after the committee amendments have been acted upon, I have no doubt I can agree with him upon an amendment which will make the limitation here even closer than the committee have made it.

Mr. PLUMB. Is not my amendment in order now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is in order now.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the understanding was, and therefore my remark, that we would go through the bill and consider the amendments of the committee first.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill has been otherwise amended in the progress so far.

Mr. HARRISON. Only as amendments have been suggested by the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not tenacious about this matter. If the chairman of the committee who has reported this bill prefers that amendments shall be withheld until after the committee amendments have been acted upon I shall not now insist upon the amendment which I have proposed.

I want to say, however, in response to what the Senator from Indiana said about the provisions of section 12, which provides for an investigation as to the rights of the Indians, that it does not in any way preserve those rights pending that investigation or pending the action by Congress. The whole evil of which I speak, and damage and loss and wrong to the Indians, may have been accomplished long before Congress ever sees or hears of the report, and even before the report is made. When that section is reached, then, at the proper time, I shall propose to so amend it as to require the Secretary of the Interior, under the operations of the commission, to segregate temporarily reservations for the use of the Indians which shall not be invaded by anybody until such time as Congress shall give them more definite location, and which shall make the reservations just as much theirs for all the purposes for which they can use them as they would have if they had the fee title.

It will be borne in mind that we are legislating about a people in regard to whom we know very little. We are passing upon the rights and the duties of a people about whom we know practically nothing and a people who are entirely helpless. We can not, in legislating at this long range, be too careful not to substitute some other person's rights for the right of some one now on the soil and to whom we are bound, or ought to be bound, at least by ties of sympathy and by ties of justice.

So I hope that before the bill is passed it will be subjected to severe scrutiny, to ascertain if by any means anything has crept in which shall seem to give anybody not now there the privilege or power of trespassing upon the rights of any other person there, because a trespass of that kind once engaged in would be very hard indeed to remedy.

Alaska is a long way off, and a series of outrages and wrongs might be perpetrated there which could not be remedied or healed and which would ripen into something which could not be reached by legislation or remedied practically before anybody knew anything about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas, the Chair understands, withdraws his amendment at present.

Mr. PLUMB. If that is the proper thing to do I withdraw the amendment, having practically given notice that I will offer it at a future time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be reported.

Mr. PLUMB. I think I shall venture to move now that we proceed to the consideration of executive business. There are several persons I know who are thinking of this bill with a view to amendments, and with doubts upon various points which have been suggested, and some which have not yet been suggested, and I think it will conduce to its proper consideration to let it go over now.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not object. I should like to complete the committee amendments to-night, but as it is late and an executive session is wanted, I shall not interpose an objection. The bill will remain as the unfinished business, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will remain as the unfinished business. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 18 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 21, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order of business is the call of States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

Pending the call, the Chair desires to lay before the House, by consent, certain requests of members and some executive communications.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. MILLARD, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. MAYBURY, for one week, on account of the death of a friend.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. MOREY to withdraw papers from the files relating to the claim for pension of Amanda Stokes.

TAX ON WHISKY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in response to House resolution relating to the suspension of the tax on whisky, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE COLUMBIAN INSTITUTION FOR DEAF AND DUMB.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the report of the president of the Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

A. J. SHELTON.

Mr. PRYOR introduced a bill (H. R. 3559) for the relief of A. J. Shelton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RE-ENACTMENT OF A STATUTE.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, introduced a bill (H. R. 3560) to re-enact section 4596 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES A. SIBLEY.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3561) for the relief of Charles A. Sibley, guardian of Lloyd M. Stevens; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LAND-GRANT RAILROAD.

Mr. DUNN introduced a bill (H. R. 3562) to compel the payment by certain railroad and railway companies of the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying of land granted to them by the United States, and requiring the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents conveying title to all lands granted to railroads which have been legally earned by virtue of the completion of their roads, as provided by law; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. DUNN. On the subject of the reference of this bill I desire to make this brief statement: That bill is intended by me as a substitute for a number of bills of a similar character which have been introduced from time to time but which are special in their character, whereas this relates to the whole of the land-grant railroads. These bills are with the Committee on Pacific Railroads, which has been and is now considering the subject. For that reason I shall move the reference of this bill to the Committee on Pacific Railroads. I do not know whether the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands will wish to antagonize that motion or not. It is immaterial to me which committee it goes to, only for the reason as I have stated that the subject is now under consideration by the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and I informed them that I would move the adoption of this bill as a substitute for a number of special bills which are before the committee.

Mr. COBB. I do not know that I understand the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Let the bill be read.

Mr. DUNN. I will explain very briefly the object of the bill. It is to provide by law for the collection of all sums due for surveying, selecting, and conveying lands granted to certain railroad companies, and to require the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain all lands which have been earned by the land-grant railroads by virtue of their having completed their roads within the time fixed by the law. The bill contemplates the restoration to the public domain of all unearned grants, and the issue of patents for lands which have been earned under the law. The subject being before the Committee on Pacific Railroads, as I have stated, I move the reference of this bill to that committee.

Mr. COBB. I do not know that I have any objection to the reference.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the bill will be referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

J. M. HOBBS.

Mr. PEEL, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 3563) for the relief of J. M. Hobbs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORLANDO W. EASTON.

Mr. PEEL, of Arkansas (by request), also introduced a bill (H. R. 3564) for the relief of Orlando W. Easton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM EURELE.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (H. R. 3565) granting a pension to William Eurele; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY H. ALLING.

Mr. MITCHELL also introduced a bill (H. R. 3566) granting arrears of pension to Mary H. Alling; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

A. WALKER.

The question was upon the reference of the bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. In my opinion this bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs, although a similar bill last session was referred to the Committee on War Claims. It is a bill for the relief of an officer who claims pay for having served under his commission before he was sworn into the service. I think it clearly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAGINNIS. We are reporting all that class of bills referred to us back to the House for reference to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] informs me that the Committee on Military Affairs are reporting all bills of this character back to the House and asking that they be referred to the Committee on War Claims. That being the case, this bill should go to the Committee on War Claims also.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it properly belongs to that committee.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

R. 3905) amending the laws granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, &c., so as to grant pensions to the soldiers of previous Indian wars and their widows; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. SAGER.

Mr. SHAW also introduced a bill (H. R. 3906) for the relief of George W. Sager; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Sclect Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. 3907) directing the Secretary of War to donate four condemned cannon and eight cannon-balls to Marion Craig Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Greece City, Pa.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPRESENTATIVE OF WILLIAM DUFOUR.

Mr. HOLMES (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 3908) for the relief of the personal representative of William Dufour, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. WICKWIRE.

Mr. HOLMES also introduced a bill (H. R. 3909) granting a pension to George W. Wickwire; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

OVERTON LOVE AND OTHERS.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (H. R. 3910) for the relief of Overton Love and the administratrix of the estate of Wyatt Gilschrist; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCES M. LAMBERT.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a bill (H. R. 3911) to grant a pension to Frances M. Lambert; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH ROMISER.

Mr. KETCHAM (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 3924) for the relief of Caroline T. Bancroft; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTRICIAN OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution providing for the appointment of an electrician and assistant electrician of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MARSHALS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported back the following resolution, with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish this House with a complete list of the marshals and deputy marshals appointed and employed in the State of West Virginia for the fiscal years of 1882 and 1883, together with information in what service each was so employed and how much was paid from the Treasury to, or received in fees by, each of such persons; also a detailed statement of all moneys paid to employés and witnesses in behalf of the United States in criminal prosecutions in the Federal courts of that State for said years.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the following resolution for adoption at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House whether it be true, as stated in public print, that for several years past the maps, diagrams, &c., in the case of Fitz-John Porter have been submitted to the members of each graduating class of the pupils of the Military Academy at West Point, for the purpose of inviting their criticism of the proceedings and findings of a general court-martial held in pursuance of law and duly approved by the Secretary of War and the commander-in-chief.

And be it further resolved, That if said report be true, the Secretary be requested to inform this House by whose authority or instigation the minds of these successive graduating classes of youths, educated at public expense for the military service of the Government, were thus directed to the discussion and questioning of the official action of their lawful superiors.

And be it further resolved, That if it be true, as alleged, that these youths, just emerging from their course of study and just entering upon their service as subordinate officers of the United States Army, have been persuaded or encouraged or permitted to discredit the action of their superiors by expressing their opinion "that the action of Fitz-John Porter was perfectly proper, and that had he done otherwise he would have committed a grave military error," the Secretary be requested to inform this House whether, in his opinion, the incitement to or the expression of such disregard for the judgment of the highest military tribunal is not "prejudicial to good order and military discipline," and calculated to foster a spirit of insubordination and to inspire among the officers thus educated for the United States Army a demoralizing and dangerous contempt for the authority of law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GIBSON. I object to the present consideration of that resolution.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I object.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise; to object to the resolution?

Mr. BELFORD No, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to inquire, Mr. Speaker, by whom objection has been made?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. An objection came from your own side.

Mr. GIBSON. I have objected to it.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I objected also to the resolution in its present form. If the gentleman will include in his resolution the maps of Washington's campaigns and those of Napoleon and others, I will not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands objection to be made.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Objection has been made to that by the gentleman who sits immediately behind me.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I object to it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Again I ask by whom objection has been made?

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen have objected; the gentleman from West Virginia, the gentleman from Montana——

Mr. MAGINNIS. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. GIBSON. I object.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that it is in order to move now to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. GIBSON. Before that I desire to withdraw my objection to the reference of the resolution just read to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. GIBSON. Then I ask a suspension of the regular order for that purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand the gentleman who objected to the present consideration of the resolution introduced by me expresses a desire to withdraw it.

Mr. GIBSON. No, sir; but I withdraw the objection to its reference.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to be informed, Mr. Speaker, whether objection has been made to the passage of the resolution by unanimous consent; and if so, by whom such objection was made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again inform the gentleman that objection was made by the gentleman from West Virginia, by the gentleman from Montana, and several others, as the Chair understood.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The objection came also from a gentleman on his side of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood the gentleman to say that it had come from this side of the House. Now I want that fact to be established.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It did come from the gentleman's own side of the House, and the gentleman who made that objection is too manly to deny it.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I desire to say that I objected to it myself.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made by several gentlemen, the resolution is not before the House for consideration or reference.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for motions to suspend the rules under instructions of committees.

Mr. REESE (when the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called). I move to suspend the rules, under instructions from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and submit the following report.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to inquire if the motion of the gentleman from Georgia be made in accordance with the orders of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is endeavoring to ascertain. The gentleman from Georgia will state whether or not he is authorized by his committee to submit the motion.

Mr. REESE. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to ask a suspension of the rules to submit that report.

The SPEAKER. And to pass the bill?

Mr. REESE. My instructions are to ask that it be printed and put upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that that is not in order under this call. This call is for motions to suspend the rules and pass bills or resolutions under instructions from the committees.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. SPRINGER (when the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice was called). I am authorized and instructed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to move to suspend the rules and put upon its passage the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose a second is demanded in that case?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give the opportunity after the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, in order to enable it to more efficiently discharge the duties imposed upon it by the rules of the House, be increased to nine members, and authorized to appoint subcommittees, to be composed of not less than three members, which subcommittees shall be committees of the House of Representatives. That said committee be authorized to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, and such other assistance as may be necessary. That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman and one member of the minority of the said committee, to pay out of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the House all the expenses incurred by said committee under this resolution. That a detailed account of all expenses of said committee be reported to the House of Representatives at the conclusion of each session.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. KASSON. I demand a second for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. KEIFER. If there be no objection, I presume a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it will be so considered.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, it was utterly impossible for us in the rear of this House to hear the reading of that resolution, although we have a most excellent reading clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated frequently that members have the remedy for this state of things in their own hands.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to have the resolution read again, in order that we may know what is going on in the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read again, and the Chair will request members upon the floor and in the rear of the seats to cease conversation and preserve order that its members may be enabled to hear the resolution upon which they will be called to vote.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. A second having been demanded and ordered, there will be thirty minutes allowed for debate, one-half of this in favor of and the other half opposed to the resolution. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa as controlling the time in opposition.

Mr. REED. Without entering into the question of debate, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that there is one clause in that resolution to which, perhaps, he did not intend to give its full force. That is to give this committee power to make any expenditure they may deem necessary. That seems to me to be unprecedented, and I desire to call his attention to it.

Mr. KASSON. My object, Mr. Chairman, in demanding a second was in part to call attention to the point referred to by the gentleman from Maine, and especially to the fact that this resolution authorizes each one of these subcommittees to employ any additional assistance that they may deem necessary. I think that is hardly in accordance with the precedents of the House. You authorize, in cases of investigation, a committee to employ a stenographer and a clerk; but I do not know whether any subcommittee or any general committee of the House has been authorized to employ all such assistance as they may deem necessary without limit. I thought, therefore, that the resolution required some explanation on the part of the gentleman from Illinois as to what remarkable condition of affairs has fallen under the jurisdiction of this committee which has required such an unusually large power to be conferred upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer the gentleman. As is known to the gentleman from Iowa and to the House of Representatives, under the rules of the House it is the duty of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to examine—

The accounts and expenditures of the Department of Justice and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless officers; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers.

The House will perceive that under the rules of this House this committee is charged with very important and extensive duties. It has to make an examination of the accounts of the United States marshals and their deputies and of clerks and other officers of courts which have been the subject of an investigation carried on through the Department of Justice. We find there has been a great looseness in these accounts. A great number of suits have been brought on frivolous pretexts for the purpose of increasing the fees of these officers, and the committee found themselves confronted with a condition of things that required a vast amount of time and labor for the purpose of making a thorough investigation of these matters.

I desire to say to the House that so far as the committee is concerned it is disposed and desires to make these investigations with the least possible expenditure of the public funds. The agents of the Department of Justice engaged in this work have had appropriated to them for the present fiscal year the sum of $25,000 for the purpose of carrying on just such investigations. Those agents, through the Attorney-General, have asked an increase of the appropriation from $25,000 a year to $50,000 a year and an increase of the number of persons engaged in the service of seven or eight.

We desire, if possible, to avoid the necessity of increasing this appropriation to the extent asked by the Department of Justice; and we believe that a thorough investigation of these matters during this session will avoid the necessity of making this increased appropriation now demanded by the Department of Justice of $25,000 above the sum appropriated for the current year.

Let me say further, that gentlemen need have no fear as to unnecessary expenses being heaped on the House and the country by this committee. It will not in the investigation of extravagance be guilty of the thing it is endeavoring to investigate and expose. It will not in showing the unnecessary and unusual and extraordinary expenditures that have been charged against the Government be guilty of any dereliction itself in calling upon the Government to expend one dollar more than is absolutely necessary for the ends of justice.

It was the opinion of the committee, unanimously, there being no dissenting opinion in the committee, that if this resolution was passed it would enable the committee to efficiently discharge its duty and save the Government the needless expenditure of large sums of money.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a single question. Do I correctly understand that the passage of this resolution is recommended unanimously by that gentleman's committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has been recognized in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I think the explanation given by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is inadequate to sustain the demands made by his resolution. There are various committees on expenditures in Departments that expend a million where this Department expends $20,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is mistaken; I beg his pardon.

Mr. KASSON. Take for example the Treasury Department. There is no question about it. All these committees have jurisdictions, and I commend any of them that so exercises its jurisdiction as honestly to improve the laws for the public service. I think that this one committee, basing its action upon the demands of a Department for additional service for detecting wrong, has made an error in the basis of this large recommendation of their own.

Every Department must have these agents in perpetual use to protect it and the Government against fraud; and in my experience in the House and in Executive Departments I have never known so useful an appropriation as that which gives to the Executive Department the right of special agents, who are the eyes and ears of the Department to report any abuse as early as it is discovered.

This committee, on the other hand, now comes and asks that the Department shall be refused the means for protecting itself against fraud, but that they themselves shall convert their committee into a great number of committees, each of them having the powers of whole committees and the power to appoint each one of them two employés upon salaries, and the further power to employ any additional assistance that they may require. I know nothing, and the gentleman from Illinois has failed to state anything, that justifies a demand for such a great increase of the patronage of the House in the payment of stenographers, clerks, and subordinates; and without such a justification it seems to me that it leaves the House in a bad condition to enlarge its own patronage. All the committee saw fit to demand for the purpose of investigating where there is just ground to believe this committee can do what is not in process of being done through the Executive Department all sides of the House would cheerfully concur in. But the committee by this resolution has power to send for persons and papers all over the United States. It has power to employ in every part of the United States additional counsel. Each of these subcommittees may employ additional counsel. Everything is open to the discretion of these subcommittees, and all the expenses are to be charged upon the contingent fund of the House. Now let the gentleman ask, what any facts he may state will show to be necessary, to re-enforce the powers of his committee. But do not let him ask, without some statement of facts, so large an increase of expenditures upon our contingent fund. That is the objection which I think many on both sides of the House would entertain to the unlimited power which it is proposed shall be given to this committee. To the other part of the resolution there is no objection on my part.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am disposed to vote for this resolution.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Then you ought to speak on the other side.

Mr. SPRINGER. As it has been suggested that the resolution as it now stands might meet with some objection, if there is unanimous consent——

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to speak in favor of this resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BELFORD. Three minutes! I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution should pass. I want my friends on the other side to examine and inspect all the operations in the Department of Justice. I believe that the present Attorney-General has been wise, judicious, and honest in all his operations. But I do think that expenses have been incurred with reference to these star-route trials that should be investigated by this House. I believe that men have been paid exorbitant and unjustifiable fees. I think that all the facts connected with the transactions of the Department of Justice and the court should be fully examined.

At the last session of Congress, when my name was connected with this star-route investigation on the ground that I had received a check of $2,000, I demanded to have that matter investigated. And I desire that this committee in their general investigations shall take into consideration a check signed "J. B. B." and given to pay a gambling debt; not by me or to me or from me. I ask them to go into the bottom facts of the whole transaction.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I shall cheerfully support the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. I desire to call the attention of the House and of the country to the fact that at the last session of Congress I introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to investigate the accounts of the United States commissioners, clerks, marshals, and district attorney for the State of Kentucky from June 1, 1870, to January 1, 1882.

I did not then ask for an investigation as to the whole United States, but I am glad that the gentleman who has this subject in charge proposes now to ferret out the matter to the bottom. I believe that under the fee system thousands of dollars have been stolen from the United States Treasury by some Federal officials. I believe that a thorough investigation of the accounts of the Attorney-General or the records of the Treasury Department will show evidences of fraud resulting from the fee system. I do not think the last Congress did right to smother my resolution of inquiry, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

I hope and believe that the gentleman who has charge of this matter will thoroughly and honestly endeavor to get to the bottom of the whole subject. And I believe that if he does so in regard to my own State, he will find that men, notably the one to-day sitting as governor of Utah, and a man who was here last winter lobbying as a paid attorney of the whisky ring, late the United States marshal and United States district attorney for the State of Kentucky, will be shown to deserve the striped clothes of convicts in the penitentiary more than some who now wear them.

I hope that the Republicans of this House will join with the Democrats in investigating thoroughly every fraud that now stains the escutcheon of the Republican party.

Mr. REED. In the interest of what is just and fair all around, I suggest to gentlemen on the other side that there should be some limitation to this resolution, or it will grow into a precedent which may result in a great deal of harm. Nobody desires to interfere in any respect with the investigation proposed. All that we desire is that it shall be conducted in a proper fashion, with a due regard for the future.

Mr. SPRINGER. If unanimous consent is given——

Mr. KASSON. I hope unanimous consent will be given for a limitation upon the expenditures under this resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman suggest a sum?

Mr. KASSON. Will $5,000 be sufficient?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am willing to limit it to that.

Mr. KASSON. Very well; if you are willing to limit the amount of expenditures to that sum, then put that amount in the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to modify the resolution by adding to it these words:

Provided, That all such expenditures under this resolution shall not exceed $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Does that amount come out of the contingent fund of the House?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. RANDALL. There had better be an appropriation made for the purpose.

Mr. KASSON. Say $5,000 for all purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. It means that, of course; that is all the authority we have under this resolution. But I am willing to add the words "for all purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification suggested.

There being no objection, the resolution was modified accordingly.

The resolution as modified was then adopted under the suspension of the rules (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

The Speaker resumed and concluded the call of States for motions to suspend the rules.

GREELY RELIEF EXPEDITION.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee ou Appropriations, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 119) making an appropriation for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the Lady Franklin Bay expedition to the Arctic regions; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon the third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to ask that the joint resolution and accompanying report be printed in the RECORD; and I give notice that on to-morrow, if I have the ability, I will call up the joint resolution for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution with the accompanying report will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire that the resolution and report be printed in the RECORD, because if merely printed under the rule they may not get back in time for consideration to-morrow.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether he thinks there will be any objection to the immediate consideration of this resolution.

Mr. KASSON. The case is urgent.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing.

Mr. KASSON. I do not believe there will be any objection on this side of the House.

Mr. REED. The only objection, and I presume the only reason for delay, arises from a suggestion which has been made that a ship of suitable character could be built better than bought.

A MEMBER. It could not be done in time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No such thing as that could be done with the necessary promptitude.

Mr. REED. I defer in this matter to my colleague [Mr. DINGLEY], who gives me the information that it can be done.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the resolution, with the accompanying report, will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether the committee has considered the possibility of obtaining a suitable American vessel or an American-built vessel under this resolution, and whether the committee would object to an amendment providing that if a suitable American vessel can be built or purchased within the time allowed, it may be done?

Mr. RANDALL. Under the rule I am not at liberty to state what has occurred in the committee.

The SPEAKER. This debate is not in order if objection is made.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not understand there was objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand that there is unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the resolution must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But there was no objection to the present consideration.

The SPEAKER. No gentleman has moved to go into Committee of the Whole for that purpose. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has charge of the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. My understanding with the committee was that the resolution should go over till to-morrow morning. [Cries of "All right!"] I only expressed my individual opinion when I said, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], that I had no objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution and accompanying report, if there be no objection, will be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

There was no objection. The report and joint resolution are as follows:

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report:

[To accompany House joint resolution No. 119.]

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred Executive Document No. 56, being a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy relative to the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the Lady Franklin Bay expedition to the Arctic regions, submit the accompanying joint resolution, making an appropriation to enable the President to prepare and dispatch an expedition for the purpose of relieving and bringing home Lieutenant Greely and party.

Joint resolution making an appropriation for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the Lady Franklin Bay expedition to the Arctic regions.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to prepare and dispatch an expedition to the coast of Greenland, Smith's Sound, or Lady Franklin Bay for the purpose of relieving and bringing home Lieut. A. W. Greely and party, and that for this purpose the purchase of not exceeding three vessels is authorized, and all expenditures necessary for manning, equipping, and supplying them, and for any land journeys which may be required; and such sums as may be necessary to effect the object of this resolution are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The vessels purchased to be sold after their return and the money arising from such sale covered into the Treasury.

And the President shall submit to Congress on the first Monday of December, 1884, a full and detailed account of all expenditures and outlays made on account of this appropriation.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolutions which I send to the desk.

Mr. KASSON. Is that the report of a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. KASSON. Then it is not in order; but I will not object in advance of the reading.

The SPEAKER. The rule simply provides that on the third Monday of each month preference as to motions to suspend the rules shall be given to committees; but when the call of committees has been completed, the Chair must recognize individual members for such motions. The Clerk will read the resolutions submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House all the public lands heretofore granted to States and corporations to aid in the construction of railroads, so far as the same are now subject to forfeiture by reason of the non-fulfillment of the conditions on which the grants were made, ought to be declared forfeited to the United States and restored to the public domain.

Resolved, That it is of the highest public interest that the laws touching the public lands should be so framed and administered as to ultimately secure freehold therein to the greatest number of citizens; and to that end all laws facilitating speculation in the public lands or authorizing or permitting the entry or purchase thereof in large bodies ought to be repealed, and all of the public lands adapted to agriculture (subject to bounty grants and those in aid of education) ought to be reserved for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers, and disposed of under the provisions of the homestead laws only.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands is hereby instructed to report to the House bills to carry into effect the views expressed in the foregoing resolutions; that said committee shall be authorized to report such bills at any time, subject only to revenue and appropriation bills, and the same shall in like order be entitled to consideration.

Mr. BELFORD. I demand the yeas and nays on that resolution.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, there is a demand for a second on the motion to suspend the rules; and if there be no objection a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate on this question, one-half to those in favor of the resolution and the other half to those opposed to it. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to control the time in support of the resolution, and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. KASSON. For my own part, I wish to ask, with the permission of the gentleman who offers this resolution, only one question. The first declaration of policy touching the forfeiture of grants I welcome and hail, as the gentleman knows. The resolution goes on, however, to declare the disposition to be made of all the public lands of the country, stating that any large sales should be stopped by law. I wish to know whether there is now any law under which any man can enter large bodies of land; and secondly, I would like the gentleman to state whether it is wise to pledge the House against a policy which would allow large bodies of land to be taken where they can be useful only for pasturage, the occupation of land in such bodies being demanded by very large interests in the Western country for the promotion of the cattle business.

And the only points of criticism I perceive for myself in the resolution are those I have referred to, namely: I know of no law under which large bodies of land can be entered and of which he demands the repeal; and secondly, I am not clear we ought not to make provision by law in respect to present lands fit for grazing alone. That would not apply to lands fit for tillage, and which I believe with him ought to be confined to homestead entry.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, reading the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and of the Secretary of the Interior, both unusually valuable reports, can leave no gentleman uninformed of the fact that under the present state of the laws large bodies of the public land are being secured by individual capitalists; and not by American citizens only, but by great capitalists of Europe. For that purpose mainly the pre-emption law is employed, and Congress has been urged repeatedly, both by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, to repeal that law, upon the ground that through its instrumentality and the facilities for fraud it furnished countless frauds are being perpetrated, and capitalists are securing enormous tracts of the public domain to the detriment of the country and injury of actual settlers.

That law in former years, when capital was not seeking investments in public lands, was a wholesome provision, but now it is a shelter for fraud and an agent of land monopoly.

So, Mr. Speaker, without entering upon any general discussion, in the few moments at my disposal, of the public-land system of the country, I need only refer to the administration of that single law to answer the question I am asked. It is absolutely certain that under your land system vast private estates are being carved out of your public lands by capitalists, many of whom are not even American citizens nor intending to become American citizens, and that, too, against our unquestioned policy for a hundred years, that our public-land laws should be so framed and so administered as to secure the largest ownership of public lands by the men whose labor would make them fruitful—a policy which has been held to be the only safe foundation for our American institutions by the wisest statesmen the Republic has produced. The safety of our institutions rests on the ownership of the lands by the people. Our free institutions can not survive a monopoly of lands. So far as we permit monopoly of the public lands we weaken the foundations of the Republic.

What might be deemed to be a large body of lands must, in some degree, have some reference to the purposes for which it is to be used; but let me ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON], even as to that great body of lands not strictly agricultural nor adapted to cultivation, is it possible that a few favored capitalists are to be permitted under the present provisions of law and through countless questionable agencies to purchase great bodies even of such lands at a mere nominal price to the exclusion of the large mass of our people?

Mr. KASSON. It is on that very point, if the gentleman will allow me, I should like to be heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KASSON. I have been over all this country, and, as the gentleman knows, I have always agreed with him on certain land questions, and especially in this matter of giving the land grants back to public settlement. In getting them back I agree to the limitation to homestead settlement in the manner the gentleman suggests, but I know from my own eyesight there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres which can not be pre-empted by any process now known to human beings, and which are adapted to grazing alone. Now the grazing interest is an enormous one. The gentleman has spoken very properly of the obnoxious character of large acquisitions of public lands, but they do not result from existing laws. They result from the right of one man to sell to another. A man pre-empts often by fraud, and then the pre-emptions are gradually concentrated into one man's hands. They will enter a tract of forties to the extent of the entire entry along the only water there is, so that the rest of the land is not of any use except to those owning the water rights. It is in this way lands are accumulated in large bodies. They do not buy the land. They only buy certain rights, without which the land is useless. If there is any law—and I ask the gentleman very frankly to point it out—if there is any law which allows large bodies of lands to be sold except at private purchase——

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is taking up the brief time allotted to me.

Mr. KASSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I still wish to know whether the gentleman from Iowa proposes to administer the public lands—this commonwealth—in such manner as to permit large landed estates to be secured by fortunate and favored parties.

Mr. KASSON. It is not a question of administration.

Mr. HOLMAN. When lands pass from the Government into the hands of the actual settler in spite of the wisest provisions of law, these lands may in process of time be concentrated in large landed estates. But shall the laws themselves in the very beginning encourage great estates? Shall we so frame and administer the laws touching public lands as that large estates upon the western plains shall be the natural result?

Mr. KASSON. My friend from Indiana fails to appreciate my point. If he says that he is in favor of repealing the pre-emption laws, then I can understand it and I will go with him in so doing. But it is under that law alone this evil exists, subject to the right you can not repeal, of one man to sell his property to another. If the gentleman will provide for repealing the pre-emption law and confine his resolution to that, I will consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not through the instrumentality of the pre-emption law alone that these great estates are being secured, but even under the administration of the homestead law, and through the commutation clause of that otherwise admirable law, as has been shown in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, frauds on the actual and bona fide settler have been perpetrated. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has specially called attention to the facts. Under the administration of those laws and through the great grants to corporations imperial landed estates are being built up on the fertile western plains, and that, too, at a nominal cost, when the highest public policy demands that these lands should be held by the largest number of our people. The policy of the Government always has been and always must be to encourage small landed estates, for the purpose of securing ownership of freeholds in the largest number of citizens. A republic rests on its freeholding and independent people.

I reserve the balance of my time until I hear from other gentlemen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BELFORD. How much time is there left for the debate?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. BELFORD. When this resolution was first submitted I desired to obtain a vote by "yeas and nays" upon it. Then it was suggested to me, since I am not acquainted with the remarkable rules of this House, that I could demand a second. This, however, does not quite accomplish what I sought. I am myself in favor of the resolution and intend to vote for it. I shall therefore yield the time to any gentleman who desires to oppose it.

Mr. REED. I would like to be heard for a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine to control the time in opposition.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, anybody who speaks upon a great question like this without notice or timely warning necessarily takes some risks and is at considerable disadvantage in the debate. The public mind, and also the mind of this House, upon certain ideas is attracted by a large or broad statement, which, while it covers matters obnoxious perhaps to just reproach, is perceived to cover also a great many other things. I think it is very undesirable that a question of such magnitude as this should be treated in this hasty manner.

I had some occasion, in the course of my duties as a member of one of the committees of the last House, to investigate the subject of railroad land grants, and while I did not investigate them thoroughly on account of the enormous labor necessarily involved in the work, I investigated them for a long enough period to leave the impression upon my mind that there were some railroads yet unbuilt and some in process of construction where it would be an advantage to this country to continue the grants, because the same reasons exist to-day which existed when the original grants were made; and I apprehend that there is no surer way of getting the lands into the possession of the people in their most valuable shape and form than by building railroads, whereby the lands are made accessible and necessarily more valuable. But I can not go into the discussion of that question. The time allowed for this discussion is too short for that. All I can do at this time is to suggest that it is undesirable to deal with this question in this large way.

There are some cases where I should agree entirely with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The committee of which I was a member reported unanimously, or with a single exception, in favor of the forfeiture of a large amount of land, twelve millions of acres in one single case. I never had any hesitation or doubt about the propriety of that action. I have always had some hesitation or doubt as to whether it was right to that community to forfeit the lands of the Mississippi and Ship Island Railroad, which is in a country where there had not been the same opportunities for the earning of their lands as existed in more Northern States, and that such forfeiture might be a hardship upon the people. However, a full examination might bring me to another conclusion or deepen my present impression upon the subject. I merely mention this instance that occurs to me at the moment as one of those which is covered by this resolution.

Then the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] have started a new consideration involved in the subject. It is perfectly well known that since the subject was brought up for discussion in Congress there is a new industry which has sprung up and assumed a place side by side with the leading industries in the history of this country. I refer to the cattle industry. Men who have positions on the banks of the rivers have taken possession there of large tracts of country stretching into the interior, and have been making enormous sums of money out of the grass, which is the income of the public lands. Now, if you refuse to sell that property or make any arrangement with regard to it, you are going to meet with this difficulty: are you not liable to give these men the property which you will not sell to them? These two things show in my judgment that as wise men we ought to hesitate on the threshold of such a subject. I know it is a popular thing to go at these measures in a sweeping way on the part of impetuous people who do not take the trouble to examine, but I submit to the House whether it is desirable to commit ourselves without consideration to a proposition so sweeping as this. There are a great many things in it which we all favor. There are some things to which we are opposed and on which we differ.

Now, in saying this I need not remark that I speak for myself and myself alone.

Mr. BELFORD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. REED. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado, unless some gentleman who opposes the resolution desires to be heard.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to a few facts, and I hope I will have the attention of the House to the end, that I may address myself to some points which have become matters of public history. First, I desire to say that the Commissioner of the General Land Office during the last six years has advised and recommended a change of our homestead and pre-emption laws. That is a fact which can be readily ascertained by examining the reports of that officer. It is a notable fact in our Western country that these railroads have done nothing to improve the lands which have been granted by the Government except by the mere construction of their roads. It is also a notable fact connected with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Iowa that in New Mexico, in Nebraska, in Colorado thousands and thousands of acres have been appropriated by the cattle-men; thousands and thousands of acres have been fenced up and hedged in against personal occupation, until the Secretary of the Interior has been compelled to issue orders to cut down these fences and open up the lands to settlement.

Those are the facts. I do not propose that four or five cattle kings shall own the whole West, as four or five railroad monarchs own the whole East. And therefore I am in favor of forfeiting every acre of land that these railroads have not earned. I am in favor, however, of giving them every acre that they have earned. And such has been my conduct on the Committee on Public Lands, as can be avouched by every member of it. I do not propose to be the advocate of injustice, but at the same time I do not propose that the president of a great railroad corporation shall inform this House through the newspapers of the country that he is greater than the people.

Mr. REED. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR].

The SPEAKER. There are six minutes of the time for opposition to the resolution yet remaining.

Mr. HORR. It does not seem to me that the members of this House are going to attempt to decide upon so important a question as the one before us without investigation. This resolution is so sweeping in its character, that it necessarily does wrong to every single road that is earnestly and honestly striving to earn its land and has done all in its power to do so.

I know there is a clamor about having given public lands to these corporations. But I stand here to-day and I say I believe it can be proven to the satisfaction of every man that that policy has done as much to develop this country as any policy that was ever adopted in the United States. Does the gentleman know that the West which he is talking about would not be worth owning to-day if it had not been for these railroads? Does he know that the Northern Pacific has opened up hundreds of millions of acres of land and made it worth to the Government $2.50 an acre, which if it had not been for that road would not be worth 10 cents an acre?

But this resolution asks you to step in and without investigation, without examination, without understanding the peculiarities of each case, without knowing anything about what we are doing, to vote a wholesale renunciation of a policy of this Government as practiced now for many years. There are roads, as my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] has said, that are trying to earn those lands.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And it is a policy which was inaugurated by the gentleman from Indiana's own party.

Mr. HORR. Certainly. It is a policy, it is said, which is upheld by the gentleman's own party. It is not possible, is it, that this is a party measure? I had supposed it was a business proposition; something that affected the great landed interests of this nation. I did not suppose it was a political trick. If it is a political trick I have not anything to say; because my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has an advantage over me in that. He has been engaged in that way for twenty-five years and I am new in the political business. [Laughter.] I supposed it was a business proposition which affected the great business interests of the United States.

Now, while I believe some of these land grants should be forfeited, I believe they should be forfeited with intelligence, with examination, with care. I do not believe we should be called upon to violate the vested rights of people, and tie up lands, leading to litigation for thirty years in this country, which will damage this country more than all these corporations that we hear so much about can possibly do.

Let us proceed like business men. Let us understand each case, and see whether their failure to build up to this moment had a good and sufficient reason that would justify a delay. Let us treat it as we treat matters in our own business transactions, and not come here and without investigation, without knowledge, without discussion, pass a resolution which may cripple this country, destroy the building of its railroads through the West and the South, and bring ruin and disaster upon great interests that are entitled to fair treatment in this country. I do not believe this House is going to pass such a resolution as that. I do not believe that this House, without study, without examination, are going to commit themselves to this kind of a resolution.

Mr. KASSON rose.

The SPEAKER. There remains one minute of the time allotted to the opponents of the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I will, with the permission of the gentleman controlling the time, use that minute to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], or the Speaker in the first instance, a question. Under this motion to suspend the rules my impression is that it is not in order to demand—at least it can not be granted if objection is made—a division of the three resolutions.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. KASSON. The first resolution, touching the forfeiture of lands, and the last, to give the committee the privilege to report promptly, are resolutions I desire to see passed; because we can discuss, on the bills afterward, the merit of the forfeiture. Therefore I have no objection to the first and last resolutions. It is the middle resolution, which declares an entirely new policy without discrimination touching the future disposition of the public lands, and instructs the committee to report the bills in accordance with that policy, which I think the gentleman ought not to ask upon this short debate.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to know on what principle the gentleman from Iowa can divide these propositions up. It is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. KASSON. There is no point made upon that. I said I supposed it could not be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] consumed some five or six minutes of the fifteen minutes allowed in support of the bill while the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was speaking. I desire to know whether those five or six minutes should be charged to the friends of the bill or not?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa occupied the time by consent of the gentleman from Indiana, as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] occupied time on the other side with the consent of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Iowa was not in opposition to the general proposition of the resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the gentleman from Iowa was in opposition to a portion of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. When a gentleman has the floor and control of the time for debate upon a pending measure and yields any portion of that time to others, there is no safe rule for the Chair to pursue except to charge the time so consumed to him.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is unjust to the friends of the measure.

The SPEAKER. That may be unjust to the friends of the measure in their opinion, but it is the only safe rule for the Chair to follow.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I would ask if under the rules there can be any division of the question on this resolution?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. Is it in order for me to submit a motion to refer this subject to the Committee on Public Lands, that committee now having all these land grants under consideration?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion would not be in order while a motion is pending for a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] for two minutes.

Mr. DUNN. For my part have no doubt of the correctness and wisdom of these resolutions. I am perfectly satisfied that the time has arrived when the policy of this Government should be reversed as to the administration of the land laws.

There was a time when there was a reason for the policy of granting Government aid to railroad construction. That was a time when we had a vast volume of products in the interior of the country which could not reach the markets of consumption for want of transportation. At that time there was a scarcity of money, and capital was shy of investment in railroads because it was then thought to be a questionable investment. Government aid was then perhaps wise; but the reason for it has now ceased. There is an old canon of the law, that "when the reason for the law ceases, the law itself shall cease." Now the reason for that policy having ceased, undoubtedly the policy itself ought to be suspended. The whole country is webbed over with railroads, and all, or nearly all, are making good earnings and paying dividends. Every field of production throughout the country is brought into communication with the markets of consumption.

Our public domain is rapidly being absorbed and passing beyond the reach of the pioneer settler, and our population is rapidly increasing. The public domain in the West has thus far been a land of refuge for the teeming tide of foreign immigration that has pressed upon our shores so steadily for many years and still continues in increasing volume, as well as for the surplus population of our own overcrowded States and cities on the Eastern seaboard. The time is not far distant when a homestead in the great West will not only cease to be free to the poor settler, but, sir, when it will no longer be possible at a price that he can pay.

For one I wish to postpone that day as far as may be possible, for, sir, when it comes, as come it will, we shall then witness in this now prosperous and happy country the commencement of that accursed system of tenantry which makes the poor laboring classes bond to the wealthy land-owner; a bondage more galling, more relentless, and more hopeless than the chattel slavery from which the negro has just been emancipated in this country. For him there was hope of emancipation, but for the poor tenantry of a landed aristocracy or proprietorship there is none, and their children and children's children will wear about their necks a collar with their doom inscribed upon it: "Born thrall," not indeed "to Cedric," but to the landlord.

According to an admirably compiled pamphlet that I have before me, the public domain of the United States consists of—

	Acres.
Cession from the original States	229,987,187
Louisiana purchase	756,961,280
Florida	37,931,520
Mexican treaty	334,443,520
Purchase from Texas	65,130,880
Gadsden purchase	29,142,400
Alaska purchase	369,529,600
Total	1,823,180,387

In this the State of Texas is not included, as by the treaty of annexation it reained the ownership of all public lands within its borders.

HOW THE DOMAIN HAS BEEN DISPOSED OF.

Of these lands up to June 30, 1880, there had been surveyed 752,557,194 acres, and of this there remained undisposed of 24,802,711 acres, making with the unsurveyed land the number of acres now owned by the Government 1,273,946,438.

The public lands (548,000,000 acres) which have been disposed of have been used in the following ways:

	Acres.
Sold	200,000,000
Given to States as swamp land	70,000,000
Given to States for internal improvement	8,000,000
Given to States, salt springs	1,000,000
Given to States, Florida, Oregon, and New Mexico	3,000,000
Given to States for schools and colleges	79,000,000
Land bounties for military and naval service	61,000,000
Homesteads	56,000,000
Timber culture	10,000,000
Canals and wagon-roads	6,000,000
Desert-land act	1,000,000
Given to States for railroads	36,000,000
Patented to railroad corporations	11,000,000
Total	542,000,000

This leaves only 6,000,000 acres of the public domain which has been disposed of unaccounted for, and this has been disposed of at various times in small bodies by Congress for different purposes.

The public domain not disposed of consists of, as before stated, 1,273,946,438 acres. For public use we must deduct from this the Indian and military reservations, 157,000,000 acres, and private land claims, 80,000,000, a total of 237,000,000; which would leave the available lands at 1,036,000,000 acres. In considering its disposition, from this we must deduct Alaska as totally unavailable for settlement and cultivation, which leaves 676,000,000 acres; 26,000,000 of this is in the Southern States, leaving 650,000,000 in the Territories and States of the West through which the land-grant railways are being built. Of this amount at least 400,000,000 acres are mountain lands, unsuitable for cultivation.

This leaves now in possession of the United States about 250,000,000 acres of available land, of which the various States to which grants were made claim about 5,000,000 acres; and the estimate of the Land Office is that it will require 125,000,000 acres to satisfy the claims of the corporations; and these claims are based upon grants demanding work to be done which has not been done; so the lands have not been earned, and are justly forfeited to the people of the United States.

Reports of various Secretaries of the Interior, letters and orders written by them, and opinions promulgated by the Attorney-General, which will be given, show that unless Congress takes definite action upon this subject titles will be made to a large portion of this 125,000,000 acres before the next meeting of Congress.

If the demands of the railroads are met, as they have been heretofore invariably met, by complaisant officials who retire from office under the Government to fat positions provided by the land-grant railways, there will be left to the United States but a small portion of the arable public domain.

Sir, there is a note of warning here that this Congress can not overlook or disregard. The situation is a grave one, and the eyes of a nation resolute in its purposes of reform are upon us, and its voice rises above the din and clamor of the jobbers and schemers who infest these precincts, seeking corruptly to possess themselves of this rich heritage which should be sacredly preserved for the homestead settler. Let us heed and obey that voice.

I believe that the time has come when the Government should ascertain every foot of land that has been honestly earned by railroads under the laws making grants to them, and should faithfully convey it to those corporations which have earned the grants by the completion of their roads within the time fixed by law. It should also promptly restore to the public domain all lands not earned by the railroads, there to be held subject to settlement by homestead alone. Every acre not legally and honestly earned should be declared forfeited at once. It is no longer needed to induce the building of railroads.

There is to-day abundance of money seeking investment in the construction of railroads. Wherever it can be shown that a railroad can be built with reasonable prospect of earning sufficient to give hope of dividends money is ready to build it and Government aid and Government land is no longer needed. The era of Government aid has passed and a new order of things has dawned upon us. The time has come for the Government to change its policy. Let us have a full, complete, and final settlement of this land-grant account and balance the books, and set out upon a homestead policy pure and simple; free homesteads; homesteads, as far as may be, inalienable; homesteads for "the horny-handed sons of toil."

I take from the same pamphlet the following statement of grants to States and directly to railroad corporations:

These are all the States that received land grants to aid in building railroads. Until after the first grant was made to a corporation, in 1862, the amount granted was never more than six sections, or 3,840 acres, to the mile, and compensation for land a ready sold was confined to a limit of fifteen miles on each side of the road. After 1862 the grants to some of the States were raised to ten sections per mile and the limit extended to twenty miles on each side. Original grants made to States after this date were always for ten sections, with the twenty-mile limit.

It was undoubtedly the building of the land-grant railways that stimulated and made possible and necessary the building of other roads and gave to the States their present railroad facilities; but to confine the benefits of these grants directly to the lines for which they were granted we find the following results:

States.	Land patented or certified to State.	Miles of railway by land grant.	Number of acres certified to each mile of railway built.	Miles of railway in State.
Illinois	2,595,053	1,320	1,960	7,780
Florida	1,760,548	247	7,000	600
Alabama	1,857,458	822	3,430	1,932
Louisiana	1,072,405	152	7,000	950
Mississippi	937,159	406	4,100	1,140
Arkansas	2,444,945	542	3,900	1,100
Iowa	4,544,332	2,250	2,090	4,898
Missouri	1,828,005	584	3,000	3,740
Michigan	3,356,937	1,005	2,600	2,692
Wisconsin	2,503,380	633	5,400	2,896
Minnesota	7,572,963	1,800	4,100	3,270
Kansas	3,880,993	1,210	3,430	3,101
	34,354,178	10,971	.....	34,099

Average number of acres of land to miles of railway, 3,131.

These twelve States, to whom has been given 36,000,000 acres of land, have, through the granted lands, built 11,000 miles of railroad. The average number of acres of land necessary to secure a mile of road, when the land was granted to the State, was only 3,273. We will see later on how much it takes to secure a mile of road when granted to a corporation, remarking en passant that the State of Texas, which owns its own lands, has given to corporations to secure roads 10,240 acres per mile.

THE UNION PACIFIC CHARTER.

On the 1st day of July, 1862, a new system was inaugurated as to land-grant railways by the passage of the act incorporating the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

As early as 1845 Senator Douglas had proposed a grant of land to aid in building a road from Lake Erie to the Pacific Ocean. In 1850 Eli Whitney petitioned Congress for the grant of 100,000,000 acres to enable him to construct a railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and numerous bills were introduced into Congress looking to that end, several of the bills having been reported favorably.

The War Department organized and executed a series of transcontinental surveys from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean. Its report reviewed the resources and prospects of the following routes, namely: The extreme northern route, between the forty-seventh and forty-ninth parallels of north latitude; the route of the forty-first parallel; that by the thirty-eighth parallel; that by the thirty-fifth; and that by the thirty-second, through the Gadsden purchase.

President Buchanan said that "the construction of this road ought to be committed to companies incorporated by the States. Congress might then assist them in the work by grants of land or money, or both."

Subsequent events have proven that President Buchanan was "wise in his generation."

On the 1st of July, 1862 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 12, page 489), the Union Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated. The charter was from the one-hundredth degree of west longitude to the western boundary of Nevada. In the first section of the charter is the following clause:

"The capital stock of said company shall consist of 100,000 shares of $1,000 each, which shall be subscribed for and held in not more than 200 shares by any one person."

Section 3 grants ten sections of land per mile; all lands not sold or disposed of in three years after the completion of the road to be subject to entry and preemption at $1.25 per acre, to be paid to the company.

Section 5 gives $16,000 United States bonds per mile.

Section 9 charters the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western (now Kansas Pacific) road, to commence at the junction of the Kansas River with the Missouri River, and unite with the main line at the one-hundredth meridian, and giving it the same subsidies. It also confers the same privileges upon the Central Pacific, a corporation chartered by the State of California.

Section 10 authorizes this company to continue eastward from the eastern boundary line of California until it meets the Union Pacific.

Section 11 trebles the amount of aid for the mountainous district.

By the act of July 2, 1864 (volume 13, page 356), the land grant was increased to twenty sections per mile in the States and forty in the Territories, and is estimated at 41,000,000 acres. The clause restricting any one owner to not more than two hundred shares was repealed. A first mortgage to the amount of the Government loan was sanctioned. The Sioux City and Burlington and Missouri River were chartered, with the same privileges granted by the original and the amended charter. One of these roads is now part of the Union Pacific.

July 15, 1866 (volume 14, 94), the Placerville and Sacramento Valley road was chartered and given ten sections per mile. July 25 (volume 14, 239,) the California and Oregon and Oregon Central were chartered and given a subsidy. Both of these roads are now part of the Central Pacific.

July 27, 1866 (volume 14, 292), a much broader charter was given to the Atlantic and Pacific, giving twenty sections in the States and forty in the Territories, with many privileges as to branches. By section 18 of the same act the Southern Pacific was chartered, with the same rights given to the Atlantic and Pacific.

March 2 (volume 14,548) the Stockton and Copperopolis Road was started with a land grant. It is now a part of the Central Pacific.

July 3, 1869 (volume 15, 324), the Denver Pacific was authorized to take part of the grant formerly given to the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western.

May 4, 1870 (volume 16, 94), the Oregon Central was chartered and given twenty sections of land to the mile. This land could not be sold at more than $2.50 per acre, and only to actual settlers, in amounts of not more than 160 acres. This road is now part of the Central Pacific.

March 3, 1871 (volume 16, 573), the Texas Pacific was chartered and given forty sections per mile.

LANDS EARNED AND LANDS FORFEITED.

We have now given a history of how the grants were made, and will next show by a tabulated statement the number of miles of railroad built, the number of acres of land conditionally granted, the number of miles earned by completion of the roads within the time required by law, and the number of acres forfeited even under a liberal and equitable construction of the granting acts, and then will give such extracts from the granting acts as will place before the eye at once the whole legal question to be determined.

* Has 1,061,314 acres of land patented more than it is entitled to. † Has sold several million acres of land.

The upper part of this table shows the completed land-grant railways; that is, those which were completed within the time designated in the charters.

The Union Pacific controls the Kansas Pacific, Central Branch Union Pacific, Denver Pacific, and Sioux City and Pacific, which were land-grant roads, besides several other branches which were not land-grant roads.

It will be seen that these corporations have received 7,572,620 acres of land, and are claiming and are entitled to 25,291,660 acres, making a total of 32,864,280 acres. They have built 4,264 miles of railroad, so that for each mile of railroad built they have been given 7,780 acres of land; while the States only secured 3,273 acres for each mile built—less than half the amount given to the corporations. To place it in another form, the States have been given 31,759,125 acres of land, and for this have built 10,971 miles of road; while these corporations have been given 32,864,280 acres of land more than the States received, and for it they have returned us but little more than a third of the number of miles of railway.

ACTION NEEDED AT ONCE.

To the States there has been patented 34,350,000 acres; to the corporations that have complied with the law, 7,572,000 acres; to the corporations that have not complied with the law, 3,723,000 acres; a total of 44,647,000 acres patented. The land-grant roads that have complied with the law are entitled to patents for 25,291,000 acres, which they refuse to take at present, because by so doing they evade the payment of State and county taxes, and also the costs of the survey due the United States.

But they have earned them, and have the right to demand them. They fail to do this, refuse to pay over the money due the United States for surveying, and by this means also evade the payment of State and county taxes, the title to the land remaining in the United States until the railroad makes a sale, when the patent is called for by the company and the deed made to the purchaser.

With the lands granted to corporations, 145,000,000 acres, and the 35,000,000 acres granted to the States, they make a total of 180,000,000 acres of land, or 280,000 square miles.

Such, sir, is an outline of the results of this policy, meager, indeed, for it would require volumes to tell its whole unsavory history. The people have done their duty. Their indignation at the hitherto reckless indifference of Congress is heard throughout the length and breadth of the land. Sampson has risen in his might and will burst asunder the flimsy withes that bind him. Sir, they mean to have those remaining lands saved for the uses of themselves and their children. I ask leave to print additional remarks and extracts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to my colleague [Mr. COBB] those two minutes.

Mr. COBB. I was not aware, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution was coming up to-day. I entered the Hall just a moment ago.

These resolutions cover the scope which the Committee on the Public Lands, of which I am a member, has laid down for its operation. We have been assiduously engaged in labor almost night and day, and we are complained of by railroad companies because we are so industrious as we have been. They say it is unheard-of that committees should act as early as we have been acting upon great questions like this.

We have already reported to the House a bill providing for the forfeiture of grants to seven railroad companies, amounting to 5,000,000 acres of land. We are now ready to report a bill for the forfeiture of 15,000,000 acres more; and we have also in process of completion other bills which we are considering, and will report as rapidly as we can.

If this resolution is intended, as I have no idea it was, to hurry up the Committee on Public Lands on this great question, I can only say that we need no effort to hurry us. We have lost no time in preparing bills and presenting them to this House. In the course of a very short time we will have reported bills to this House covering many millions of acres, and the House will be called upon to determine whether those millions of acres of railroad grants shall be forfeited or not.

These land grants are great frauds on this nation. In my judgment there are not less than 100,000,000 of acres of grants to these railroads to which they are no more entitled than are members of this House. We can show that frauds have been committed in efforts to corrupt legislative bodies in this country unheard-of before.

I have now before me a decision of the supreme court of the State of Oregon reciting the corrupt action of the Oregon Railroad Company in setting apart a million of money, proposed to be raised out of their land grants, to corrupt the Legislature of Oregon, and the judge in his place recites the facts in his decision. That is only one item. My time will not permit me to go further into the matter.

I want to suggest one other thing. I concur in this resolution in its spirit in regard to the public lands. The homestead settler ought to be protected. In my judgment, and I think that is the judgment of the Committee on Public Lands, the pre-emption law should be repealed.

The spirit of this resolution, so far as I have been able to gather its meaning, is in harmony with the sentiment of the Committee on Public Lands and its action thus far. I see no objection to its passage, except that we are going on now to do exactly what the resolution requires. It will give us facilities for accomplishing our work by authorizing us to report at any time. I had intended to present to the committee a resolution, sooner or later, for submission to the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolutions which have been read.

Several members called for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have already been demanded by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD].

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VALENTINE. Before the yeas and nays are taken, I desire to ask consent of the gentleman from Indiana to change the phraseology of the second resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana can not give consent to such a change.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent. I desire merely to change a part of the language which does not correctly state the facts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the resolutions are now in harmony with the gentleman's views.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the resolutions.

The resolutions were again read.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent for a change of phraseology where the language is not in accordance with the facts. I think there will be no objection.

Mr. WELLER. I have been apprised beforehand of the purpose of the gentleman to offer his amendment changing the purport of the pending resolution, and I shall now object to any such action.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 251, nays 17, not voting 52; as follows:

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolutions was agreed to.

Before the result of the vote was declared the following announcements were made:

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HOUK] on political questions; but as I do not regard this as a political question, and do not believe he would vote contrary to me, I have voted "ay."

Mr. CANNON. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is unable to be here to-day, being confined to his room by illness.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] is absent on important business, and I am paired with him on political questions; but not regarding this as a political question, and believing that if he were present he would vote "ay," I have voted "ay."

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. MAYBURY, on all political questions, for to-day.

Mr. NICHOLLS and Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, on all political questions for to-day.

Mr. HOUK and Mr. MCMILLIN, on all political questions for to-day.

Mr. KING and Mr. BURLEIGH, on all political questions for to-day.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina, and Mr. LAIRD, on all political questions for to-day.

Mr. BELMONT and Mr. CHASE, on all political questions for to-day.

Mr. ELLIS and Mr. HARMER, on all political questions for to-day.

Mr. DAVIDSON and Mr. WEAVER, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and Mr. BLACKBURN, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. MONEY and Mr. WADSWORTH, on all political questions until further notice.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 332) for the relief Thomas B. Shannon; and

A bill (S. 346) to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes so as not to exclude retired Army officers from holding civil office in the Territories.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CALKINS. It is hardly fair not to hear from this side after a motion to suspend has been made on the other.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 106, noes 83.

Mr. CALKINS. Let us have tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. CALKINS. It is only a little patent bill I ask to have passed. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am willing to do so if that is the wish of gentlemen.

Mr. COX, of New York. Turn about is fair play.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

PRACTICE IN PATENT SUITS.

Mr. CALKINS. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in any suit hereafter brought in any court having jurisdiction in patent cases for an alleged use or infringement of any patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, where it shall appear that the defendant in such suit purchased the same in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use, and did not purchase or hold the same for sale, or to be used in or for any manufacturing process, if the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over, he shall recover no costs, unless it shall also appear that the defendant, at the time of such purchase or practical application, had actual knowledge or notice of the existence of such patent, or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the suit: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to articles manufactured outside of the United States: And provided further, That said purchaser or user upon request by the owner of the letters patent alleged to be infringed by him shall make known the vendor, and time, and place of purchase of the article or articles for the use of which complaint is made.

SEC. 2. That in all suits hereafter brought as aforesaid against a defendant other than a manufacturer or seller of such patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, the plaintiff shall, at the commencement of such suit, give a bond, to the approval of the clerk, with sufficient surety, to be conditioned that the plaintiff will pay all costs and attorneys' fees that may be adjudged against him; and if the defendant shall finally prevail in such suit, the court shall allow costs, and a reasonable sum, not exceeding $50, for counsel fees to the defendant, which shall be recoverable by suit, in the name of the clerk, upon said bond, or by fee-bill on execution. A failure by the plaintiff to give such bond shall, on motion, be ground for the dismissal of the suit.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

No second was demanded.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof), and the bill (H. R. 3925) to regulate practice in patent suits was passed.

REPEAL OF TEST-OATH.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, and such sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States as perpetuate the oath prescribed in said act.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," and so much of the provisions of section 1756 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and all other sections thereof which provide for the enforcement of the provisions of said act of July 2, 1862, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and that no person hereafter shall be required to take the oath therein prescribed as a condition precedent to the holding of any office, or to serving as a juror, or to the acquirement of any right under the laws of the United States.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 113.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will withdraw the motion if we can have the same favor extended to this side in order to submit a proposition.

Mr. COX, of New York. I can make no bargains.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask for a second of the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. COX, of New York, and Mr. BOUTELLE as tellers.

Mr. COX, of New York. By unanimous consent, let the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill be considered as seconded.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The rules allow thirty minutes of debate, fifteen for and fifteen against, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will be recognized as controlling the time in favor, and the gentleman from Maine the time against. [After a pause.] If neither gentleman wishes to be heard the Chair will submit the question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I suppose the gentleman from Maine will first be heard.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask whether we could not adjourn and let this come up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It will not come up to-morrow, but as unfinished business when we reach this class of business again.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does not the gentleman from Maine wish to proceed?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it not the intention of the gentleman from New York to explain his bill?

Mr. COX, of New York. As I understand the rule the gentleman having fifteen minutes is first to be heard. [Cries of "No!" on the Republican side.] I should like to hear what his objections are. I know what is the rule.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule on the subject, and it is not a subject for the decision of the Chair. The Chair will recognize either gentleman who wishes to address him. [Cries of "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether, if I explain the bill in a few minutes, I can then reserve the remainder of the time to conclude the debate?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York controls fifteen minutes of the time.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will say briefly that this bill is intended, as gentlemen will perceive, to repeal what is known as the test, or iron-clad, oath. It is the long oath that some of us take when we enter upon our duties. I have attempted time and again to have this repeal made by this House. I have explained it time and again. I argued it elaborately on the 3d of June, 1879. There seems to be some sort of incredulity in the public and Congressional mind as to the existence of such an absurdity, such an anomaly, such an anachronism upon our statute-book. This seems to have been the obstacle hitherto to its repeal.

I need not recite the language of that oath to gentlemen. When we stand in a semicircle before you, Mr. Speaker, to be sworn, there are two classes of members sworn. One class takes the oath prescribed by the Constitution—with a short addendum. The other takes the oath known as iron-clad. The latter is the disqualifying or test oath. It tests the fidelity of the affiant during the civil war, as to aiding, abetting, or giving countenance, counsel, encouragement, &c., to those engaged in armed hostility to the Government. It also tests the fidelity of the affiant as to the acceptance of office, or the exercise of the functions of any office whatever, &c.

With permission I place the oaths required of us, or what should be required, in juxtaposition, thus:

Good oath of bad rebel who did not support, &c., the Government.

I do solemnly swear that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or evasion; and that I will faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law: So help me God.

Constitutional oath, as it ought to be.

I swear to support the Constitution of the United States: So help me God.—Article VI, section 3.

Bad oath of good patriot who did support, &c., the Government.

I do solemnly swear that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought, nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto.

And I do further swear that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter: So help me God.

One of the ridiculous features of these two legalized oaths is that it forces a person to swear that while he is taking the oath he is not forswearing himself, that he has no mental reservations, that he is playing no sleights with his conscience, no thimble-rig with words. He swears that he is not lying; while the man who is yet supposed by some to be, or has once been, obnoxious to our laws, judged by this very test-oath, swears the lovely oath of loyalty.

The difference between these oaths is apparent. In my judgment the only constitutional oath that ought to be is: "I swear to support the Constitution of the United States. So help me God!" (Article VI, section 3.) Such an oath would be applicable to us all. There would then be no two classes of men, differently sworn, yet sitting side by side as equals.

All this bill proposes is to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, and such sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States as perpetuate the oath prescribed in said act, which is the "iron-clad" oath. It thus makes all the oaths taken in this Chamber like the one first referred to.

It may not be known, but it is true, that this long test-oath was repealed by the act of April 20, 1871. It was never re-enacted, except in the Revised Statutes and by indirection, though the act of June 22, 1874, makes this and all other revised acts the law of the land.

Why should we have these two diverse oaths for one class of officers? I ask members on both sides. Why do we distinguish now between members on this floor? Should they not be equal in the assumption of duty or in their method of qualification? The only reason possible to be given for such an anomaly is perhaps the reason which was given the other day in a newspaper which has been sent me from Maine, which bears the name of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] as editor. It said that the "Southern members did not demand this."

I doubt if there be one member South who desires the honorable distinction of having it forever recalled that he was confederate and others Federal, that he was a failure in revolt, and that his victors should be stigmatized by swearing to the recollection. We of the North demand it on account of good sense, equality of position, and fair dealing. I know neither North nor South on such a question. It is a question of honorable and decent parliamentary practice. In the newspaper edited by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], to which I refer, it is said that one objection to the repeal is that we should perpetuate the distinction between treason and loyalty. What! Twenty years after the war? After the line of force has been erased? After the men who participated in the struggle have been rehabilitated in all their rights of citizenship? After they who were disabled and disqualified because of rebellion have been enabled to become Federal Congressmen under other statutes? The reason for the oath exists no longer; therefore let the oath die.

But, Mr. Speaker, the comical part of the matter is that the men who were innocent of rebellion are compelled to take that test-oath, while the insurgents are required to take only the simple oath prescribed by the Constitution! What a comedy of errors! The loyal are tested; the disloyal are glorified! Could absurdity further go? Is it not the inversion of logic and the irony of history?

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KASSON. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. COX, of New York. I can not yield for a question. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KASSON. I merely wish to ask the gentleman from New York as to the extent to which this goes, whether it is limited to members of Congress solely?

Mr. COX, of New York. I will explain that fully at the close of the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves the remainder of his time. He has exhausted five minutes of it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, it is always a very pleasant and gratifying thing for a man to assume an attitude of generosity. Sometimes we find men generous with their own property, and sometimes we find gentlemen inclined to be generous with the property of other people. I have risen to object to the present consideration of this measure, not because I think I fall behind the gentleman from New York in magnanimity, or perhaps in chivalry, but because, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to recognize the exigency which calls for the introduction and passage of this measure at this time.

We hear a great deal said in deprecation of exciting sectional animosities and reviving sectional issues. I ask the gentleman from New York why he brings this sectional question in here to-day? We are living, sir, under a law in regard to our oaths which was adopted many years ago; a law which was supported by the gentleman from New York himself. I know of no reason whatever, I can understand no special cause for arresting the proceedings of this body to change the nature of the obligation which is assumed by the Representatives of the people upon entering on their duties here. The gentleman says we ought not to have two oaths here. I want to say to him that we are not responsible for the fact that two oaths are required. I want to say to him that the loyal people of this country are not responsible for the fact that gentlemen on the one side or the other of this House are unable, unfortunately, to take that oath which I believe men should under ordinary circumstances be required to take before entering upon the legislative duties of a body like this, an oath that they had never attempted to destroy the government of their country.

I understand perfectly well, Mr. Speaker, that we have had peculiar experience in this country. I understand perfectly well that we have modified the ordinary procedure. I do not undertake to question the validity of the seating of any member upon this floor. I do not undertake to cast any reflection upon any gentleman who is unable to take the iron-clad oath in this body. But when we are informed that there is an impropriety or a hardship or a lack of generosity in insisting that the oath of loyalty shall stand for those who choose to take it, I think we are going faster than the country calls for.

When the present law was enacted in January, 1871, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] expressed himself in its favor. He expressed himself in favor of the modification, which at that time permitted gentlemen who had been engaged in hostilities against the Government to take a modified oath and become members of this body. He favored the proposition on the ground that it was extending a graceful and a useful act of clemency and magnanimity to our fellow-citizens from whom we had been estranged. I read his language from the RECORD:

Mr. COX. Why, Mr. Speaker, is it not time we should stop talking about outrages, when they are the very consequence of our lack of tranquillity, in the North and South, and among the people of the country? Good government brings tranquilization of the people. It is a sign of bad government if there be unkindness and want of comity between the States and the people, and every move we make in the direction of removing these oaths and disqualifications cultivates a better spirit. It is like intertrading; it is like intermixing; it is like love; it is like God's own law, and I congratulate the other side of the House that they are marching up to that duty.

Mr. Speaker, I wish that the history of this country might show that the prediction and the hope of the gentleman from New York had been more fully borne out. "Like love!" "Like God's own law!" The answer came within a short time after the action upon this question thus supported by the gentleman from New York in denials of the rights of loyal citizens, in repetitions of outrages the very mention of which he deprecates, and the long line of similar returns for this clemency and magnanimity has stretched down from the massacres of Grant Parish and Colfax and Coushatta and Hamburg, to Copiah and to Danville.

Now, sir, in the brief time at my disposal—and I wish to say it seems to me a peculiar proceeding to press a measure of this kind under a suspension of the rules upon fifteen minutes of discussion—I want to say that if the repeal of this test-oath would in fact have a tendency toward removing any estrangements existing between the people of our common country and of accelerating the approach of that era of good feeling and of good faith for which we have waited and prayed so long, it would heartily have my vote. But I am compelled in justice to myself to ask what has been the result and what has been the interpretation of these various acts of magnanimity on behalf of the American Congress? It is not so much that we do this technical thing as it is that there will be an interpretation put upon our act which I believe will be harmful to the true interests of the American Republic.

The gentleman from New York has asked me if I desire to perpetuate the distinction between treason and loyalty twenty years after the war. The words were used by the gentleman and not by myself. And when he puts that question to me I answer him that I believe the distinction between treason and loyalty should be as perpetual as eternity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, if these acts of liberality and concession were tending to build up in the North as well as the South a feeling and a spirit beneficial to the present and future interests of this country, I should feel differently about it. But when every concession of this kind is interpreted as a retrogression from the standpoint of loyalty, is interpreted as a concession of the ground of patriotism, is interpreted as a sanction and approval or condonation of attempts to destroy the Government, I must enter my protest.

I want to ask gentlemen to consider for one moment with me how these various acts that received the approval of the gentleman from New York have been received in the South. I want to ask him what is thought and what is taught in that section of the country to-day on this question of treason and loyalty. I hold in my hand "A Compendium of the History of the United States, designed to answer the purpose of a text-book in schools and colleges, as well as to meet the wants of general readers," written by Mr. Alexander H. Stephens, and which has passed through repeated editions until this one of 1883, which I hold in my hand, and is to-day a manual for the instruction of the rising generation, white and black, in the Southern States of this country. I invite your attention to a few—and I can only call your attention to a few for want of time—of the indications of the spirit in which these concessions have been received. I will not take up your time with the earlier portion of the history of the American Republic as given in this remarkable book for the instruction of those people. I may say, in passing, that I find in it a most remarkable account of the repeated and incessant and almost uninterrupted triumphs of the confederate armies, which the historian has some difficulty in reconciling with the result of that great strife. But it is to the statements made in this book upon questions of principle going down to the very bedrock of government that I desire to call your attention. On page 474, article 13, we have this "magnanimous," this "conciliatory," lesson taught to the youth of the Southern States:

The administration of General Grant thus far has been thoroughly on the line of radical policy, and strongly marked by measures of very great importance, all tending directly to the centralization of power in the Federal head, and the destruction of the reserved rights of local self-government by the several States of the Union. Of this character may be named, among others of these measures, the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was carried and declared to be part of the Constitution under his auspices; and in like manner was the fourteenth. His attempt to acquire St. Domingo without authority of law may also be especially mentioned. But the most notable of all these measures is the "exforcement act," so called, known as the "Kuklux act of 1871." This goes far beyond anything in the sedition act of 1798, under the elder Adams, in its direct attacks upon public liberty. But, without further specification, it may be stated that all the leading features of the present administration and its general policy point directly, and, if not arrested by the peoples of the several States at the ballot-box, will lead ultimately, to the entire overthrow of the Federal system, and the subversion of the free institutions thereby attempted to be secured on the American continent, and the history of which we have traced.

That is the conciliatory and patriotic doctrine being taught in the Southern States to-day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] for the ten minutes remaining of his time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have some more very interesting extracts from this history which I should like to read. I think gentlemen would be very much interested in hearing them, and that the country would be interested.

Several MEMBERS. "Print!" "Print!"

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I will ask the poor privilege of printing what I would like to have read.

Mr. COSGROVE and others objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BOUTELLE. By whom is objection made?

Mr. COX, of New York. No matter who makes it; anybody can make the objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes; but I venture to make the inquiry without first obtaining the permission of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. After "the gentleman from New York" is recognized as entitled to the floor, the rules say that you must obtain my permission; but being a new member I excuse you. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to say, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman will hardly deny me the courtesy of a response. Let me say just this——

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not wish to be interrupted. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is not in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will not argue this question from any sectional or party standpoint. This bill only affects officers who take the iron-clad oath. All the men who were engaged in the rebellion or in secession do not—because they can not—take the iron-clad oath; therefore it does not affect the Southern men who were in rebellion. It is a bill for the relief of the Northern Unionist who was heroic for the Union!

When the gentleman makes sectional issues he makes them against men in the North—men who were loyal. He does not make them against disloyalists in the South. They have already been enlarged by the very legislation which I voted for and which he commends by his quotation from my remarks.

Sir, this long iron-clad oath is but the rotten remnant of the clumsy buttresses of arbitrary power. It may have been necessary during the war, when I voted for it. It was then a test. But now, since we have enabled the men who fought against the Union by means of a short and simple oath peculiar to themselves to which they can swear, may we not ask that the same generous privilege of taking an oath to the Constitution, pure and simple, be extended to Union men which former disunionists enjoy? That is all. I plead for equality. May we of the North not be equal in oath-taking with the South? The gentleman would continue those faithful to the Union as "suspects;" I would banish all differences.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. We do not ask it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. We do not ask it.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I do not ask you to interrupt me.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Of course not.

Mr. COX, of New York. This test-oath is of the same nature as the test-oaths of history. We know what they were. This test-oath of loyalty differs only in degree, though not in kind, from the whipping at the cart's tail, the thumbscrew, the rack, the disemboweling and quartering of the dead and the burning of the live body. What would you think of a law that would apply the thumbscrew to my gallant colleague [General SLOCUM] and allow the "rebel brigadiers" to go free? What would you think of a law which would fix upon the rack my patriotic and soldierly colleagues [Mr. ROGERS and Mr. GREENLEAF], who fought on the Union side, and leave the "Hotspurs" of 1861—now the sedate Solons of 1884—in better case than my gallant Unionist colleagues? The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] should study the reductio ad absurdum. He may not intend it, but he does defend the Southern men here, and asks that the chaplet of honor be placed on their brows, while he would continue the stigma on the Northern men. Because they were loyal they may not take the simple oath of loyalty.

These tests as to opinion and fealty are evidences of incivism if not of barbarism. They have no association with civism, liberty, or justice. The only good, perhaps, they ever did was that they helped to people America. The revolution of 1640 turned upon an oath of conformity to the Established Church. It was not so long as our oath. It was known as "the et cætera oath." It bound men never to change opinions. It was so indefinite—like our own "iron-clad" oath—as to be the very essence of folly and despotism. It raised up Baxter in religion and Pym in Parliament. It lost to the English Church two thousand of its best ministers. Hallam calls it "cold-blooded persecution, worse than the foment and fury of civil war." It led, as most oaths lead, to subterfuges and reservations, prevarications and perjury. It gave more strength to Quakerism than perhaps any other kind of persecution except martyrdom could have accomplished.

A MEMBER. What has that to do with this?

Mr. COX, of New York. I will show you before I am done. They are evidences of hateful policies.

The history of political oaths is the history of oath-breaking. They were as cheap as those of dicers or of the custom-house; they made the proverb in Spain that "he who made the law made also its evasion." Talleyrand swore thirteen times to his allegiance under various governments. Other men not so able made a merit of being forsworn; a white rose to-day; a red, to-morrow! Perhaps the most odious test-oath ever enacted in any country was that known as "the Missouri test-oath." It was decided unconstitutional in the case of Cummings vs. The State of Missouri (4 Wallace, page 277). The plaintiff was a Catholic priest. He was convicted of teaching and preaching without having first taken the oath presented by the constitution of April, 1865. He was sent to jail. The supreme court of Missouri affirmed the judgment, although the oath was divided into more than thirty distinct tests, some not against law and some not blameworthy, most of them charitable actions. Under the same law Sisters of Charity were imprisoned in Missouri, in Cape Girardeau County; and why? Simply because they taught in a convent, and had not taken the oath. They were dragged into court, indicted, and tried. These cases are evidences, of course, of extreme cruelty, and can not now be repeated, and yet we preserve upon our statutes this rare memory of the war, in the form of an invocation to God. Of all the oaths from the time of Abraham, who swore after a peculiar manner, down to our own statutory requirement, there is nothing so laughable, absurd, and yet nothing which so exemplifies hate and spite as this "iron-clad" oath.

There has been much metaphysics as to an oath. Is it a religious affirmation, or an invocation to God as a witness? Is it an imprecation for divine vengeance, or a mere promise? The original Greek word meant, "I adjure thee;" "I call on thee to witness." This is the Hebrew as well as the Greek. It is the sacred and majestic adjuration used by the high priest to evoke the truth. Is it not lessened by too much frequency, frivolity, and flippancy? Does it not then become an abuse of the name of God? Augustine summed up his creed: that false swearing is fatal, true swearing dangerous, swearing not at all is safe.

There is a history of oath-taking. Homer's heroes swore; the gods swore; the Romans swore by their swords and their Cæsars; the Egyptians by cats and onions; the East Indian by holding a cow by the tail, the cow being sacred to the Brahmin. However ludicrous these various oaths may be, there is not in all of them one so utterly ridiculous, repulsive, and undignified as the "iron-clad" oath as taken by the innocents of this House!

In view of the history of oath-taking, and with much admiration for the Moravian and the Quaker, and reverential awe of the Almighty Power which is so carelessly invoked, I hope that this relic of barbarism may be wiped from our statute-book. Other nations are progressing in this respect.

Why should not we also make progress? England in 1865 abolished eleven different statutes made since the time of Henry VIII. Why? In order to get rid of these test-oaths. No longer in England do they have such an abundance of oaths. No longer is the Jew, the Quaker, the Catholic, or Dissenter disqualified in the English Parliament. A better civilization exists under more liberal conditions.

The law of July 31, 1868, reduced the English oath of allegiance to a model of brevity and sense. It reads: "I do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, her heirs and successors, according to law: So help me God." The list of officers who take this oath are few in number compared with former days. Besides, in England wholesale swearing in custom-houses and elsewhere has been abolished. Simple declarations are the practice. In Spain, under the lead of Castellar, an effort is making to abolish all oaths.

It was Jeremy Bentham who said that "the oath neither implied faith given nor faith received. Why, then," he asked, "require it? Why take it? Why this farce?" I think it was the same great philosophic statesman who said that it was strange that the nations whose religion was based on the teachings of Jesus Christ should be the very nations who disowned his teaching as to oath-taking, and who discarded Him who prescribed "yea, yea" and "nay, nay," and whose best spirit was, "Swear not at all!"

We are now approaching an era of good feeling, if not of Democratic ascendency. This ascendency should inure to the interest of public liberty in its largest acceptation. We are here to exalt the Republic. We should remove every suspicion that poisons political integrity or embitters patriotic union. Neither oaths as a test of past patriotism nor flags of past battles should in their legends bring reproach or fire animosity. [Applause.] As civil wars are domestic calamities; we should be heedful of perpetuating their memories. Is there never to be reconciliation between the sections? Is the hatred to be continued by these sacred invocations? Why, even Cæsar wept for his great enemy. Rivals sleep together in the Walhalla of Bavaria. Even Russia permits a monument to her Polish foes at Cracow. The factions of Italy are entombed under one roof in Santa Croce.

Let us bridge over the abysses of civil strife as the Romans did, with a bridge of gold. [Applause.] Let us herald at the beginning of this Congress to all the people, North and South, in the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount, that the grace which has been growing in the hearts of our people since the war shall have no hateful trophy, no lesson save that which is patriotic and peaceful, rising above party passions and ignoble force; and especially let us practice that rational goodness which will deliver those of us who were faithful in the trials of the Republic from the reproach of taking an oath at once meaningless and sinister—detestable in the sight of men and God, and only welcome among those who cultivate the spirit of uncharitableness and diabolism.

Abolish this empty form, whose only service is to corrupt by familiarity, which calls down from the skies the holiest of religions into the muck of mortal depravity to vitiate the springs of truth and justice by its illogical and irreverent ribaldry.

It is not a question of party or patriotism. I would not carelessly and causelessly invoke for political duty that appalling and abiding sense of the Divine Majesty, nor suffer the effulgence which emanates from the Divine promise and the eternal verities to be contaminated by the imperfections and vices of men. [Loud applause.]

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman from New York has any time remaining, I wish to ask him a practical question as to the last clause of his bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. The last clause of the bill says "or to serving as a juror." Now the section to which the bill refers does not require for jurors this identical oath.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will strike that out if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman will strike that out, so that the bill will only apply to members of Congress and civil officers——

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope no one will object.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. COX] whether he does not remember that Mr. FRYE, of Maine, now a Senator, reported this very bill in this House on the 4th of December, 1877, and that it was passed unanimously?

Mr. COX, of New York. I do; and Senator EDMUNDS, now President of the Senate, has repeatedly spoken in favor of the abolition of this test-oath.

Mr. KASSON. I have no wish to object to the bill so far as applicable to members of Congress and civil officers.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me one word in reply to a direct personal allusion. [Cries of "No, no!" "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. No further debate is in order. Is there objection to the modification suggested?

Mr. LOWRY. For the present I object, for this reason: I think——

The SPEAKER. The objection is sufficient without the reason. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. LOWRY. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York whether it may not be our duty to allow this provision to remain, in order to relieve a co-ordinate branch of the Congress of the United States from the embarrassment of having some of their newly-elected officers excused from taking the iron-clad oath? I now withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from New York to modify the bill in the manner suggested?

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Inasmuch as the gentleman would not allow a question from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania (while the vote was being taken). At the urgent request of a great many of my associates, I withdraw my objection. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER (having taken the vote). On this question the ayes are 185, the noes 14.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; 14 voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended, and the bill (H. R. 3926) is passed. [Loud applause.]

J. M. HOBBS.

On motion of Mr. PEEL, of Arkansas, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of J. M. Hobbs.

BATH COUNTY, KENTUCKY.

On motion of Mr. CULBERTSON, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the claim of Bath County, Kentucky, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days.

And then, on motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 22, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, with a favorable indorsement, a letter of the postmaster at Washington, D. C., recommending the construction in this city of a building suitable for post-office purposes; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 4th ultimo, a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office regarding the issue of patents on certificates issued in satisfaction of the private land claim of Israel Dodge, sr., and stating that he has suspended further action connected therewith during the investigation of the matter by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This communication, together with the accompanying papers, will be printed, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. DOLPH. A resolution of inquiry relating to that matter was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and by that committee to a subcommittee, which has it now under investigation. I think, therefore, the communication of the honorable Secretary of the Interior and the accompanying papers should go to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had forgotten that circumstance and remembered that the original bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of David A. Welles and others, citizens of Norwich, Conn., praying for the repeal of the act of May 15, 1820, and the act supplementary thereto, by which the constitutional term of many administrative officers was changed and fixed at four years; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented the petition of N. Shipman and others, citizens of Connecticut, praying for legislation providing for the collection of divorce statistics with reference to the extraterritorial effect to be given to decrees of divorce; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of the Vermont State Teachers' Association, praying for an appropriation for schools in Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Orford Copper and Sulphur Company, of Bayonne, N. J., praying for such amendment of the existing laws as will enable them to import copper ores from Canada and other foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL presented ten petitions of citizens of Allegheny city, Pa., praying for an appropriation for the erection of a suitable building in that city to be used as a post-office and for revenue purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade, of Erie, Pa., praying for the re-establishment of the land light-house; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the common and select councils of Allentown, Pa., and a resolution adopted at a meeting of the councils of Pottsville, Pa., favoring legislation for the improvement of the condition of the Indians; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GARLAND presented the petition of E. W. Kimball, John McClure, U. M. Rose, and others, including the entire bar of Little Rock, Ark., praying for an increase of the salary of the judge of the United States court for the eastern district of Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAWYER. I present the petition of N. A. Earle, T. J. O'Brien, Foster Stevens & Co., Edwin Hoyt, jr., and 40 others, citizens of Michigan, praying Congress to enact such legislation as will protect the titles of private purchasers to whom the United States sold lands found to lie within the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad grant in Northern Michigan, the petitioners declaring that they have no pecuniary interest in the matter, but only desire to see justice done. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of Sherrill Post, Department of New York, No. 313, of the Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of granting a pension of $8 per month to every person who served thirty days in the war of the rebellion; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of Tyler J. Snyder's Post, Department of New York, No. 72, of the Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of the Government pensioning the veterans of the late war; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of Henry J. Colwell, Charles L. Anderson, Joseph Schaller, Hugh McLaughlin, A. F. Wright, Michael H. Kern, Fred. L. Hirchman, and Charles B. Knowlton, of Michigan, praying legislation to confirm land titles to purchasers within the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad grant; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PRINTING OF TREASURER'S ACCOUNTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a motion to print the quarterly accounts of the United States Treasurer, have instructed me to report back the same and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. These reports are very voluminous, as you see, and the printing of them would be expensive; they give no information whatever; they merely say, "John Brown, $10," "Peter Smith, $25," giving merely the name of the person to whom the money was paid and the amount.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was there a resolution or a motion referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. ANTHONY. The letter of transmittal addressed to yourself was referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a letter from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with law, copies of the accounts rendered and settled by the First Comptroller, reports back the letter and the papers, and asks to be discharged from the further consideration of the question of printing the same. If there be no objection, that order will be entered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Quite a number of petitions very numerously signed have been presented to the Senate during its present session praying that Congress take such action as may open the Oklahoma lands, so called, in the Indian Territory, to settlement under the land laws of the United States. Those petitions were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am instructed by that committee to report them back and to recommend that the prayer of the petitioners be not granted and ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the report accompanied by a written statement of the reasons?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is.

Mr. INGALLS. I am very glad to hear that, and hope it will be printed and widely disseminated, to put a long-vexed question at rest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order will be entered in conformity with the report of the committee and the prayer of the petitioners denied.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 460) to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 242) to provide agricultural lands for the Southern band of Ute Indians in lieu of lands heretofore provided for allotment to them, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 195) granting a pension to Emily Munroe, submitted an adverse report thereon, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 82) for the relief of George Frick, submitted an adverse report thereon, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to make a unanimous report in favor of the bill (S. 1056) granting an increase of pension to Sally Mallory. She is the widow of a Revolutionary soldier, and, as she is now over 90 years of age, whatever is done for her benefit of course must be done by this Congress and done soon. The committee, therefore, also authorize me to ask the consent of the Senate to put the bill upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill reported by him be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be reported for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not understand that that is an increase of pension. It is the granting of an original pension.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, no; she is now pensioned at $8 a month as the widow of a Revolutionary soldier. Her husband served three years in the Revolutionary war and also during the war of 1812, and was with Scott at the battle of Lundy's Lane.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not suppose there is any great difference between this applicant and nearly all others in the same situation, and I should like to see the reasons why there should be an increase in favor of one and not of others. Therefore I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 156) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms for the militia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 363) for the relief of Edward P. Vollum, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 543) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report back the petition of Joseph Dawson, of Hartford, Conn., praying for a pension on account of a permanent disability incurred in the discharge of his duty in the internal-revenue service. The petition ought to properly go, we think, to the Committee on Claims, and I therefore report it back, and ask that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAWLEY. The original reference to the Committee on Pensions was a mistake. I intended that it should go to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change of reference will be made as requested, if there be no objection.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 473) for the relief of Francis Hall, submitted an adverse report thereon, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 494) for the relief of Nancy Miller, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 667) for the relief of First Sergeant J. C. Jorgensen, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 472) for the relief of George P. Webster, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 113) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Antonio Barrios, of Guatemala, and José Victor Zavala, of Nicaragua, reported it without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1033) giving a military record to Alexander Francesco, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 361) granting a pension to John C. Hargrave, submitted an adverse report thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 465) for the relief of Mary L. Walker and Ella Walker, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3925) to regulate practice in patent suits; and

A bill (H. R. 3926) to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, and such sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States as perpetuate the oath prescribed in said act.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 1223) to secure to the medical profession equal rights in the service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 1224) for the relief of Charles A. Sibley, guardian of Lloyd M. Stevens; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1225) granting a pension to Mary Hopperton, widow of Edward Hopperton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 1226) granting an increase of pension to Dr. Samuel Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1227) granting a pension to Capt. Israel Stough; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 1228) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Marie Louise Craven; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1229) for the relief of Jacob H. Stark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JACKSON introduced a bill (S. 1230) to compensate Frank M. Eastman for his "Digest of the Decisions of the Treasury Department;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a bill (S. 1231) for the relief of William Franklin Grounds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of California, introduced a bill (S. 1232) authorizing claimants to the Rancho de Napa, in Napa County, California, to prove up their title; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of the creditors of Norman Wiard be withdrawn from the office of the Secretary of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of M. H. Collins be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Patents.

On motion of Mr. LAPHAM, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of J. B. Cornell and others be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, there having been no adverse report thereon.

FOREIGN LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of additional legislation to prevent the circulation in the mails of this country of lottery advertisements coming from foreign countries; also into the expediency of providing by postal conventions or treaties for the prevention of said abuse.

MEAT EXPORTATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions" that order is closed.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask if now is the proper time to call up the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] relative to the prohibition of the introduction of American pork into Germany and other countries, to which I offered an amendment the other day. I do not want to delay action on the resolution by the amendment; I want the Committee on Foreign Relations to have the subject before it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under Rule VII no motion to proceed to the consideration of a resolution is in order until 1 o'clock. After 1 o'clock and before 2 o'clock the Chair thinks it will be in order.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to delay action, because I desire the committee to have the matter before it as soon as possible. I wish, however, my amendment to be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that on looking at Rule VIII the Chair thinks after the conclusion of the strict morning business, which is now concluded, although it is not yet 1 o'clock, it is in order for the Senator from Kentucky to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution he has named.

Mr. BECK. The amendment which I propose to the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island I again send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 26 on the Calendar, being a resolution introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on the 9th day of January. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky now to proceed to the consideration of this resolution?

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, and the pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. BECK. I gave notice the other day of an amendment, which the Secretary now has, and I should like to have it read as part of the remarks I now propose to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be reported for information, if there be no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to add to the resolution the following:

And the committee is further instructed to report what discriminations are made against exports from the United States by the tariff laws of the principal countries of Europe and America, especially France, Germany, Mexico, and Brazil, by reason of commercial or other special treaties or agreements with more favored nations, and to report the causes which led to such discriminations, the efforts, if any, that have been made to remove them, and what legislation, if any, is necessary to place the United States on an equal footing with the most favored nations. This investigation is not, however, to delay the action of the committee on the first branch of this resolution.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire the resolution as first proposed to pass, but I desire also a fuller investigation into our commercial relations with other countries than that resolution calls for, because it is very important for us to learn the relations that we now hold to other countries in our trade with them. For example, the very intelligent consul-general of the United States to Portugal, whom I have the honor to know very well, the Hon. John M. Francis, of Troy, N. Y., has made a report to the Secretary of State in which he shows this state of facts to exist in regard to our trade with that country:

He says, among other things—

It will be observed that American pork and beef do not appear in this enumeration.

That is in the list of the articles he had given as imported from the United States into Portugal.

The former article—

That is, pork—

is prohibited from entry into this kingdom: it can not be stored while awaiting transshipment; it can not even be transferred from one vessel to another while lying in the harbor. Whatever supplies of this class reach this market arrive through English channels, and are, I am informed, duly certified to as being of English origin. Frequent and forcible representations have been made to the Portuguese Government, as the records of the legation of the United States here testify, on the subject of the prohibition of American pork and lard from entry into the kingdom; but the obnoxious law continues in full force, sustained by an erroneous judgment which the prohibitive action of Germany and France against the wholesome American food had induced and by the demand of the producers of swine in Portugal.

The consul-general proceeds to show that while our total imports into Portugal in 1881 was $5,188,132 in value, the value of food products, such as wheat, flour, and articles of that sort, constituted about $5,000,000 of it, and that we brought from Portugal during the year 1881 $658,476 worth, of which cork wood made up $502,763 and straw hats $33,206. In other words, he shows that we were selling to Portugal $5,188,006, and taking from her a fraction over half a million dollars, and therefore she did not propose to trade upon such terms, and refused to allow our pork to enter the ports of that country.

I desire the investigation to be carried to the fullest extent, because I believe it will be ascertained beyond doubt that the action of many foreign governments is more retaliatory than sanitary. This consul very properly says that it is done "by the demand of the producers of swine in Portugal."

The London Economist of December 29, 1883, speaking of the action of France, indicates very conclusively that the action of that country in its opinion is more retaliatory than sanitary. This is the language used by that very able journal:

The French protectionists have gained a success over the government in obtaining from the chamber the suspension of the decree, issued in November last, authorizing the importation of American salted pork. For the last three years the interdiction had been the subject of negotiations between the French and American Governments and of scientific investigations in France as to the reality of the danger of trichinosis. The French academy of medicine had declared by a majority of 69 to 3 that pork even infected with trichinæ was innocuous when cooked, and it was shown that the worm was to be found not only in American pork but in pork from all countries. The decree removing the interdiction gave satisfaction not only to the United States Government but to the French public, and cargoes of pork were known to be on their way to France when, on Saturday last, M. Gaudin presented a bill to draw up regulations for the importation of salted pork, and M. Paul Bert obtained from the chamber a vote, by a majority of 272 to 153, to suspend the raising of the interdict until M. Gaudin's bill could be brought up, which may be months hence or never. The vote may be in a measure explained by the rivalry between the ports of Havre and Nantes. The former was formerly the seat of the trade in American pork, and received over 30,000 tons annually, while the latter has no trade with America, but has large manufactories of salted pork. The protectionists from principle, and the agriculturists from interest, voted for the suspension of the decree, and in spite of the efforts of the minister of commerce the decree has been abrogated, and the importation of American salted pork is again prohibited.

That is evidence to my mind of the fact that these measures are retaliatory. I have many evidences of the same sort in regard to other countries.

I hold in my hand the French tariff, which I have examined carefully. Up to May 8, 1881, when a modification of it was had, it is safe to say, without going into detail, that nearly every article of American manufacture was absolutely prohibited from entering the ports of France. The list of prohibitions extends all through cotton goods, woolen goods, cotton yarns, woolen yarns, and nearly every article of American manufacture. A modification of the old tariff was had on the 8th day of May, 1881, but it still leaves the United States of America trading under the general tariff substantially prohibited from the French market, while England and Germany by commercial treaties are dealing under a special tariff of about 10 per cent.

The discriminations in the tariff, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] suggests, and I thank him for the suggestion, are still such that the prohibition is almost as absolute as if it were prohibited by law, because the advantages to the English and Germans are so great that we can not compete with them.

There are some very curious things in the French tariff that I hope the Committee on Foreign Relations will look at when they come to consider this matter, as I ask that they may be allowed to do. Take this, for example, leaving out the great variety of articles of manufacture: Fire-arms, muzzle-loaders, that nobody wants now, under the conventional tariff, £4 17*s.* 6*d.* Under the general tariff we can send to France muzzle-loaders upon the same terms they can. The next item is "fire-arms, breech-loaders," in regard to which we are building up a large industry in Connecticut and elsewhere, and make guns equal to the very best in the world. The conventional tariff with England allows imports at £4 17*s.* 6*d.*, and the general tariff under which we trade is £7 6*s.* 3*d.*—nearly double. Fire-arms can be purchased in the rough from England at eight shillings and a penny, and the general tariff under which we have to trade, if we try to trade, is £1 4*s.* 4*d.*—three times as much as is paid under the conventional treaty; and so all through with cheese, butter, hogs, lard, cattle, and everything in which we are likely to compete discriminations of the most prohibitory character are still maintained. Their tariff was absolutely prohibitory before 1881. It is as practically prohibitory now by reason of the discriminations that are made.

I need hardly call attention to a matter which must be very well remembered. A year or two ago, when the distillers and dealers of the West were brought before a committee of the Senate as culprits charged with all sorts of fraud in regard to what was known as the whisky ring, Mr. Shufeldt, the president of that association, appeared before the committee of which Mr. Windom, of Minnesota, was then chairman, and was asked, "Why are you raising all this money?" He told them just what the Treasury Department tells us in a statement which I received day before yesterday, to which perhaps I had better first call attention. I wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury inquiring about these tariffs, and I received the information promptly which I hold in my hand, and which other gentlemen as well as the committee may desire to look at.

It is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 15, 1884.

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your note of this date for information in regard to the operations of the French tariff on American manufactures, and on English goods of like character, I inclose a statement compiled in this Department from the most recent tariffs procurable.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. J. B. BECK, United States Senate.

Information called for by Senator BECK in regard to provisions of the French tariff.

The French tariff now in force was promulgated on May 8, 1881.

It consists of two distinct parts, one of which is entitled "tariff conventional," and the other "tariff général."

The conventional tariff is applicable to merchandise imported from countries having commercial treaties with France, such as Great Britain and Germany; and the general tariff applies to importations from countries having no treaties of commerce with France, such as the United States.

The differences between the rates of duty imposed upon the same goods by the two tariffs are very numerous. In some instances the rates imposed upon goods coming from non-treaty countries are lower than upon the same goods from treaty countries; thus, refined whale-oil imported from Germany or Great Britain pays a duty of 52 francs per 100 kilos, while the oil imported from the United States (a non-treaty country) pays only 15 francs per 100 kilos.

In other instances goods imported from non-treaty countries are free, while the same goods from treaty countries are liable to duty; thus, wool imported from the United States or any other non-treaty country is free, while wool from Germany, Great Britain, or any other treaty country is liable to a duty of 25 francs per 100 kilos.

The most numerous discriminations between the two tariffs are, however, in favor of importation from treaty countries, as against those from non-treaty countries; thus, in the schedule of beverages the following items are found:

	Conventional tariff.	General tariff.
	Francs.	Francs.
Wines, per hectoliter	3.50	4.50
Alcohol and brandy, per hectoliter	15.00	30.00
In schedule "Yarns and threads:"
Cotton yarn (according to fineness), per 100 kilos.	15.00 to 300.00	18.50 to 372.00
Woolen yarn, per 100 kilos	10.00 to 100.00	31.00 to 124.00
In schedule "Tissues:"
Cotton, unbleached (according to weight), per 100 kilos	50.00 to 300.00	62.00 to 625.00
Woolen, per 100 kilos	(*)	75.00 to 620.00
In schedule "Animals:"
Live oxen, each	2.60	15.00
Hogs, each	30	3.00

*10 per cent. ad valorem.

It will be seen from the above how it happens that German alcohol pays about $5 less per barrel than American.

When the committee of the Senate to which I referred saw fit to call before them the alcohol exporters, Mr. Shufeldt appeared, as I stated. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] put the question and desired him to explain what all this trouble was about. Mr. Shufeldt said:

We have been exporters of alcohol very largely in the Northwest, as Mr. Miller said here, up to a great many million gallons heretofore, because the crops of Europe were short. Now, we can do that no more, because Germany has been a favored nation with France, and France has allowed her alcohol to come in there at fifteen francs per hectoliter; but France has charged us when we sent alcohols in there thirty francs per hectoliter, thus discriminating against us, while we had in this bill a clause that if the President of the United States found that France had accepted us as one of her most favored nations our Congress would reduce the import duty on imported spirits a half dollar a gallon. That, we thought, would appease France, and we had seen the French minister, and had had a delegation in the chambers of Paris regarding it, and they said they thought France would accept; but that was also stricken out of our bill. We did not get anything. Those were two important points for the commerce of our country.

That investigation developed the fact that our importation into France from about $15,000,000 fell off to $1,000,000, and the men of the West had to raise by subscription among themselves $700,000 to pay the losses and have their exports sold there rather than have them come home and break the home market.

But, Mr. President, I am not going to discuss this question elaborately now. I only desire to show why the amendment I propose ought to be accepted, and when the debate comes on the other propositions perhaps I shall wish to be further heard. I desire to say, however, that the suggestion of retaliation is precisely what foreign and home protectionists want. Retaliation will only have the effect of injuring our own people worse than they are injured now. The manufacturers of the United States have been prohibited under the French tariff system for fifteen years from selling any goods to France, and ship-loads of American goods have been confiscated because they were taken to England first and sent there. The volume I hold in my hand, the report to the British Parliament of 1881 on commercial treaties with France, shows that France is still complaining of these evasions, and that she had seized, as they show, a consignment of starch from Scotland because it was claimed to have come from the United States. She had seized also American lawn-mowers which were said to have been made somewhere in England, and she had seized quite a number of things. The way England had to operate to get around many of them was to state that they allowed Englishmen to establish American agencies, as Brown & Co. in London and elsewhere, and these agencies became the owners of the articles. France is still resisting that sort of evasion, under which some of our manufactures are got through their custom-houses.

I repeat, sir, that our manufacturers have been excluded from French markets for many years. Why did we not retaliate because of that wholesale prohibition? The answer is, because the manufacturer did not want a foreign market; he could get all the money he wanted for his goods from his own people, and he did not care to go abroad and sell in competition with other people in open market; but when it comes to hogs, then we hear the cry of retaliation. I will explain the effect of that. Take the case of an Illinois farmer. A man with a thousand acres of corn in Illinois can not sell the corn; he can not transport or ship it as corn; he builds a distillery in Peoria and makes alcohol; and he fattens a drove of hogs on the slop. He finds that Germany is the best market for his alcohol, and it is a good market for hogs. He charters a ship and takes his alcohol to Germany, and the hogs as well. He finds that the Germans have issued a decree, just as they did in France when they found the hogs were coming, saying, "You shall not land them;" but the market for the alcohol is still the best in Europe. Of course he is aggrieved at the hog order and he complains to Congress. Congress feels aggrieved and says, "We will not allow the importation to this country of German wines." The Western farmer at once says, "That would break me; I want to sell my alcohol; I can make a sale by taking wine in exchange, and I can not sell otherwise. I am offered Rhine wines cheaper than I can buy them elsewhere, and I can have a return cargo and sell it in Chicago at a fine profit. For God's sake, because I can not sell my hogs do not prevent me from selling my alcohol and having a return cargo of wine. The effect of that would be to make me still worse off than I am now. In short, it is saying to men in Chicago and elsewhere, 'Double up your prices on domestic wines. You have no competition with Germany now;' they would of course sell their home-made wine for twice what they are selling it now, and it would be a worse article perhaps than would be brought from the Rhine."

Propositions are made now, seriously made, for Congress to abandon all its authority over this character of legislation and say to the President that during the session of Congress or during the recess of Congress he may select experts who shall say what articles of import are deleterious, and prohibit such articles from coming into the country by way of retaliation. If he will select the men who are making wine in this country (and I can name them), they will pronounce every drop of wine that comes from the Rhine deleterious. If he will select men engaged in the manufacture of blankets, they will prove that all of the dyestuffs used in the manufacture of blankets abroad are poisonous to the people. They will exclude anything that will put more money in their pockets and take it from the pockets of the people by forcing inferior home-made goods upon them; but the general consumer will suffer, everybody will suffer, except the men who make money by the retaliatory measures and by the increased price of the articles prohibited. We had experts, so called, on the tariff commission, and in making up the schedules on the tariff bill with which we are now afflicted we know what the effect was.

But I am not going to bring up that subject now. What I desire is a thorough investigation of the causes which have led to these discriminations against us. We have prohibited other people from trading with us, and they will not allow us to bring our goods to them if they can get them from people who trade with them. Do you think it is because of any love or affection on the part of France for Germany that induces the former to let German alcohol come into France for half the duty she puts on American alcohol going there, or is there any sentiment in her trading with England at a 10 per cent. tariff when she is prohibiting the goods of the United States? No. Why does she do it? These people take what she has, and trade with her. We will not, and she will not trade with us except to the extent that her necessities absolutely compel her, because we will not trade with her, will not swap, if you like to call it that, will not exchange articles. She had to pay a thousand millions of money to Germany. She does not want to part with her money; she does not propose to do it if she can avoid it; but she proposes to let us take what she has got and she will take what we have got. All she asks is fair reciprocity. There is no sentiment about it, and no feeling of national ill-will. So we need not lose our temper. Germany trades with her; and if there is a country in the world that she would rather not trade with it is Germany; but it is her interest to do it, and therefore she does it. It is not her interest to trade with us, and therefore she curtails her dealings with us all she can, having due regard to the wants and interests of her people.

I can instance country after country whose action for years has been prohibitory or retaliatory against our products, or some of them, because of our highly protective tariff, and we have never till now made any fuss about it. The theory of those who have been managing the affairs of this Government is, that every country ought to exclude foreign competition with home industries; keep out foreign paupers; make what you want at home; keep other people and their goods away from you. Now, when other people are doing what we tell them we intend to do, are doing, and ought to do, surely what is good for us must be good for them; at least the men who are advocating that doctrine can not retaliate because they follow the advice we give and the course we pursue. I think when the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations comes in it will show a condition of things built up by the action of this country, and it will prove that retaliation will aggravate all these evils and will be no remedy for any of them, but will simply further punish our own people. The ports of Germany and England and Portugal and all the other countries of the world will be as free to other people's goods as they were before, but our own people will be unable to sell what they export, because they must take what other people have or they can not sell to any large extent for any great length of time. Retaliation will double the cost of many things in our own market, and at the same time destroy the revenues of the Government; it will not punish any foreign government, only our own people. The German Government or the French Government is not a trader; nations do not trade with each other as such; individual men trade. The case I gave of the Peoria exporter of alcohol and hogs is the case of every other man, and the custom-house returns are made up of these individual cases.

I do not wish to take more time now. I seek official data for the purpose of showing just what our relations are with the people of the world, and then see if we can not find some remedy that will extend our trade rather than curtail it, see if we can not find some better way than to narrow down the very limited circle we have for our manufactures; and I trust that we shall find some remedy that will not deprive the men who have to export their unprotected goods—90 per cent. of them are agricultural goods, that are unprotected—of the right to trade for the goods they need on fair terms, and at the same time make it impossible for home consumers to buy what they want without paying double price to somebody here who is authorized by law to sell things not as good or more deleterious than those prohibited from abroad, under the delusion that we are thereby retaliating on some foreign government that has not treated us as we think it ought. That is all I care to say now.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I hope this resolution will pass with the amendment that I offered. I ask to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has offered an amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. But I desire to have the amendment I offered, which is the pending question, reported. Let the resolution be read as it will stand if amended as I propose.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is, in the second line of the resolution, after the word "into," to strike out "the expediency of" and insert in lieu thereof "and report to the Senate;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall detain the Senate but a very few minutes in reply to what has been said by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. The resolution, if amended as I think it desirable that it should be, would be to the effect that the Committee on Foreign Relations shall report legislation to the Senate for their consideration that will authorize the President of the United States to take such action as will protect the people of our country. In other words, I shall be frank to say that it means that the President shall be authorized to exclude such articles from those countries from importation here as he may deem of an unhealthful character.

I do not understand the effect of legislation of this kind, as represented by the Senator from Kentucky, to be injurious to ourselves. Whether or not France and Germany have been authorized in their action announcing decrees that prohibit the exportation from this country of pork or any other kind of goods is not the question. The question is, have they done so, and have they done so for the purpose of retaliating on this country? The Senator from Kentucky admits that proposition. He admits that it is that character of legislation, but at the same time that he claims that it is that character of legislation he denies the justice of legislation of a similar character on our part, because, as I understand him, he thinks it would be injurious to the producers of wine or whisky or something of that kind in this country. I can not understand what injury would be done to the people of this country by excluding goods that had been adulterated so that they were not considered healthful, or goods of any character unfit for use on account of the fact that they might be adulterated in such a way as would produce disease or disorder in the systems of our people.

Let me state the legislation I am for. I am in favor of giving the President power to exclude wines or any other articles from any foreign country which after an inspection are shown to be injurious in their use to our people on the very principle that France and Germany have excluded our pork—not that they are justified in doing so from their statements, because they are not true. It is not true in fact that our meats are diseased as represented; it is not true in fact that they are any more so than their own pork, but they are less so than the pork produced in those countries, and ours is the most healthful meat produced in the world, according to the reports of experts who have made the examination.

But the Senator says that if the President of the United States should appoint wine-growers as inspectors they would prove that all the wines imported from those countries were adulterated wines. That is going upon the presumption that the President of the United States would select persons who were interested in making a false report. I do not suppose that any one can presume that the President of the United States would do an act of that character, nor will any legislation in the direction suggested by this resolution bear upon its face anything of that kind as a desire on the part of the legislators or those having the administration of these laws in their hands. No one would desire anything of that kind; no one would desire to exclude goods of a pure character for the purpose of encouraging the production of wines or enhancing the value of wines grown in our country in competition with foreign wines. I do not know of any one who would desire anything of that kind; and it is not for that purpose that I have offered the amendment; but it is to show—and I think we ought to do so—that we have in this country sufficient courage at least to say to foreign countries that we will act in a manner just to ourselves and at the same time just to them by a fair examination of their products, and excluding such as are infected or such as are adulterated. If our country has not courage enough to protect itself in this particular, my judgment is that we fail in doing our duty toward the country and toward our constituents.

This is all I desire to say. I hope the resolution, as thus amended, will pass, so that it may be fairly considered by the committee. I do not wish to discuss the proposition at length or to bring to bear facts that I have in my possession in relation to it, for I prefer to wait until a report is made from the committee to the Senate of the United States that it may then come up for general discussion, and at that time I hope to be able to make some suggestions in regard to it based upon facts that we have and reports that we have which will carry some information. I hope the resolution will pass, for the purpose of giving, as I said, this committee an opportunity of making a thorough investigation, but at the same time I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky will be separated, or in other words that the questions will be divided, that the two resolutions may be acted upon separately by the committee so as not to detain them in reference to the investigation of the important matter that is now before the Senate. The matter suggested by the Senator from Kentucky will require much more time to investigate than the matter suggested by the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island, to which an amendment has been offered by myself. I hope that resolution will pass. I have no particular objection to the other, but I desire that they be passed separately, so that the questions involved will be investigated separately.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, one of the principal exports of the United States has been, as we believe, unjustly attacked, interfering seriously with the business of a very large portion of the people of the United States. It is proper that we should take some steps to inquire into this matter; and if, on inquiry, we find that things have been improperly done, retaliation, if it become necessary, should be resorted to. The matter has excited much attention; it is the one thing which is most prominently before the public; and I hope that the action of the committee will not be embarrassed by directing an inquiry into other matters which are not of such immediate importance, which are not now exciting any particular attention, and are of no more consequence now than they have been at any time during the last twenty years.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment I offered be read. I think there is no embarrassment about it. The committee can not make the first investigation without inquiry into the other things I suggest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BECK.

Mr. BECK. I have guarded that as carefully as possible, and at the same time seek to show that this is not new action, on the part of those people, and that we must act by the general laws. I do not desire delay; I want prompt action. I do not think the amendment will hurt the original resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to both inquiries, but I want them provided for separately, so that one shall not delay the other.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, the resolution now before the Senate is one of great importance to all our people. The resolution, as originally worded by the Senator from Rhode Island, to my mind is entirely unobjectionable. It calls for a proper investigation by the proper committee and for a report to the Senate. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky is one to which I have no objection. The information which will be laid before the Senate and before the country upon such an investigation will be very valuable, although I do not at all concur in the reasons which the honorable Senator from Kentucky gives for presenting his amendment. But the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Illinois, if I understand it aright, goes very much too far at the present moment. I think it is committing the Senate to a proposition to which it is not yet ready to give its consent. Perhaps I am mistaken in the scope and object of the amendment, but if I understand it rightly it is equivalent, if it shall be adopted, to declaring at this time that we should enter upon retaliatory legislation, and it is directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to speedily report such retaliatory measures to this body.

I agree substantially with all that the Senator from Illinois has stated in regard to the present condition of our foreign trade and in regard to what is believed to be the unjust exclusion of our meat products from Germany and France. But the executive department of this Government, through the State Department, is now engaged in diplomatic correspondence with both those countries in regard to this matter; and it seems to me that we are not yet prepared as the Senate and as a part of the executive in the matter of treaties to state to the country that we should absolutely enter upon retaliatory legislation. I do not think that the Senate of the United States should act hastily and inconsiderately upon this great question.

If I understand the present condition of the diplomatic correspondence upon this subject, it is briefly this: The German Government disclaims all idea of retaliation in the matter of her excluding our meat products from her country. She claims that our meat products are unhealthy. She bases her judgment upon many wild reports which are published in American newspapers. She also objects that we have no sort of Government inspection of our meats, and therefore that she can not tell whether they are healthy or unhealthy, and for that reason she objects to their introduction into her country. It seems to me that at this stage of the proceedings the Senate of the United States is not prepared to say to Germany that she is not honest in the position which she takes, or to say to Germany that it is a mere pretense upon her part, and therefore that we are immediately to enter into retaliatory measures,

The condition in France to-day is somewhat different. The original prohibition of the introduction of our meat products into France was a measure of the executive government, but as a result of our diplomatic correspondence and of the course of our minister there the executive department withdrew from that position and withdrew the prohibition and issued an order for the free introduction of American meats into France, and immediately the legislative department took up the matter, and the legislative department of France, by a bill or by a resolution, has again prohibited the introduction of our meats. We see, therefore, that in France to-day the inhibition of our meats is the act of the legislature and not of the executive, and in that particular direction I have no doubt that our committee would find that it might be necessary for our legislative department to at once take the matter in hand.

There will be submitted to this body in a few days—I think it is not yet quite ready—the entire diplomatic correspondence between our Government and Germany on this question, and also the correspondence between this Government and France upon this question. That has been asked for, and it will soon be here; and I believe that this is a matter of too great importance to us to be able to express an opinion upon it to-day. We have not the matter before us. I have no doubt but what there may be something of a desire to protect the growers of meats in Germany and in France in this prohibition of our meat products, but I do not think that we are prepared to officially declare that, and therefore I hope that the Senator from Illinois will either modify his amendment or withdraw it entirely, so that the question may be left substantially where the original resolution places it, that is to say, in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for their examination and for their report. Under the original resolution they can immediately report whether or not there should be any legislative action in their judgment; but I do not think that we are prepared to-day to charge that committee with the drafting of retaliatory measures. If we do that, it is tantamount to the adoption of a resolution that the United States should at once enter upon a legislative course of retaliation with these countries. If after a thorough examination of the matter the Foreign Relations Committee shall be persuaded and shall be convinced that the continued prohibition of our meat products in both these countries is of such a nature that it requires what may be termed retaliatory legislation on our part, then let us enter upon it after full knowledge and full consideration. I have no doubt that that committee will do its duty fully and fairly in this matter without any further instruction than the mere instruction implied in committing the subject to its care. There is no doubt that we may, if we shall see fit, in our legislative capacity enter upon retaliatory legislation, but let us do it after due consideration and after full and careful investigation. Let us do it in such a way that it cannot be charged that we have been trifling on so great a matter.

Mr. President, I will not go into any sort of discussion of what such legislation should be, further than to state what is the present condition of the laws upon some of these matters. The present tariff law of the United States prohibits the importation of live animals into this country at all, but it provides that the Executive, whenever he is satisfied that there is no disease and no danger of disease being imported into this country, may for the time being suspend that law, and that the importation of live cattle may be permitted, and to day this prohibition of the law is suspended toward nearly all countries, though it is less than two years ago since the prohibition was absolutely in force upon our Canadian border, and no cattle could be brought over; but the executive department became satisfied that the disease of cattle had been crushed out in Canada, and the prohibition was raised. It has also been raised in regard to cattle from England and Germany and France, and they are to-day brought in freely, the only requirement being that they shall be quarantined for a period of sixty or ninety days.

Undoubtedly it may be desirable for us to go further, and it may be desirable that we should protect the lives and health of our citizens by prohibiting the importation of any adulterated liquors or wines, and I have no doubt that if any retaliatory measures are entered upon we are very likely to go in that direction first. The Senator from Kentucky seems to think that any such legislation would be absurd and objectionable, but the Senator should not forget, and probably does not forget, that at the last session of this body we passed a law for the inspection of all teas, and under that law all the teas imported into this country are inspected by experts, and since that bill went into operation last spring many thousands of chests of tea have been rejected at the port of New York, and have been taken out of the country, being rejected because experts found that they were unhealthy. Undoubtedly that law has done very much to bring about a condition of affairs where only absolutely pure teas are imported into this country. It might not be unwise that without any regard to retaliation we should establish an inspection of all kinds of food products coming into this country in order to protect the health of our people; and in the matter of the adulteration of liquors and wines, you have only to go to the official records in France to find that investigations made by experts there show that more than 50 per cent. of all the wines and liquors produced in France are adulterated to a very great extent. How far that may be true in regard to the wines which are imported into this country I do not know, and therefore I am not prepared to speak in regard to it, but I simply have spoken of this prohibition of the importation of cattle as an illustration of how to proceed in this matter provided the Committee on Foreign Relations shall report to the Senate that some such retaliatory measures are necessary.

The amendment of the Senator from Illinois might be construed by the committee to go much further, and they might bring in under it bills of various kinds bills which should not properly come from that committee at all, and therefore I think it better that they should report what legislation is necessary, if they find any to be necessary, and that then the legislation of whatever character it may be should go to the proper committee. If it is to be a change of our tariff laws in regard to articles coming in from Germany and France, then of course it should go to the Committee on Finance; if it is to be legislation in regard to the examination of cattle and all our food products and their inspection, then certainly that should go to the Committee on Agriculture, which now has those two subjects under consideration, and will before long present bills to this body for carrying out those ideas.

The argument of the Senator from Kentucky, that this present action of Germany and France was retaliatory because we maintain a protective tariff against their industries, and that we could not hope for any trade with them unless we bought from them, unless, as he expressed it in common English, it was a matter of swap or exchange, is scarcely borne out by the figures, because we have a large trade with these countries now. The official records for the fiscal year ending June 30 last show that we are now buying of France more than we sell to her. The official figures are as follows: We exported to France last year of our domestic products of all kinds $55,965,191; we imported from France last year goods to the value of $97,989,164. In other words, we bought from France last year goods to the value of nearly or a little more than $40,000,000 worth beyond what we sold to France. So it seems to me that the cry that we can not expect to sell to a country unless we buy of her does not hold true in the case of France, because we are buying more from her than she buys from us, and that is to a certain extent due to the fact that she has during the past year excluded our meat products from her country. If she had admitted all our meat products into her country we should have sold to her perhaps very nearly as much in value as we have bought from her.

As to Germany, we exported domestic products to the value of $64,340,000; we bought from her of her products $57,377,000, there being very little difference in the trade of Germany and the United States; and as between France and ourselves we are buying much more than we sell to her; but I am entirely willing that all these differences should be brought out in this investigation which the Senator from Kentucky desires the Committee on Foreign Relations to make.

My point is simply this: that we are not prepared to-day, in my judgment, to say in a resolution that retaliatory measures are necessary. I think we have not sufficient information for that, and I think we should act wisely and considerately upon this question. Therefore I hope the Senator from Illinois, if his amendment bears the construction which I put upon it—and I think it is the right construction—will in some way modify it so that the resolution shall amount to an instruction to the Committee on Foreign Relations to inquire into this whole matter and to report to the Senate what, if any, legislation may be necessary, rather than instruct them to at once report bills to the Senate for the very purpose indicated. If the Senator from Illinois will consent to a modification of that amendment I shall be very glad to have him do so, and I do not see how any one in the Senate can object to it; but certainly, for one, I am not prepared to-day without the diplomatic correspondence before us, and without a careful consideration of the whole subject, to say that we should be justified in entering directly upon retaliatory legislation. Let us have the full facts, and I know of no committee which can give them to us so quickly as the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the trouble that there seems to be about this resolution is the failure on the part of Senators to understand what it means. The discussion against this resolution as I propose to amend it, by the Senator from New York, is wholly upon the ground that it requires the Committee on Foreign Relations to report retaliatory measures. The resolution requires no such thing, as I understand it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator read it?

Mr. LOGAN. I will, certainly, and I will give what I think it means. As I propose to amend it, it reads:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

Under this resolution the committee may report retaliatory measures, it is true, but it does not require them to report measures of that character. They might report a bill authorizing the President to appoint inspectors, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, to inspect all meats exported from this country to foreign countries, and requiring that a certificate of such inspection should go along with the cargo or the meats. That is one character of legislation they might report. So it merely comes to the point that the President shall by law be authorized in some way to protect our country against the action of foreign countries. How? If in the diplomatic correspondence the Governments of France and Germany say to our Government through our Secretary of State that we have no inspection, that no certificate of a Government officer who has inspected our meats goes with them, and therefore that they have no evidence of their being pure and sound, then to provide for an inspection would be one way of protecting our country against the action of those governments, and that may be the best mode of doing it.

The idea has grown out of what I said in my remarks, that I hoped, at least if the necessity arose—and I say so now—our country would have the courage to protect itself in all respects against the wrongs that foreign governments enacted against our right to export. I said that substantially, and I repeat it. But that is not in the resolution. I so amended the resolution, or tried so to amend it, that this committee should report legislation to the Senate for their consideration; but the character of the legislation is not indicated in the resolution except that it is to be of such a character as that the President shall be empowered under it to give our people protection. That is all. It does not bear upon its face the idea that the committee must report retaliatory measures. That grows out of the remarks I made in discussing the resolution, and certainly entirely out of those remarks.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I can only judge of what construction would be put upon this resolution by the construction which my mind puts upon it. To my mind the resolution as the Senator proposes to amend it is tantamount to declaring that retaliatory measures are now necessary with certain governments, and it instructs the Committee on Foreign Relations to determine what nations such retaliatory measures are necessary to protect ourselves against, and then to report that retaliatory legislation to this body. Now, in order to bring this before the Senate so that we may all understand it, I ask to have the original resolution read, and then that the substitute—because it amounts to a substitute—the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois be read.

Mr. LOGAN. I have it right here. I can read it as it was originally offered and as it will read if amended as I propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the resolution.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I hope the Chair will have the original resolution read and then the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The original resolution reads:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

In line 2, after the word "into," it is proposed to strike out "the expediency of" and insert "and report to the Senate;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I think I am amply borne out in my criticism by the reading. That amendment assumes another thing which the legislative department of this Government may not be willing to concede. It assumes that we are to pass such legislation as will put this whole matter into the hands of the Executive and give him power to say what goods or products of foreign countries shall be imported into the United States. It may be necessary to do that; we have already done it in the matter of the importation of live cattle. But what I object to is a decided expression at this time as to what shall be done. Let us have all the facts before us so that we can act intelligently and with due consideration, for certainly this is a very important matter, and we are all aware that it is already being treated diplomatically between the various governments; that there is constant correspondence going on between our State Department and France and Germany. Of course any action had here to-day, if it shall be unwise, may greatly complicate those negotiations.

Now I am prepared to say that I fully believe in and I shall be prepared to support any measure which may be called retaliatory or otherwise, if it shall be found before the end of this session that these objectionable prohibitions of our healthful meats are not removed by foreign governments. I am prepared to go as far as the Senator from Illinois in protecting our foreign trade in all those products; but I want it done in such a way that it can not be charged that we have shown undue haste or undue consideration of the dignity or the freedom of action of foreign governments with whom we have proper peace relations at the present time. We certainly at the present moment are not prepared to charge that all that Germany has said upon this matter in the way of her diplomatic correspondence is insincere. I believe that the prohibition of the German Government against the introduction of our meats is likely to be very much modified in a very short time, if not entirely removed; and I think I have good reason for saying as much as that. Therefore I think that when we commit this whole matter into the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations we shall have gone as far as we should go until we have had an investigation.

The Senator from Illinois has just intimated that the Foreign Relations Committee might not find it necessary to do anything more than to prepare bills providing for an inspection of all our products before they are exported abroad. As I have already stated, that entire subject is now under consideration by the Committee on Agriculture, where it properly belongs, and for one I should object to the Committee on Foreign Relations taking that measure out of the hands of the Committee on Agriculture, where it belongs, and I do not for a moment suppose that the Foreign Relations Committee desires to do anything of the kind. Therefore, if the Foreign Relations Committee shall find that legislation is necessary, let it report that fact to the Senate, and then let the legislation which may be necessary be prepared by the proper committee and presented to this body in the proper way.

For one I am not prepared to take any stronger ground upon that question to-day than such as I have indicated, and I believe that that is sufficient; I believe that will satisfy our people. I believe that the great mass of the farmers of this country do not expect that we are to make an exhibition of ourselves here by passing instanter and without consideration retaliatory measures upon Germany and France. Our treaty relations with both those countries are very important, and, as I have just shown you, the figures of our foreign commerce with them are very large, and for that reason I think it would be much better to leave the matter where the original resolution placed it. I still hope that the Senator from Illinois will agree with me upon that proposition, for I certainly do not desire to antagonize his views or the views of any of the Senators who represent the great meat-producing portions of our country, but I do not think that we ought to be called upon to-day to go any further than the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island calls for. If, however, the Senators upon this floor who represent the great West, and represent that portion of the country which produces and which sends abroad all these meat products, are willing to-day to put the Senate upon record by declaring that we must at once have retaliatory legislation, then I hope some of them will say so, and as one of the representatives from the East I will try and make the best of it; but I do hope the Senator will agree with me and that the matter may go to the committee, as it was originally proposed it should.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to discuss this matter any further, but I certainly tried to make myself understood. I may have been unfortunate, however, in making that a success, but I do not want to be placed before the country in an improper light in reference to this subject. From what has been said it might be inferred at least that I was trying to force legislation of a particular form on the Senate now. I have no desire of that kind. The only desire I have is that the committee shall act and report something to the Senate for its action. We are not bound by the report that may be made by that committee; we are not compelled to vote for any bill they may report; nor is the character of the bill described or the character of the remedy described in the resolution; but I will say in reference to this question, in reply to one remark of the Senator from New York, that I do believe that the Congress of the United States ought to pass a general law authorizing the President of the United States when Congress is not in session to protect this country against embargoes laid on our exports to foreign countries. The power ought to rest somewhere at all times in this country to lay an embargo upon imports from other countries where they deal unfairly with us, and to treat them as they treat us. I do believe in that doctrine, and always have believed in it, and I believe in it now. The power should be given; whether it will be exercised or not is a different question; but when the necessity arises for the exercising of that power it should be exercised, and not at any other time except when the necessity does arise. I would not wish this country to impose an embargo upon products from foreign countries merely to show its power or authority, but only to protect our interests when our interests are involved and the power was required to be exercised for that particular purpose.

So far as I am concerned I differ with the Senator's constructions of this resolution as I have proposed to amend it. He honestly believes it means one thing, and I think it means a different thing; therefore I do not agree with him. If the Senator disagrees with my amendment, that is one thing. I only think it requires action, and no particular character of action is indicated except to report something to the Senate that we may act upon; therefore I do not think it is going to throw anything hastily upon the Senate or the Congress of the United States, for we certainly have the whole session of Congress to consider this with other matters. But I do think it is important enough to have it brought before the Senate and the House too at some convenient season and at some time very soon. For that reason I say to the Senator from New York that I do honestly believe he is mistaken in his construction of my amendment. If I thought as he does in reference to it I would agree to withdraw it, but I do not believe so, and therefore I would rather have the vote.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have listened to this discussion with a great deal of interest, because when the matter goes to the Committee on Foreign Relations we shall have to examine the subject. I should like to ask a question. As I understand the Senator from Illinois the construction of the resolution as amended by him would be that the Committee on Foreign Relations would be expected to investigate the whole subject, and report what legislation is deemed necessary, either by bill or otherwise?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER, of California. They are to report a bill if they find legislation necessary, which bill may be referred to another committee afterward if it is deemed necessary.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly, that is exactly the meaning of my amendment; at least that is what I intended to mean by it. The committee will report after examining into this question such legislation as they think is competent and proper to give authority to the President to protect this country in the interest we have been speaking of, and that bill may be referred to any other committee, say the Agricultural Committee. I think in all probability that committee would be a very proper one for it to go to as it is examining this question, or it might be the Finance Committee that has to investigate the tariff question, and it would necessarily go there if that question was involved. It might go to any committee the Senate should designate, for consideration.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I supposed that was the intention the Senator had, and that is one objection I had to it. I want the Foreign Relations Committee to report what it finds to be the facts, and then the proper deductions. If they find that legislation of a certain kind shall be necessary, if they find that all we need do to have foreign nations, Germany and France, remove this restriction is to pass a proper inspection law, they will so report, but not report a bill for an inspection. They will simply report to the Senate what, if any, legislation is necessary, and then the appropriate committee will take up the subject and report the legislation. That is my idea. I do not believe the Foreign Relations Committee desires to go into the question of pleuro-pneumonia and the preparing of proper bills for the limiting of that evil or stamping it out; neither do I believe the Foreign Relations Committee is prepared or desires to go into the matter of perfecting legislation for the inspection of all our food products which are sent abroad. Let it report, as the original resolution intended it should do, what it finds to be the facts and the proper deductions therefrom. When that is done, then the Senate will be prepared to take up the whole question, discuss it, and refer the matter to the appropriate committee and instruct the appropriate committee to report by bill the needed legislation. That is the difference, and if the Senator from Illinois would so modify his amendment, I should be glad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment is that offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. VAN WYCK. My amendment was withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question will be on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to add to the resolution:

And the committee is further instructed to report what discriminations are made against exports from the United States by the tariff laws of the principal countries of Europe and America, especially France, Germany, Mexico, and Brazil, by reason of commercial or other special treaties or agreements with more favored nations, and to report the causes which led to such discriminations, the efforts, if any, that have been made to remove them, and what legislation, if any, is necessary to place the United States on an equal footing with the most favored nations. This investigation is not, however, to delay the action of the committee on the first branch of this resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY], as amended.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, as the resolution has been amended it takes from the Committee on Foreign Relations the inquiry into the expediency of legislation on this subject, but requires of that committee to report appropriate legislation of a retaliatory nature, as I understand it.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. How does it read?

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those Governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

It vests the power in the President to adopt these measures, and it gives him full authority. The Committee on Foreign Relations is required to report a law giving to the President and vesting in the President a discretion which has been taken from the Committee on Foreign Relations in reference to the whole subject.

I am in favor of maintaining the proper relations of this Government with all foreign powers; but when retaliatory measures become absolutely necessary for the purpose of vindicating the rights of this country, such legislation is entirely justifiable and proper. But is it not a little dangerous for us to strike in the dark, to pass legislation that shall enable the Executive or any other officer of this Government at his discretion to adopt the measures which may be deemed necessary to vindicate the rights of the country against foreign powers?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me a word. There is no such object in the resolution. It is in the discretion of the Committee on Foreign Relations to report such legislation as they think will enable the President to do this, not as the President may think but as the Senate shall think proper afterward in voting.

Mr. SAULSBURY. "Such legislation as shall enable the Executive."

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the committee reports that kind of legislation and it is adopted, will not the President of the United States have the whole matter in his control whether or not he will exercise the power which is conferred on him?

Mr. LOGAN. It depends entirely on the character of the legislation reported. The committee may report a bill to the Senate merely authorizing inspectors to inspect our meats before they go abroad, and authorizing the President to appoint those inspectors, which would put into his hands the appointing of them and the direction of them about the inspection. It may be that character of legislation. The resolution does not require retaliatory legislation. It is merely for the judgment of the committee to report such legislation as they deem proper to protect our people, and then the Senate take it into consideration, and they amend it or do what they please with it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I differ somewhat with the Senator from Illinois in his construction of the resolution. Still I desire now only to say that while retaliatory measures may become necessary in order to vindicate the rights of this country in its relations with foreign governments, it is always legislation of a delicate character, and it ought to be cautiously and carefully examined before it is adopted. I am in favor myself of fair, equal justice between this Government and other governments, and I am willing to adopt any measure that may become necessary to vindicate the rights of this Government and of the people of this country; but we ought to deal with such a question cautiously and carefully before we adopt any measure that invests in the President of the United States such a discretion.

This is all I desire to say. I shall not oppose the resolution, but at the same time we ought to be cautious in the matter.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, under the rules the Calendar of General Orders is in order. The unfinished business is the bill providing a civil government for the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. MAXEY. I believe this resolution has reached a point where we can dispose of it in fifteen or twenty minutes, and I think it is very important to dispose of it. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the resolution be proceeded with for twenty minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not interpose an objection if the Senator will put a limitation on the extension.

Mr. MAXEY. I have put the limitation of twenty minutes. The proposition I made was to proceed for twenty minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not object to that, though I understood the Senator to say that it would probably be completed within twenty minutes. If there is unanimous consent that it may proceed for twenty minutes, I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that further consideration may be had of the resolution which has been under discussion, not exceeding twenty minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "enable the Executive to," so that the committee will be instructed to report such legislation as shall be necessary to protect our interests. That I think will remove one objection that has been urged against the adoption of this resolution, and leave the whole subject to the legislation of Congress rather than to the discretion of the Executive. I understand that the Senator from Illinois has no objection to this amendment, and I hope it may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the words "enable the Executive to."

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Texas desires to speak on this subject, I wish to give notice of one other amendment. After this shall have been acted upon I will move to strike out "healthful," before "meats," so that the whole subject may come before the committee.

Mr. MAXEY. That was the exact point I wanted to make, and I hope that amendment will be offered.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that either.

Mr. MAXEY. I only desire to make a very few observations. I approach with a great deal of caution and some timidity any resolution of a retaliatory character. All retaliatory legislation is in the nature of opposition to amity. This resolution, as it was originally presented, declares:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

That assumes upon its face that there are governments which do prohibit the importation of healthful meats. Right there we raise an issue of veracity with France and Germany, because they insist they do not prohibit the importation of healthful meats, but of unhealthful meats. We assume it to be true that healthful meats are excluded or prohibited from importation into certain countries. That is a question of fact, and upon that question of fact an issue is joined.

If the Governments of France and Germany exclude meats because they are unhealthy, they have an undoubted right to do it, and it is beyond all question their duty to do it if that be true. If that is not true and we believe there is a mistake about it, if we believe there is an error about it and that they have been misled, then we should not begin with an assumption that they are falsely placing restrictions upon the importation on a ground which they know does not exist; so that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to strike out "healthful" I think is a very correct amendment.

When you put the doctrine of retaliation in action, that doctrine necessarily can bring back upon us as much retaliation as we send out. In the early Congresses, when the British Government was very oppressive, as we thought, especially in the matter of the shipping of American products to the West India Islands, it was deemed by our Congresses proper to pass retaliatory measures. There was a fact of the greatest importance that you could not ship certain products in vessels from your State, sir [Mr. FRYE in the chair], and exchange them for molasses or other West India products. That being the fact, our Congresses thought it proper to engage in retaliatory measures; but here, without any nation having assumed to keep healthful meats out of market or expressed a desire to keep out healthful meats, when the allegation is simply that they seek to protect the health of their people by excluding unhealthful meats, we assume that it is not true, and on the basis of that we start in upon retaliatory legislation. It occurs to me that that is an unwise proceeding.

All that I desired to say was that the Committee on Foreign Relations should go into this matter with great caution, with great deliberation, and know the ground on which they stand, because I say that if we start in with a retaliatory measure it may land on wheat, it may land on cotton, we cannot tell where it will land. While I would protect the exports of the United States as vigilantly as any man in this body, I want to know the ground on which I stand before I see proper to charge that a nation has been falsifying in its action in order to exclude American products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to strike out the words "enable the Executive to."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Now I move to strike out the word "healthful," before "meats."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the second amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, to strike out the word "healthful" before "meats."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be reported as it stands.

The resolution as amended was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate such legislation as shall protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of meats from the United States. And the committee is further instructed to report what discriminations are made against exports from the United States by the tariff laws of the principal countries of Europe and America, especially France, Germany, Mexico, and Brazil, by reason of commercial or other special treaties or agreements with more favored nations, and to report the causes which led to such discriminations, the efforts, if any, that have been made to remove them, and what legislation, if any, is necessary to place the United States on an equal footing with the most favored nations. This investigation is not, however, to delay the action of the committee on the first branch of this resolution.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (S. 153) providing a civil government for the Territory of Alaska. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment pending is the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, section 8, line 9, after the word "occupation," the amendment is to insert "or now claimed by them;" so as to read:

Provided, That the Indians or other persons in said district shall not be disturbed in the possession of any lands actually in their use or occupation or now claimed by them, but the terms under which such persons may acquire title to such lands is reserved for future legislation by Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. Are the committee amendments disposed of?

Mr. HARRISON. The agreement was that that amendment should be passed over until the committee amendments had been disposed of and we got through the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. That is the speech which I rose to make. I was about to inquire if the committee amendments had been disposed of.

Mr. HARRISON. They have not been. The Secretary should go on with the bill where we left off the reading yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the Committee on Territories will be proceeded with.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Territories propose, in section 9, line 12, to strike out "said;" in line 13, to strike out "said" and "five hundred;" in line 14, to strike out "said" and "five hundred;" in line 15, to strike out "said" where it occurs twice; in line 17, to strike out "said;" in line 19, after "Oregon," to insert "and such fees for recording instruments as are allowed by the laws of Oregon for similar services;" in line 22, to strike out "said;" in line 25, to strike out "said" and "of said deputies;" in line 35, to strike out "said" where it occurs twice; and in line 38, to strike out "aforesaid;" so that the section as amended will read:

SEC. 9. That the governor, attorney, judge, marshal, clerk, and commissioners provided for in this act shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their respective offices for the term of four years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified. They shall severally receive the fees of office established by law for the several offices the duties of which have been hereby conferred upon them as the same are determined and allowed in respect of similar offices under the laws of the United States, and in addition thereto shall receive respectively the following salaries: The governor, the sum of $3,000; the attorney, the sum of $2,000; the marshal, the sum of $2,000; the judge, the sum of $3,000; and the clerk, the sum of $2,000, payable to them quarterly from the Treasury of the United States. The commissioners shall receive the usual fees of United States commissioners and of justices of the peace for Oregon, and such fees for recording instruments as are allowed by the laws of Oregon for similar services, and in addition a salary of $500 each. The deputy marshals, in addition to the usual fees as deputy United States marshals and of constables in Oregon, shall receive each a salary of $500, which salaries shall also be payable quarterly out of the Treasury of the United States. Each of said officials shall, before entering on the duties of his office, take and subscribe an oath that he will faithfully execute the same, which said oath may be taken before the judge of said district or any United States district or circuit judge. And the said clerk shall execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, in the penalty of $10,000 for the faithful performance of his duties, and file the same with the Secretary of the Treasury before entering on the duties of his office; and the commissioners shall each execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, in the penalty of $3,000 for the faithful performance of their duties, and file the same with the clerk before entering on the duties of their office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 10, to strike out "so many and so much of;" in line 4, to strike out "of the same;" in line 10, to strike out "hereby created;" and in line 12, to strike out "said;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That any of the public buildings in said district not required for the customs service or military purposes shall be used for court-rooms and offices of the civil government; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to instruct and authorize the custodian of said buildings forthwith to make such repairs to the jail in the town of Sitka, in said district, as will render it suitable for a jail and penitentiary for the purposes of the civil government hereby provided, and to surrender to the marshal the custody of said jail and the other public buildings, or such parts of said buildings as may be selected for court-rooms, offices, and officials.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, after "district," in line 6, to strike out the following words:

And so much of the general laws of the State of Oregon as is applicable to justices of the peace, constables, jails, jailors, sheriffs, and keepers of jails, as also those of said State which relate to crimes and the punishment thereof, and the law and practice governing testamentary and probate proceedings, and the general practice in civil cases, appeals, writs of review, and bail, so far as the same are applicable, and deliver to the attorney of the United States for said district a sufficient number of the same for the purposes of this act.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And shall furnish for the use of the officers of said Territory so many copies as may be needed of the laws of Oregon applicable to said district.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That the Attorney-General is directed forthwith to compile and cause to be printed in the English language, in pamphlet form, so much of the general laws of the United States as is applicable to the duties of the governor, attorney, judge, clerk, marshals, and commissioners appointed for said district, and shall furnish for the use of the officers of said Territory so many copies as may be needed of the laws of Oregon applicable to said district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after section 12:

SEC. 13. That there shall be established in said Territory, at such places as may be designated by the Commissioner of Education, free public schools for the instruction of children and youths of proper age in the common elementary branches of study and in industrial pursuits. Such schools shall be open to all persons of the proper age, without regard to race, under such rules as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Education. Where free schools have already been established by private benevolence or by any religious society the Commissioner of Education may, with the consent of such persons or society, adopt said schools as a part of the school system of said district, on such terms as may be agreed upon. The Commissioner of Education shall designate one of the best qualified teachers of said schools as superintendent of education, who shall have a general oversight and direction of all said schools, and shall annually report to the governor. All of the powers hereby given to the Commissioner of Education shall be executed subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana who has charge of this bill whether, under the general provision extending the statutes of Oregon over the Territory of Alaska, it is intended to provide any means of collecting taxes or that any taxes shall be collected for any purpose whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. My response is in the negative. We have not provided any scheme for the assessment or collection of taxes within this district. We did not believe it was necessary in this preliminary bill to make such a provision. It will doubtless come in time with more settlements and the accumulation of property there; but as no legislature is given to the district we made no provision for the assessment and collection of taxes.

Mr. PLUMB. There are, as I understand, about four hundred people in Alaska other than Indians. They are there for purposes of profit, and in fact there is said to be some very profitable business carried on there. I understand they have provided schools at their own expense, as is entirely proper, and they are now being carried on; and I think it will be going a great way to select this community above all the other communities of the United States and educate their children at the expense of the general Treasury without imposing on them any taxes whatever. Not only is this done, but all the expense of the Government over them, that is to protect them in their acquisitions, is also borne out of the Federal Treasury.

If the Senator from Indiana will adapt his amendment to the Indians who are there and who are the proper subjects of national charity, I shall have no objection to it, but I should like to hear some reason why the people in the employ of the Alaska Seal Company, or people who are there for their gain, should, by reason of their having voluntarily gone there and become engaged in these profitable pursuits, have all the expenses of the Government over them paid by the General Government and their children educated in the same way besides.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the situation of this Territory or district is a peculiar one. The population there is so sparse and so scattered that the committee were of opinion that we ought not to attempt to give them a full Territorial organization. We have not provided for any legislative body in which they might be represented and which might provide for an assessment of the property of the citizens within the district and the levying and collection of taxes for any purpose.

Now, while it may be that there are some there who should in justice and strictness be required to contribute to the educational fund which is to be expended under this bill for the education of all children, without reference to race, in the Territory, while that may be true technically, yet there is no way that I can see or that the committee could see by which we could reach that end. We can not exclude them from the benefit of school privileges and limit the provisions of this bill to Indian children alone. That would practically be leaving them without any possibility of securing for the children of the American residents in this Territory any access to public schools unless they could combine among themselves and by voluntary contributions organize schools; and they are so scattered and in the main of such limited means that it would be impossible to secure education for their children by any such voluntary effort.

So, then, while the Senator from Kansas is strictly right in saying that the burden of the education of the children of the white people there who are residents should at least be contributed to by an assessment of taxes upon the property possessed in the Territory by the parents of such children, yet I submit that in this preliminary skeleton organization of the Territory and in the present condition of things there it is scarcely worth while on the one hand to exclude these people from the educational advantages of this bill, or on the other hand to introduce the necessary machinery in order to collect taxes from the white residents there to maintain schools for them.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me that the white people who are up there can be left to exercise their privilege of schooling their own children in their own way and out of their own money. I think it is entirely unnecessary to make this provision for the schooling of the children of the white people who are there. If they are scattered, as the Senator from Indiana says they are, then of course the expense of the education is just that much greater to be paid out of the public Treasury. I will venture this prophecy at all events, that if this section is literally carried out there will be a great many schools in a great many places in Alaska where they would not be considered necessary in any other portion of the habitable globe. This provision is a very wide one:

That there shall be established in said Territory, at such places as may be designated by the Commissioner of Education, free public schools for the instruction of children and youths of proper age in the common elementary branches of study and in industrial pursuits.

There is no limitation there that there shall be one school to so many children.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Kansas will allow me to suggest that the limitation will be found in the appropriation.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think there is any such limitation. Schools are to be established, and then we may be called upon to pay for them afterward. If the Senator had been observant during the last ten or fifteen years of his life I think he would have ascertained that that is a very common way of doing things.

In the next place these "schools shall be open to all persons of the proper age without regard to race," and the Senator says that includes the Indian children. Then we are providing for the education not only of all the white children in Alaska but the education of all the Indian children in Alaska. Mr. President, we have not done that with any other tribe of Indians under our jurisdiction. If we are to carry out the principle which is here established, what are we to do with the fifty thousand Indian children this side of the Rocky Mountains, and who have been heretofore very imperfectly provided for if this is to be the scale the Government is to adopt with reference to their education?

It seems to me that this section opens up a door which it will require a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars to close, that we are setting up there, away from any reasonable control or supervision; a system which is going to be expensive, not only unjustly expensive, but which is going to be expensive beyond any chance that we have of results to flow from the expenditure. I have no objection to a reasonable appropriation for the purpose of establishing schools for the Indians. I do object, however, that the children of white people up there, who are not to be taxed, but for whose benefit this government is to be provided, shall also have their schools paid for out of the public Treasury.

In the next place this bill cuts off the exercise of benevolence in that Territory. Under the operation of the very motive which I have spoken of as applicable to the white people up there desirous of educating their children, schools have already been established which this bill recognizes, but instead of recognizing them for the purpose of keeping them there in the position in which they now are, it recognizes them for the purpose of extirpating them. They are to be free schools—no longer maintained by benevolence; no longer maintained by the contribution of those whose children have the advantage of them. But the Government steps in and says, "We will not have any of these free schools kept up any longer by the contributions of people who are making money by their residence there, but we propose to take them away from them nilly willy, without their consent;" or, if not without their consent, at all events it will be with a consent easily obtained, and put a burden, which now falls on the people of that Territory for the education of their own children, on the Treasury of the United States.

The people up there are satisfied. I venture to say there has not been a white resident of the Territory of Alaska who has ever asked for one dollar of appropriation to educate his children. They have gone there like sensible, prudent men, being relieved from all the other burdens of government, and have been perfectly willing to educate their own children at their own expense; and yet we come in here, according to the terms of this amendment, and propose to take away from them that obligation and to substitute for it the obligation of the Government of the United States to provide an education for their children; and in addition to that we provide that their schools shall be recognized and carried into the system of public schools provided for by this bill.

This provision, as I said, is too wide, it is too ample, too expensive, too loose, and will lead to nothing but expense and trouble and annoyance. I therefore hope that this amendment in its present terms will not be adopted.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, if I were not in favor of the unification of this continent under American dominion, I should be willing to relinquish Alaska to any power that would undertake to carry on its government and provide for its future welfare. But the Monroe doctrine is written on the map; that is our first lesson in geography, and "manifest destiny" indicates that our northern shore is to be washed by the Polar Sea, and that our southern boundary will be the interoceanic canal that connects the Atlantic and Pacific.

Aside from this idea, Mr. President, I regard Alaska as the most worthless territorial acquisition with which any government was ever afflicted; and what compensation, other than the gratification of the American idea, we have received for the $7,000,000 that we paid for it I am as yet without information. Separated from us by a dangerous and stormy sea, over which a voyage of many days must be taken to reach its nearest port, its gloomy and inhospitable shores are secluded by the conditions of its climate for many months from approach. Its mountains are said to abound in the precious metals; but so far as examination has extended this claim is found to be utterly without foundation. It is alleged that its mountains are clothed with timber, that fur-bearing animals frequent the islands along its coast, and that fish are abundant in its streams; but hitherto these temptations have sufficed only to attract to that country a wandering and nomadic population of not to exceed four or five hundred adventurers, who remain there during the brief and hot summer, and then disappear when winter comes.

I suppose that if there are twenty-five children of school age in Alaska at this time of European descent it would be surprising to the enumerator of the census. It is claimed that the white population at this time is about four hundred, consisting, I suppose, very largely of the employés of the Seal Company and of the fisheries that carry on their enterprises there during two or three months of the year. That class of people, if they migrate, do so only temporarily, and do not carry their families with them; and it is very doubtful whether there are any native-born children in Alaska at the present time other than those of Indian ancestry; so that if there are four hundred white people in Alaska at this time, I should say that it would be surprising if there were twenty-five children of the school age. The Senator from Indiana who has reported this bill leaves us without information on this subject, and calls upon us, without advising us whether there is a single child of Caucasian blood within those limits who has not been carried there with the intention of being removed as soon as its parents go away, to vote to introduce at an enormous expense a system of education under governmental instruction that is to endure for all coming time.

He says that the limitation upon this system will be the appropriation that may be made to support it. But if the Commissioner of Education, under this amendment offered by the committee, in search of objects over which his sensibilities can weep and his philanthropy can expand, goes to Alaska and introduces this system of common schools, establishing one institution of learning at Kodiac, a seminary at Wrangel, an academy at Sitka, and a college at the other point that has been named, the title of which I forget, what will remain for Congress to do under this absolute authority conferred upon him by this act except to make the appropriations to carry them on?

I think we have gone far enough when we have provided for the extension of a system of laws over this wandering and nomadic population in Alaska, attracted there by the fisheries and by the fur trade, and enabled them to have a tribunal in which their wrongs can be redressed and their rights can be enforced. I am as much in favor of the education of the young as any man can be upon this floor; but it appears to me that this amendment of the Senator from Indiana is absolutely without foundation, as we are without information upon which to base our action upon it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Indiana to say a while ago that the reason why nothing was proposed by the committee for the collection of a revenue in this Territory was because it would necessarily involve the inauguration there of a legislative system of machinery. Now, for one, I do not think that that is a reasonable excuse. I am one of those who believe that the power of this Government over the Territories is precisely what it is over the District of Columbia, and that there is no necessity whatever for the institution of a legislative power in the Territory in order to inaugurate a system of reasonable revenue within it to meet some of these expenses. Why, sir, it is a remarkable anomaly under our system to find a single individual living anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States who contributes nothing toward the support of the Government. I asked the Senator yesterday if the laws of the United States were extended into that country. He hesitated upon the subject, and well he might, because I find by this bill, which he reported, that, while an oath is required to be taken by the officers provided for in this bill, it violates the Constitution of the United States in the important particular of not requiring one of these officers to take an oath to support the fundamental law of the Union. It is a most marked omission. Each one of the officers, whose salaries are to be paid by this Government, appropriated by this body and the other House, when it comes to the oath of office he has to take, is not required to take an oath to support the Constitution or the laws of the United States. Why was this omission? Where is there any authority for the oath provided for in this bill—an oath simply to discharge the powers of the office, as I understand. Of course, if the Constitution and laws of the United States have no force or operation in the Territories, it would be a work of supererogation to require any officer there to take an oath to support the Constitution, but he ought to be required to support the laws of Oregon, as it is proposed to carry them into this Territory.

Now, sir, there is no difficulty in the world about providing a reasonable system of revenue under the authority of this Government if the people in this Territory are in a condition to bear it, because we have ample legislative power to establish a revenue system. If not, we have no authority to pass this bill. Therefore I think the argument of the Senator fails when he says it would involve the establishment of cumbrous machinery to provide any revenue system. I do not know what property is there, but this bill goes on to provide for a system of government that presupposes very extensive property interests. Here you have a district judge at a salary of $3,000 a year; a governor, a clerk, a marshal, four commissioners, and a lot of constables. I never heard of a constable under the authority of the United States before, but they are provided for in this bill. All this presupposes the existence of property there, and if there is property there and people capable of holding it, they ought to be made to contribute toward the expense, and there is authority in the legislative branch of the United States Government to impose it, without there being a Legislature there, which it seems it is not considered proper at this time to provide for.

This is a most remarkable bill, because I do not think there is anything like it in our annals. I am not sure but it would be just as well to leave the people of the Territory in the condition they are in than to institute a measure of this kind. In all the Territorial bills hitherto passed by Congress provision was made for a legislative establishment; that is always the chief want of a people in a territorial condition, to have some authority near by them capable and competent to look into their wants, so as to legislate for them. Mere executive officers are of no consequence unless they have something to execute. But I understand the laws of the United States are not in force in this Territory, nor the Constitution of the United States, but the whole code of Oregon is carried in there by the force of this bill, while the laws of the United States are carefully excluded. I think it would be wise—I make this suggestion to the Senator who has the bill in charge—to follow in this case the course that has been followed in nearly all analogous cases, that the Constitution and laws of the United States not locally inapplicable to this Territory should have full force and operation within its borders, and I think that what few people are there are entitled to that. I would call the Senator's attention to the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Russia, under which Alaska was acquired. in support of that view. This treaty, following the example of other treaties under which territory was acquired by the United States, provides for the rights of the inhabitants of that Territory. The third article goes on to declare:

> The inhabitants of the ceded territory, according to their choice, reserving their natural allegiance, may return to Russia within three years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they, with the exception of uncivilized native tribes—> they, with the exception of uncivilized native tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Mark you this language—

I do not know how many of these Russian subjects remained there after the ratification of this treaty, but I say that every subject of Russia who made the election to remain in that territory after the ratification of this treaty is entitled to the protection and the benefits of the Constitution of the United States, because how can a person be in any respect a citizen of the United States when he has not a single security under the organic law, and still I will take it as admitted from the other side that the Constitution of the United States has no force or operation in that Territory whatever, and that the officers proposed to be created are not required even to take an oath to support the Constitution. They can carry on a despotic system there, do pretty much what they please, without regard to conscience or to law.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, section 1891 of the Revised Statutes carries the Constitution and all the laws of the United States into organized Territories and Territories that shall be organized. The committee that had this bill in charge, in view of this section of the Statutes, did not deem it necessary to put in an express provision that "the Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable" shall be carried into this Territory, because they are there under that section as soon as we organize the Territory. I believe that answers the statement made by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think this is a little evasion of that. I do not think it is plain that this is to be an organized Territory. It is a judicial district.

Mr. GARLAND. No, it is not an evasion at all. When the word "organized" is used there, it does not mean organized in a particular way, but it means organized in any way Congress shall think proper. There is no law making it obligatory on Congress to organize the government of a Territory with a governor and legislature. They can do it as they think proper. When Alaska becomes organized under this bill, or any other bill that Congress may pass, the Constitution and laws of the United States are carried by section 1891 into that Territory and become operative there. There can not be any doubt about that. So I think that is a response to the statement made by the Senator from Florida.

I have somewhat shared the same feelings which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] who last addressed the Senate expressed in reference to the abandonment of Alaska. I have never been satisfied in my mind exactly what we wanted with it and why the necessity of purchasing it, but we did buy it, and now the question is, what shall we do with it? This bill attempts to make some provision in the way of putting that Territory in some organized shape. The bill reported is not a usual bill; it is not a bill going the full length of the Territorial governments as we understand them, having a Delegate for instance in Congress; but it is a bill providing for the exigencies as they now exist there as the committee think, getting the Territory into some shape, looking to a better and more thorough and more perfect form of government after a while.

Now, to come to the question suggested by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] who first addressed the Senate, I agree with him that this section 13 is not a necessity to the bill. It was suggested to the committee and discussed by the committee in view of the anomalous condition of that country, and, in fact, the somewhat anomalous form of government we are compelled in the first instance to provide for it; and it was thought best to put in some provision in reference to education in that Territory. There is one restriction in this section that failed to attract the attention of the Senator from Kansas, I think, or at least he did not allude to it. Independent of the authority given to the Commissioner of Education, the orders, the regulations established by him are to be under the supervision and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, who has other very definite powers conferred upon him also in reference to this Territory.

Now, while I think the section is not an absolute necessity to this bill, yet it had better be incorporated here, because we have a restriction, and, as was said by the Senator from Indiana, the limit can be prescribed when we come to make the appropriation. Under that and under the restriction as to the Commissioner of Education and the Secretary of the Interior, it seems to me by all the analogies in cases of this sort we have thrown every restriction about it that we can. I am not afraid that this is going to be a precedent for the Government to educate the children of the country; and if it should become a precedent for that, so far as I am concerned I will not be opposed to it. A good deal can be said upon that subject.

I think, though I admit it is not an absolute necessity to the Territorial organization of that Territory, that we should establish these provisions, and they are under restrictions sufficient by being put under the Commissioner of Education and the Secretary of the Interior. It was thought best by the committee to do that, while of course the bill might be perfect so far as the Territorial government is concerned without the section.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is not the constitutional question raised by the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. However weighty it might be in a proper forum, I do not think that we have occasion now to trouble ourselves with it. I think very much the same with the question raised by the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS]. Whether it was wise in the beginning for us to acquire that Territory is not the question for us to determine in considering this bill.

My views in reference to the original acquisition of the Territory were at the time it was acquired very much like those expressed by the Senator from Kansas to-day. I was in the House of Representatives and called upon to vote the money that purchased Alaska. For the reasons so much better urged to-day than any one urged them then I could not give my vote for it; but the constitutional majority of the Senate ratified that treaty, and the constitutional majority of both Houses of Congress appropriated the money, and Alaska became ours.

It was not the mere territory, which is covered with mists and clouds and uncertainty and indefiniteness, that we acquired by that treaty, but we accepted obligations, expressed as well as implied. The express obligations were that we should take upon us the care and protection not only of all the people then residing there but of all who should go there under our flag. We expressly stipulated that so far as they were civilized people and chose to remain there, they should be treated in all respects as citizens of the United States; and such measure as we meted out to our own citizens here, and had been meting out to them up to that time, we stipulated that we should mete out to those citizens; but as to the great body of them, larger or smaller (I do not know at this distance of time, twenty years, any more than I did then how large that body is), we stipulated that we should treat them as we do others in the United States of like character.

We have disregarded up to this time all our implied and expressed obligations to those people, all those obligations which we were bound to regard when we took that vast territory and made it a part of our domain on our western borders, and we have let it drift, content only to take into our Treasury from a single source of revenue annually an amount just about equal to the interest upon the original purchase, gathering into our Treasury that amount yearly and yet forgetting that there was this large body of territory open to all our people for the exercise of their enterprise and the investment of their capital, and that there were multiplying year by year in that section of country a body of uncivilized people upon our border coming upon us in some time to come, how near we could not tell, as an ignorant, uneducated mass of people whom we should perhaps be obliged to support as we are obliged to-day to support those of a kindred class here in our midst.

It is quite time that we considered what our duty to that Territory is, and enlightened, comprehensive, what are the considerations by which we should address ourselves to this subject, and not count it by a few dollars and cents. Underneath it all lies the question whether those people over whom we have extended the Constitution and laws and flag of the country shall be educated enough to understand the institutions under which they live and the laws they are called upon to obey. That is the question which we ought to answer, and which I believe the Senate are ready to answer and to furnish the means to answer, provided they can know that the money which they appropriate will be wisely and properly expended. Whether it will bring back fruit or whether it will be wasted and cast into the sea, is the only question in my mind.

For one, I am prepared to appropriate money just so far, and I will go no farther, as I can be convinced that it will be wisely and economically expended, bringing back in the effect it may have upon that people in elevating and making them better citizens of the United States, if I may not be permitted to use the word "subjects;" for every single one of them, who can be brought up in intellectual capacity to understand the value of the institutions under which we live is an actual donation of so much wealth to the nation itself. Otherwise, left to waste his intellect and his powers and his capacity, he becomes, instead of a useful citizen of the United States, more than a dead weight upon the body politic and an actual sore, a corrupting influence in our institutions. We should make haste to avail ourselves, if I may use the expression, of this raw material out of which it is possible for us to make valuable citizens of the United States.

I somewhat sympathize with the Senator from Kansas on my left [Mr. PLUMB] as to the phraseology with which this section is couched. I do not like to see, with my present information, just one fixed method established by law through which whatever money we shall expend is to be expended. It is true that it is to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, but in the phraseology of the section it is to be expended only in the establishment of a particular kind of free schools and the building of school-houses. That may be wise, but it may not be wise also. I have no information whether $25,000, or $50,000, or $10,000 can best and most wisely be expended as in the particular manner specified in the section. As these are, like the Indians of this country, under the Secretary of the Interior, who is carrying on with them what seems to me now to be a very wise and enlightened system of education, enlarging it from time to time and bringing within its influence more and more each year the children of the different tribes of Indians in this country with a wisdom which we do not even criticise here, why not extend the system he is thus carrying on to the Indians of Alaska and put in his hands what we may think a sufficient sum of money, and permit him to expend that as he does the $600,000 which we appropriate now each year for the education of the Indians within our borders? If after investigating all the facts and the coming interests, with the knowledge which we may not have, he may think it wise to inaugurate at once a system of free schools, as it is called in this proposed statute, or build school-houses upon any extensive plan, I am willing to furnish him with sufficient money for that purpose; but I would rather put a limited sum into his hands and leave it discretionary with him how to expend that money.

We appropriated some time since, I do not know now how many years ago, $25,000 for education in Alaska, and not a dollar of it has been expended. I am told it has not been expended because the Secretary of the Interior was unable to find wise methods at that time by which he could expend it. I think he knows more about that Territory now. We all know more about it to day, and are every day knowing more and more about it. A proper appropriation of money put in his hands for the general purposes of the education of those people would be wisely and economically expended, and better expended than if we tied it down to any particular mode of doing it.

Therefore, instead of the criticism made by the Senator from Kansas that this is too large and too broad I would make it more so. I would not impose upon the Secretary of the Interior the necessity which this proposed statute imposes, of expending whatever money we spend in free schools and free school-houses, but I would put a proper sum into his hands to expend in that way which seems to him most wise and expedient for the beneficent purposes for which it is appropriated.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 43 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. HARRISON. I give notice that to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to conclude the consideration of the bill providing a civil government for the Territory of Alaska.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 74) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands, and to secure to the State of Colorado the benefit of the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts;" which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 22, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

READING OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I move, by unanimous consent, in the reading of the Journal that that portion which relates to the formal introduction of and reference of bills and joint resolutions be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The remaining portion of the Journal was then read and approved.

H. A. OLCOTT.

Mr. EATON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That Henry A. Olcott be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $3.60 per day for services as messenger in the office of the Clerk of the House, to be assigned to duty in the House library, until otherwise ordered by the House.

WILLIAM H. MILAM.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3927) granting a pension to William H. Milam; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM R. GIBSON.

Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3928) for the relief of William R. Gibson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a personal explanation. Yesterday, when the vote was taken on the resolution of the gentlemen from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in relation to the public lands, I was unavoidably absent. If I had been present, I would have voted in favor of the resolution.

PRINTING OF DIGEST.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution which I send up to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound, under the direction of the Journal Clerk, 250 copies of the Digest for the present session, for the use of committees of the House and officers of the two Houses and heads of Departments and bureaus.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think all these measures should go the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COX, of New York. The Committee on Printing takes cognizance only of matters where the printing is over $500. This will cost $107. The work is already stereotyped, and there is a necessity members and officers should have the copies which are here provided for. It is the usual resolution, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I retain the motion to object. I wish simply to say that every gentleman must see how enormous this item of printing and binding has become, and I think the whole subject should be referred to that committee of the House having jurisdiction of it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman consent to its reference?

Mr. COX, of New York. If the gentleman from Indiana objects, of course I can not help it. Let it be referred.

The resolution was received, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent to present the following preamble and resolution for action at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the interests of the American agriculturists and dairymen are greatly and unjustly injured by the manufacture, sale, and use of oleomargarine, butterine, suine, and imitation, artificial, and adulterated butters of different kinds, and of adulterated and imitation compounds and mixtures sold and consumed as dairy products; and

Whereas it is alleged that fat and oils of hogs and cattle and of other animals, and also that vegetable oils, are used in the making and compounding of suine, oleomargarine butter, butterine, and adulterated and imitation dairy products, and also that such fats and oils are used and are imported and are exported to be used for the making and compounding of such artificial, adulterated, and imitation dairy products, and that such adulterated imitation compounds are surreptitiously sold in this country and elsewhere in competition with genuine dairy products, greatly to the injury of the agriculturists and dairymen of the United States; and

Whereas it is alleged that the manufacture, sale, and exportation and disposition of said compounds, materials, and commodities is so conducted as to avoid general publicity and to prevent the obtaining of accurate or desirable statistics in relation thereto, and to mislead and deceive the consumer as to the actual character, composition, and ingredients thereof: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire into and investigate the said allegations and ascertain the facts relating thereto, and the facts and statistics of the adulterated and imitation compounds and mixtures of dairy products, and of the materials composing the same.

Mr. RANDALL. This matter has heretofore been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the subject belongs under the rules to the Committee on Ways and Means, but the gentleman from New York has the right to submit his motion for its reference to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. KELLEY. The subject was before the Committee on Ways and Means during the last Congress, and, in my judgment, certainly belongs to that committee.

Mr. PARKER. If I may be permitted to say a word——

The SPEAKER. This is not debatable.

Mr. PARKER. I desire simply to answer a single suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The bill of last year to which he refers provided for taxing oleomargarine. This rule provides for obtaining statistics and facts, not with reference to the effect upon revenue and taxation, but with reference to its effects upon the interests of the farming community generally. Therefore it is a subject that should go properly to the Committee on Agriculture, relating, as it does, to that branch of our national industries.

Mr. RANDALL. There seems to be a clear distinction between the two, and I am willing on my part and ready to recognize that distinction. So far as my objection goes, therefore, I withdraw it.

Mr. KELLEY. If this is a mere inquiry, I withdraw the objection which I have made.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is the child the Committee on Agriculture takes the most pride in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reference requested?

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

DANIEL H. B. DAVIS.

Mr. HUTCHINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3929) for the relief of Daniel H. B. Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

IRON MOUNTAIN RAILROAD.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3930) to repeal section 1 of the act entitled "An act making a grant of lands in alterate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain Railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas," approved July 4, 1866, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RYAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. I must ask the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Kansas desires to ask the House to fix a special order.

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield for that purpose.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE DUDLEY C. HASKELL.

Mr. RYAN. I ask consent of the House to present at this time and move the adoption of the order which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Thursday, the 28th of February next, at 2 o'clock p. m., be fixed as the time for delivering appropriate tributes to the memory of the late DUDLEY C. HASKELL, late a Representative from the State of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be made.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT, ALABAMA.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 24, a bill (H. R. 3931) to create an additional United States judicial district and to establish circuit and district courts for the northern district of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2824) to amend sections 4, 5, and 9 of an act approved February 24, 1879, entitled "An act to create the northern judicial district of the State of Texas and to change the eastern and western judicial districts of said State, and to fix the time and places for holding courts in said districts," and to provide for holding terms of the court of the western judicial district of Texas at the city of El Paso, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SPANISH FERRY-BOAT NUESTRA SEÑORA DE REGLA.

Mr. DORSHEIMER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2842) to carry into effect the decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York in the case of the Spanish ferry-boat Nuestra Señora de Regla; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT, NEW YORK.

Mr. DORSHEIMER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1090) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district court in the northern district of New York; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF BILLS.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. 646) to reform the civil service, with the recommendation that said committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

The change of reference was so ordered.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back the bill (H. R. 597) to aid in the support of common schools, with the recommendation that said committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Education.

The change of reference was so ordered.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back the bill (H. R. 946) to reorganize the legislative power of Utah Territory, with the recommendation that said committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

The change of reference was so ordered.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back the bill (H. R. 596) to lessen crime and human suffering from alcoholism by restricting the use of distilled spirits to scientific, mechanical, and medicinal purposes, with the recommendation that the said committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

The change of reference was so ordered.

RAILROAD LAND-GRANTS.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back a number of bills which were referred to that committee in reference to railroad land-grants, and for other purposes, and ask to have read in this connection the report of the committee submitting to the House the question as to the proper reference of these bills.

The SPEAKER. Does the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the bills to which reference is made?

Mr. TUCKER. The committee submit the question of reference to the House as to whether these bills are to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary as well as to the Committee on the Public Lands. It is the desire of the committee that the House shall determine to which they should be referred.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which have been referred House bills numbers 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, respectfully report:

It seems that all of these bills have been referred to the Commtttee on the Public Lands and are now under consideration by that committee.

That committee has preferred a request to this committee asking that consideration of these bills be referred to that committee.

It is not desirable that two committees of this House should be engaged in the consideration of the same subject, upon which contrary conclusions may be reached and thus present diverse views to the House for its action.

While, therefore, this committee does not desire to take jurisdiction of any question not clearly within its powers, it is not willing to decline a duty properly devolving upon it.

This committee, therefore, reports back all of the foregoing bills to the House, that it may decide upon the conflict of jurisdiction between the two committees arising out of the reference of them to both committees; and this committee submits to the action of the House the question of the duty of this committee in the premises.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] what action he desires in reference to this matter.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire the action of the House upon the question whether the Committee on the Judiciary shall consider those bills or whether the consideration of them shall be left to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. RANDALL. It is really a question of order and jurisdiction, and I think to that extent would be a privileged question. And I remember on a like occasion, if I am not mistaken, it was so held to be a question of privilege. In this instance the report might perhaps go to the House Calendar; or it might, to secure more speedy action, go to the Committee on Rules, which would have the right to report at any time thereon; or the report might be made after this hour and the House precipitated into a decision at once.

I have no feeling on the subject except to have an early and intelligent conclusion reached.

Mr. RYAN. I think there ought to be some action on this question by the House.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Is it not in order now, in the present condition of this report, to move a reference of these bills to the Committee on the Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. Such a motion would have been in order if the Committee on the Judiciary had asked to be discharged from the further consideration of these bills, but the committee has not made such a request.

The Chair desires to say that while he has no doubt this is a matter of privilege, yet it is like every other matter; the House can not act upon it unless some question is made, some motion is submitted; and up to the present time no motion whatever has been submitted; and this report would go to the Calendar, as other reports.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to move that these bills be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. These bills are still before the Committee on the Judiciary, as the Chair understands, that committee not having asked to be discharged from their further consideration.

Mr. REED. As I understand it the attitude of the Judiciary Committee in regard to this subject is this: The House have referred a number of bills relating to this subject to the Judiciary Committee, having also referred a number of bills relating to this subject to the Committee on the Public Lands, and everybody will recollect the action of the House yesterday. It is very desirable that all these bills should be referred to one committee, that there may be no conflict of jurisdiction upon the subject; and while the Judiciary Committee regard this as clearly and plainly a question within their jurisdiction under the rules of the House, as it must result in a judicial proceeding, nevertheless they desire, under the peculiar circumstances of this case—and the House will see without further explanation how peculiar they are—that the House should take action on the subject without reference, as I understand it, to any formalities in regard to discharging the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of these bills.

If the House desires, as the indications seem to be, that these matters should go to the Committee on the Public Lands, it is for the House to decide immediately and to relieve the situation from its embarrassment. I believe I am expressing the ideas of the committee on the subject. While they regard it as a matter plainly within their jurisdiction, the House not having indicated thus far a decided disposition on the subject, it was felt desirable it should be brought before the House in order that it might take ultimate action in regard to it undisturbed by any desire on our part, because we have no desire on the subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I would further remark that if this report goes to the House Calendar it can be reached to-day by a motion to proceed to the consideration of the House Calendar, and that suggestion is in harmony with the judgment of the Chair that it should go there.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether it is in order now to move to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of these bills.

The SPEAKER. The House can now only deal with the reports made by the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. And under the rule they go——

The SPEAKER. To the House Calendar. The report will be printed and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the Chair decide that the motion is not in order at this time to refer these bills?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides it is not in order at this time to move to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of these bills, because the committee itself has made no such recommendation.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not require a motion to send this report to the Calendar. It goes by force of the rule.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] desires to have the bills referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PAYSON. If I may be pardoned for one suggestion, is not the report of the Committee on the Judiciary tantamount to a request to be discharged from the further consideration of these bills? They report the bills back and ask the action of the House in reference to them. If that is not tantamount to a request to be discharged from their further consideration, then I do not know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this report to be in the nature of a request to the House to instruct the Committee on the Judiciary whether or not it shall exercise jurisdiction over the subject.

Mr. REED. That is it exactly.

The SPEAKER. The report will go the House Calendar, and when reached the House can take such action upon it as it may desire.

The report was accordingly placed on the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL BUILDING AT NATCHEZ, MISS.

Mr. MOULTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2334) to release the American Baptist Home Mission Society from the conditions of the sale of the marine hospital building and grounds at Natchez, Miss.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLERKS FOR COURTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. BISBEE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 163) providing for the appointment of clerks in circuit and district courts in the southern district of Georgia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

STATE NATIONAL BANK OF BOSTON.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back the bill (H. R. 2263) for the relief of the State National Bank of Boston, Mass., and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to, and it was ordered accordingly.

BRIDGE OVER REPUBLICAN RIVER, KANSAS.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back Executive Document No. 21, first session Forty-eighth Congress, being the message of the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War relative to a reconstruction of the bridge over the Republican River at or near Fort Riley, Kans., and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to; and it was ordered accordingly.

HENRY Z. BLINN.

Mr. STEELE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 351) authorizing the muster-in and discharge of Henry Z. Blinn; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. MAGINNIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the following bills, and moved that the committee be discharged from their further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay:

A bill (H. R. 1252) for the relief of certain enlisted veteran volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 1418) authorizing the payment of bounty to Patterson T. Campbell;

A bill (H. R. 1050) directing the payment of a bounty to Thomas Casey; and

A bill (H. R. 1205) for the relief of William Elder.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is the motion of the gentleman to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of these bills and to refer the same to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay?

The SPEAKER. That is the report of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Are they not simply claims?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the bills are. The report of the committee is that it be discharged from the further consideration of these bills, and that the same be referred to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The Committee on Military Affairs instructed me to make that report. Of course we have no choice as to the committee to which these bills shall be referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes, from the titles of the bills, that they relate in some manner to the payment of bounties.

Mr. MAGINNIS. They are all bounty bills.

The motion of Mr. MAGINNIS was agreed to, and it was ordered accordingly.

JAMES M. THOMAS.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 3932) directing the Adjutant-General of the United States Army to place the name of James M. Thomas on the muster-rolls of Company C, Second Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteers, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GENERAL WILLIAM W. AVERILL.

Mr. BAYNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 2487) authorizing the retirement of Bvt. Maj. Gen. William W. Averill, United States Army, with the rank and pay of brigadier-general; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. COX, of New York, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the following bills, and moved that the committee be discharged from their further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 3226) for the relief of Davis W. Mullan; and

A bill (H. R. 3314) for the relief of John Jordan.

The motion was agreed to, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. COX, of New York, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, rereported back the bill (H. R. 3318) for the relief of J. B. Cornell and others, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 2478) for the relief of Charles Perley, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to, and it was ordered accordingly.

JOHN P. GREGSON.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 257) for the relief of John P. Gregson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF LANGLEY B. CULLEY.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1615) for the relief of the heirs of the late Langley B. Culley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF CAPT. JOHN G. TOD.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1567) for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Capt. John G. Tod, of the Texas navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT ENGINEER JOHN W. SAVILLE.

Mr. BALLENTINE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2240) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Assistant Engineer John W. Saville a passed assistant engineer on the retired-list of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

POSTAL CLERKS.

Mr. REESE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1325) authorizing the Postmaster-General to pay railway postal clerks detailed as chief clerks of railway mail service actual expenses when traveling on the business of the Department; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back bills of the following titles; when the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and they were referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 115) for the relief of William Fowler, sr.;

A bill (H. R. 114) for the relief of Thomas Guineau; and

A bill (H. R. 76) for the relief of Jerome Madden, of California.

TEXAS PACIFIC LAND-GRANT.

Mr. PAYSON. The Committee on the Public Lands have directed me to report, as a substitute for sundry bills referred to them, the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. One bill can not be reported as a substitute for several bills, for that would be an attempt to amend various bills in one proposition. The committee to whom this subject has been referred report this as an original bill.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. 3933) relative to the Texas Pacific land-grant; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BOUNDARY BETWEEN INDIAN TERRITORY AND TEXAS.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1565) to authorize the appointment of a commission by the President of the United States to run and mark the boundary lines between a portion of the Indian Territory and the State of Texas in connection with a similar commission to be appointed by the State of Texas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GREENVILLE, S. C.

Mr. DIBBLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. 1458) for a public building at Greenville, S. C.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEW ALBANY, IND.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 337) to provide for the construction of a public building at New Albany, Ind.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RECOVERIES FOR INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill (H. R. 3934) relating to recoveries for infringements of patents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SEPTIMIA R. MEIKLEHAM.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire to present at this time the views of a minority of the Committee on Pensions upon the bill (H. R. 999) granting a pension to Septimia R. Meikleham.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana, in accordance with the permission granted by the House, presents the views of a minority of the committee on the bill named by him, which will be printed with the report of the majority.

S. D. HOUSTON.

Mr. WOOD, from the Committee on Claims, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 523) for the relief of S. D. Houston; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DAMAGES BY CYCLONE.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back adversely the following cases; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 1477) to pay Hiram Johnson and other persons herein named the several sums of money herein specified, being the surplus of a military assessment paid by them and accounted for to the United States in excess of the amount required for the indemnity for which it was levied and collected;

A bill (H. R. 861) for the relief of Mrs. Jane E. Limes; and Petition of Julian Bedford.

HIRAM JOHNSON.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I ask that the report on this case of the bill H. R. 1477 be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. GEDDES, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further considerations of the following cases, and they were referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 1757) to empower Robert Adger to bring suit in the Court of Claims for rent alleged to be due him;

A bill (H. R. 1758) to empower Mitchell King, executor, to bring suit in the Court of Claims for rent alleged to be due him; and

A bill (H. R. 3480) for the relief of Bridget Leary.

ANNA ELLA CARROLL.

On motion of Mr. GEDDES, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3225) for the relief of Anna Ella Carroll; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. STORM, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the following cases; and the same were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

Petition of Anna E. Connell;

Petition of A. H. Gardner, of Pike County, Missouri;

Petition of W. Ann Barnes, of Texas; and Petition of James A. Bowling, of Haywood County, Tennessee.

ELIZABETH TOOP.

Mr. WELLER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Toop, of Shelby County, Tennessee; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. H. HAMMOND.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1327) for the relief of J. H. Hammond; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Petition of James E. Wood, of Trenton, Tenn.

MRS. MYRA CLARK GAINES.

Mr. COSGROVE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1000) for the relief of Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The call of committees was then resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports has now been concluded.

Mr. HOPKINS. I was not present when the Committee on Labor was called, and desire to ask consent of the House for the reference of certain bills which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor before the division of the committee. I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be complied with.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF BILLS.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, by unanimous consent, the following bills and joint resolution, heretofore referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, were referred to the Committee on Labor:

A bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners or aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a department of labor statistics;

A bill (H. R. 1006) to settle accounts of laborers;

A bill (H. R. 995) to prohibit any officer, agent, or servant of the Government of the United States of America to hire or contract out the labor of persons incarcerated for violating the laws of the Government of the United States of America;

A bill (H. R. 894) to establish a bureau of labor statistics;

A bill (H. R. 649) to establish a bureau of statistics of labor and industry; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 34) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to ask unanimous consent of the House to adopt a resolution which I am instructed to offer by the Committee on Commerce, asking authority to have in their discretion certain printing done by the Public Printer. The discussions before the committee on the interstate-commerce bill will be commenced on Thursday next, and it is desirable to have them printed for the use of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be authorized to have such printing done at the Government Printing Office as it may deem proper and may order.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. REAGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask the immediate adoption of the resolution, in order that we may have the matter to which I have referred printed without delay. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the discussion on the interstate-commerce bill in the committee will begin on Thursday, and it is the desire of the committee to have such portions of it printed as they may deem advisable.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the resolution be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Banking and Currency for present consideration.

Several members called for the regular order.

GREELY RELIEF EXPEDITION.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. And I further desire to ask unanimous consent that when we are in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union we may proceed immediately to the consideration of the joint resolution making an appropriation for the Greely relief expedition.

The SPEAKER. That order can be made by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that when the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union prior orders shall be set aside, and that the committee shall proceed immediately to the consideration of the joint resolution making an appropriation for the Greely relief expedition. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. By order of the House all prior bills on the Calendar are passed over in order to reach the joint resolution which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 119) making an appropriation for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the Lady Franklin Bay expedition to the Arctic regions.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to prepare and dispatch an expedition to the coast of Greenland, Smith's Sound, or Lady Franklin Bay, for the purpose of relieving and bringing home Lieut. A. W. Greely and party, and that for this purpose the purchase of not exceeding three vessels is authorized, and all expenditures necessary for manning, equipping, and supplying them, and for any land journeys which may be required, and such sums as may be necessary to effect the object of this resolution are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; the vessels purchased to be sold after their return and the money arising from such sale covered into the Treasury.

And the President shall submit to Congress on the first Monday of December, 1884, a full and detailed account of all expenditures and outlays made on account of this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, as other matters are pressing, I shall endeavor to be brief in explanation of the joint resolution just read, and shall ask the privilege of inserting in the RECORD quotations from the various reports of the Government officials in reference to this matter as they appear in the annual reports, and will also insert portions of the communications recently received from the President.

In 1881 a vessel was sent by authority of law to Lady Franklin Bay, and reached there without difficulty, finding an open sea, which was a most unusual event. The vessel (Proteus) that took the party known as the Greely expedition, numbering in all twenty-two persons, left Lieutenant Greely and his men at that point and then returned to the United States, the theory of the expedition being to establish a station there and to establish stations farther north, reaching such points by land, and thus approach nearer to the North Pole.

They arrived at Lady Franklin Bay, I think, on the 11th day of August, 1881 The understanding between Lieutenant Greely and the Government officers was that a relief should be sent to him in 1882 and another in 1883. In the summer of 1882 a vessel called the Neptune was sent, but was unable, owing to the ice, to reach the point where they were ordered to go so as to supply the expedition with succor at some place on Grinnell Land; and not being able to reach that point, they took the precaution to leave a supply of provisions at Littleton Island and at Cape Sabine.

Last year, in harmony with the agreement made with Lieutenant Greely, the Proteus was again sent to his relief; and in addition the Secretary of the Navy was given the discretion to send a naval vessel to accompany the Proteus. The Yantic did accompany the Proteus. At some point north of the mouth of Smith's Sound the Proteus was enveloped in ice and destroyed. Then became apparent the wisdom of the Yantic accompanying the Proteus, afterward destroyed, for she brought back officers and crew who were on board the Proteus.

This appropriation is in obedience to humanity, to the agreement made with Lieutenant Greely; and it may result in promoting the objects of these North Pole expeditions.

The report of the Chief Signal Officer shows, somewhat in detail, the measures taken in pursuance of a provision in the sundry civil act of 1883 to bring back to this country the two Arctic expeditions, one at Lady Franklin Bay, and the other at Point Barrow. The report of the Chief Signal Officer, being for the year ending June 30, 1883, does not include the subsequent history of the relief expeditions. The Point Barrow party has safely returned.

On June 29 last, a well-equipped relief party sailed on a hired steam-sealer, the Proteus, from St. John's, Newfoundland, with instructions to reach Lady Franklin Bay, if possible, and to bring back Lieutenant Greely and his party. Arrangements were here made with the Navy Department to have the United States steamer Yantic accompany the sealer as far north as it was safe for the Yantic to go, so that it might render any assistance in what it was not improbable would be a perilous voyage. It was contemplated that in case the Proteus should not be able to reach Lady Franklin Bay, a well-provided relief station was to be established at a point near the entrance to Smith's Sound, from which, as a base, Lieutenant Greely was to be sought for, with the expectation that both parties would easily be relieved and brought home in the year 1884.

The Proteus, with the relief party and supplies on board, parted from the Yantic at the beginning of the voyage, and penetrated a short distance into Smith's Sound; was there caught in the ice and destroyed, with nearly all its stores. The party on board made its way southward; was finally taken up by the steamer Yantic and brought home, arriving at so late a season that, after careful consideration, it was determined that there was little if any chance of success for another expedition sent north this season, and that the probability of disaster to such an expedition was very great. A copy of a memorandum of the views of the Secretary of the Navy and myself, made at the time, is appended. The general conduct of the relief expedition on the Proteus is being investigated by an Army court of inquiry now in session in the city of Washington.

It will be necessary that early provision should be made to fit out another expedition for the relief of Lieutenant Greely and his party. Their exact situation and condition is only a matter of conjecture. They have had with them at Lady Franklin Bay a supply of food, clothing, and other necessaries entirely sufficient to last them until next summer; and there would be no reasonable apprehension for their safety if it were known that they had remained and were now at Lady Franklin Bay. It is possible, however, that inasmuch as the relief expedition of the year 1882 did not succeed in connecting with Lieutenant Greely, he, in pursuance of prearranged plans, late in the summer of this year, left Lady Franklin Bay to come southward to the entrance of Smith's Sound, and that, relying upon finding there an abundant supply of the necessaries of life, he neglected to burden himself in the southward journey with a greater quantity of provisions and clothing than would be necessary to support his party on the journey. Even in this case his condition would be by no means desperate, for at this point and farther north there are supplies, and if they should prove not sufficient to support him and his party until a vessel can reach him in 1884, it is thought that it would not be impossible for him to retrace his steps and reach the supplies left at Lady Franklin Bay, although such a journey would be disheartening and very difficult, even if his party should be in good condition.

[Extracts from report of Chief Signal Officer of the Army for 1883.]

One of the most important events of the year was the fitting out of the expeditions for the relief of Lieutenant Greely and his party, who have been at Lady Franklin Bay, Grinnell Land, since August 11, 1881, and of another for the recall of Lieutenant Ray from Point Barrow, Alaska. The original purpose of the expeditions, which reached the Arctic a little more than two years ago, was to establish meteorological stations, at which observations should be taken for three years. These observations were to be made simultaneously at similar stations established by the Governments of the Argentine Republic, Austro-Hungary, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain and Canada, Holland, Italy, Norway, Russia, Sweden, and the United States.

These stations made a chain about the pole, and valuable discoveries, adding greatly to the world's knowledge of the laws that govern storms in the northern hemisphere, were anticipated from them by all meteorologists. No one yet knows what has already been accomplished, but Congress has cut short the time, and the officers and men who have been stationed at Lady Franklin Bay and at Point Barrow have been ordered to leave their stations and to return home.

The records of the efforts of last year to reach Lieutenant Greely's party and of the expedition to Point Barrow will be found in an appendix. The party on the Neptune did all that could be done for the accomplishment of the purpose for which they were sent out. They made a brave but unsuccessful struggle against the elements, but the ice-barrier of the summer of 1882 was too strong and heavy to be overcome. It was impossible to sail to the relief of the men at Lady Franklin Bay, and no provision had been made for wintering in the Arctic or for sledging northward. Lieutenant Greely was supplied with provisions for another year, unless some unforeseen accident had destroyed them. The Neptune party therefore cached supplies as near as possible to the points directed the year before by Lieutenant Greely. A cache was made at Littleton Island and another at Cape Sabine, while one established by Lieutenant Greely, and subsequently destroyed by bears, was rebuilt. Records and directions for finding the hidden provisions were left in prominent places, and signals were erected to point out the spots where the directions for finding the stores were concealed.

Point Barrow was reached after a stormy voyage in a small schooner, and Lieutenant Ray's party was supplied. Its records of observations taken during the year will be found in the appendix. The detailed reports of Lieutenants Ray and Powell, and the report made by Mr. Winslow Upton, computer, on the observations for the determination of the longitude of this station, have already been published in Signal Service Notes No. 5, and are omitted, therefore, from the appendices to this report.

On June 29 of this year Lieut. Earnest A. Garlington, of the Seventh Cavalry, sailed in the Proteus, the same vessel which carried Lieutenant Greely to his station, for Lady Franklin Bay. Through the courtesy of the Secretary of the Navy, the United States steamship Yantic accompanied the sealer which had been chartered by this service. Lieutenant Garlington had with him seven men; five from the line of the Army and two Signal Corps men. Lieutenant Garlington will make every effort to reach Lady Franklin Bay by steamer. If he shall fail, Lieutenant Greely and his party will doubtless start southward by boats as soon as the season permits, not later than September 1. At all events it is thoroughly understood that they must be reached. The instructions given to Lieutenant Garlington clearly and fully show him the necessity for doing everything possible to be done to reach Lady Franklin Bay with the Proteus.

When Lieutenant Greely reached his destination he sent back instructions as to how a relief expedition should proceed and where stores should be cached. As nearly as practicable these instructions were followed in 1882, and there was pointed out to Lieutenant Garlington, before he left Washington, the course he should take to insure communication with the Greely party conformably to this plan should it be making its way south as he proceeded north. To facilitate communication, the members of Lieutenant Garlington's command were instructed in signaling with flags and heliographs, and a supply of Very Signals were taken for use at night.

Necessary provision was made as far as possible for giving Lieutenant Greely notice of the efforts making for his relief, by leaving records at all points where the party may land. If Lieutenant Garlington finds it impossible to reach Lady Franklin Bay with his vessel, he is directed to send back the Proteus to St. John's, Newfoundland, and to land at Life Boat Cove. He has been provided with materials for a house, and with sledges, and he procured the necessary dogs at Godhaven, Greenland. The house is large enough for the combined parties, those of Lieutenants Greely and Garlington, who will remain in this shelter until they can be relieved next year. As soon as the landing is effected, Lieutenant Garlington will proceed north, taking his hardiest men as far as Cape Sabine, and if, by that time, he shall not have met Lieutenant Greely, he will, with a smaller number, sledge still farther north until the object of his expedition shall be accomplished.

No pains have been spared to make the outfit of the relieving party complete for the serious and hazardous work which they have volunteered to do. In addition to the force taken from the United States three experienced icemen were taken on board the Proteus at St. John's, for the selection of whom the service is indebted to Consul Malloy. Esquimaux, as many as may be needed, were secured in Greenland.

[Extract from the message of the President, recently communicated to Congress.]

In the plans for the relief of this party, as arranged with Lieutenant Greely, it was contemplated that an effort would be made to communicate with him and furnish him any needed assistance in 1882 and again in 1883. Subsequently legislation was enacted which required the expedition of 1883 to bring that party home. It was a part of the arrangement that if communication should not be made with him on or before the 1st of September, 1883, he should, with his party, abandon his station at Lady Franklin Bay not later than the above-mentioned date, and proceed southward, and would find a well-supplied relief station at the entrance to Smith's Sound, a point where it would not be difficult to reach him during a part of each year.

The expeditions of 1882 and 1833 were sent; but neither one of them was able to communicate with Lieutenant Greely, and the last one failed to accomplish any part of its object beyond leaving a very small quantity of stores in the neighborhood of the entrance to Smith's Sound.

The situation of Lieutenant Greely and his party, under these circumstances, is one of great peril, and in presenting the preliminary views of the board appointed by me to take into consideration an expedition for their relief, I urgently recommend prompt action by Congress to enable the recommendations of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to be carried out without delay.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 17, 1884.

SIR: The board of officers of the Army and Navy, convened by your order of the 17th of December, 1883, to consider an expedition to be sent for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the Lady Franklin Bay expedition, of which order a copy is inclosed, has made a preliminary statement to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, from which it appears that the board is of the opinion that the control of the expedition should be committed to the Navy Department, and that it is indispensable that it should be on the ground at the earliest possible time. There is no record of a vessel having passed Cape York, the northernmost point of Melville Bay, before the 1st of June, and therefore the expedition should arrive at Upernavik, the most northern Danish settlement in Greenland, not later than May 20, and should be fitted and in complete readiness to leave New York not later than May 1.

The board is also of opinion that the relief expedition should have such an equipment that in any event it will be able to reach Lady Franklin Bay, and that it should consist of at least two vessels, each having supplies for a period of two years, not only for its own crew, but for the crew of the other vessel and for the men composing Lieutenant Greely's party at Lady Franklin Bay.

The board recommends the immediate purchase of two full-powered steam-whalers or steam-sealers of from five hundred to six hundred tons displacement, and that these vessels should be thoroughly equipped with boats and sleds.

We have the honor to communicate these recommendations to you with our concurrence in them, and have further to express the opinion that it may also be deemed wise to dispatch a smaller and less completely equipped vessel as an advance ship, which may be able to take greater risks in early spring navigation than would be considered justifiable in the case of the two steam-sealers, upon which the ultimate success of the expedition may depend.

We have therefore to recommend that Congress be requested to authorize the President to prepare and dispatch an expedition to the coast of Greenland, Smith's Sound, or Lady Franklin Bay for the purpose of relieving and bringing home Lieut. A. W. Greely and party, and that for this purpose there be authorized the purchase of two or more steam vessels, and also all expenditures necessary for manning, equipping, and supplying them, and for any land journeys which may be required, the vessels to be sold, if deemed advisable, after their return, and that such sums as may be necessary to effect this object may be appropriated.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.
WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDENT.

If there are any questions which gentlemen desire to address to me I shall be glad now to hear them, and thereafter I shall not further encroach upon the time of the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a single question with reference to the construction of the joint resolution which has been reported. The resolution authorizes the President to purchase not exceeding three vessels. Is it understood by this language that the President is authorized not only to purchase three vessels that may be already built, but also, if he thinks it desirable, to enter into a contract to purchase vessels to be built? If the joint resolution grants full power in both cases, I am content with it; but if it does not, I desire to propose an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I am only able to answer that question for myself, and I will answer it in a few sentences. I believe the words "purchase of not exceeding three vessels" would embrace vessels built or vessels to be built.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he can inform the committee about how much appropriation this joint resolution will cover?

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman from Texas I desire to say we have thought best, after the fullest consideration in the Committee on Appropriations, to make this an exception to the general rule and not make any limitation as to the amount appropriated; because if we were to restrict the President of the United States, whom we can all I think safely trust in this particular, we might find that that restriction would be injurious and not in the direction of economy, in so far at least as the purchase of ships is concerned; and considering moreover the usual disposition of those fitting out these expeditions to go up to the maximum of a fixed appropriation, the committee concluded to trust it to the discretion of the President. We hope therefore we can rely upon the President in having these expenditures, in view of the past heavy outlays, brought to the most economical limits.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question: Whether the sum desired by this bill is intended not only for the relief of Lieutenant Greely but for the continuation of the expedition?

Mr. RANDALL. We do not so understand it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not understand the resolution that way, but I did not know but it might be so construed.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no such information as would lead to any forced construction of that sort. We understand that the President of the United States, acting by and with the advice of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, will confine this appropriation to the relief of the former expedition.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not know but under the language of the resolution it might possibly be construed otherwise.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the language will not admit of that construction, because the joint resolution in its very language provides that these ships so long as they are in this relief service shall be owned by the Government, but on their return shall be immediately sold and the money covered into the Treasury. If the gentleman will read the language of the joint resolution he will see that those words are embraced in it.

Mr. BUDD. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] if it would not be well to prescribe what kind of sailor shall have charge of this expedition? I believe that the expedition (and men) under De Long was lost because of red tape and the fact that a drawing-room sailor was in charge of it. Nearly all the losses of this kind have been by reason of having these drawing-room sailors in place of old weather-beaten seamen who understand their business.

Mr. RANDALL. I know nothing about the matters the gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD] complains of. I think we can safely leave the selection to the President of the United States; and I will here say that the President should give due consideration to all suggestions made in this House in relation to the administration of laws.

If there is no further discussion desired, I move that the committee rise and report the joint resolution to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 119) making an appropriation for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the Lady Franklin Bay expedition to the Arctic regions, and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment and recommend its passage.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COBB. If it be in order, I now move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to move to proceed to business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules that motion would have precedence.

The motion of Mr. SPRINGER was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. COBB was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first business on the House Calendar.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I would like to ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the present order can not be interrupted for such purpose.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF ALABAMA.

The first business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24) in relation to the district and circuit courts for the northern district of Alabama, reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary with a substitute, to create an additional United States district and to establish circuit and district courts therein, in the State of Alabama.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be, and is hereby, created an additional judicial district in the State of Alabama, to include and embrace the following counties, to wit: Sumter, Greene, Pickens, Tuscaloosa, Bibb, Shelby, Talladega, Clay, Lamar, Fayette, Walker, Jefferson, Blount, Saint Clair, Etowah, Calhoun, Cleburne, Cherokee, and De Kalb, which judicial district shall be known and styled the "East and west judicial district of Alabama."

SEC. 2. That there shall be, and is hereby, established within said judicial district a circuit and district court of the United States, which said courts respectively shall have and exercise all such jurisdiction, original and appellate, within said judicial district, as are now conferred by law upon the circuit and district courts of the United States within and for the northern, southern, and middle judicial districts of the State of Alabama.

SEC. 3. That the circuit judge of the circuit which embraces the judicial district created by this act, and the judges of the district courts for the judicial district of Alabama, shall do and perform all the duties and exercise all the powers which pertain to the offices of circuit and district judges for said court hereby established in the judicial district created by this act.

SEC. 4. That a term of the circuit and district courts for the judicial district created by this act shall be held at the city of Birmingham, in the said county of Jefferson, twice in each year, on the first Mondays in March and September.

SEC. 5. That the district attorney of the northern and middle districts of Alabama shall perform all of his lawful and appropriate duties and functions as such district attorney of the circuit and district courts in and by this act created as by law he is required and authorized to do and perform for the northern and middle district, circuit, and district courts of Alabama.

SEC. 6. That the United States marshal of the northern district of Alabama shall do and perform all of his lawful and appropriate duties and functions for the judicial district, circuit, and district courts of the United States by this act created as by law he is authorized and required to do and perform for the northern district of Alabama. That the said United States marshal for the northern district of Alabama shall permanently reside and keep his office in the city of Huntsville, in the county of Madison, within the northern district of Alabama, and shall appoint a deputy marshal, who shall permanently reside and keep an office in the city of Birmingham, in the county of Jefferson, within the judicial district hereby created. The said deputy marshal, in the absence of the principal, shall do and perform all the duties appertaining to his office in the district created by this act.

SEC. 7. That there shall be appointed for the district court created by this act, by the district judge of Alabama, a clerk, who shall take the oath and give the bond required by law of clerks of the district courts, and who shall discharge all the duties and be entitled to all the fees and emoluments prescribed by law for clerks of the district courts. And there shall also be appointed for the circuit court for said judicial district, by the circuit judge of the circuit which embraces said judicial district, a clerk, who shall take the oath and give the bond required by law of clerks of circuit courts, and who shall discharge all the duties and be entitled to all the fees and emoluments prescribed by law for clerks of circuit courts.

SEC. 8. That this act shall not apply to or affect any suit, prosecution, or proceeding, civil or criminal, commenced or pending in any of the United States district or circuit courts of Alabama on or before the 1st day of August, 1884.

SEC. 9. That this act shall be in force from the 1st day of August, 1884; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The question was upon agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to inquire, before the vote is taken, inasmuch as the original bill has not been reported to the House——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have it reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not ask that. I desire to inquire what is the difference between this substitute and the original bill.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. The only difference is that the original bill provided for a new division of the State for the existing districts, and this substitute provides for a new judicial district.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] at how many points in the State of Alabama Federal courts are now held.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. At three.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then this makes the fourth?

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not indulge the remotest hope that this bill will not pass, although I feel very confident that it ought not to pass. But experience has demonstrated the fact that the creation of new Federal courts is a policy which will steadily proceed, greatly to the detriment, as I think, of the State tribunals and to the ultimate enlargement of the Federal judicial powers.

There are now in Alabama three points where Federal courts are held, and this bill proposes a fourth. In my own State the same condition of affairs exists; and yet there I know it to be against the public interest that the courts should be held at more than a single point. The additional expense is entirely unwarranted. The main object of legislation of this kind has been to advance certain local interests and to create arguments in favor of additional Federal buildings.

But the ground upon which I object to this species of legislation increasing Federal tribunals all over the country is that its tendency is to dwarf your State judicial system and to enlarge the Federal judicial system beyond the necessities and wants of the country. The effect is to enlarge ultimately and steadily the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, there being a number of lawyers in each State interested in a large jurisdiction.

The country is demanding and has been demanding for years past that the jurisdiction of the Federal courts be diminished; and the most considerate men in this country, I think, are in favor of restricting the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to questions arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. But instead of restriction, the tendency since the epoch of the war has been toward enlargement year by year.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. This bill does not enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree with my friend that it does not. But any gentleman can very well see that with the enlargement of the number of courts—six or eight in Iowa, four in Alabama, four in Indiana—every local interest is toward enlarging rather than restricting the jurisdiction of the Federal tribunals, thus subjecting the citizen to a jurisdiction beyond the loeation where he ought to be compelled to answer.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. The effect of this bill is just the contrary; it brings the courts nearer the people.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not in view of the tendency to enlarged jurisdiction; for with the enlargement of jurisdiction the citizen is taken away from his county to a remote point, where the Federal court is to be held. In every State of this Union, so far as I know, it is an established principle in deference to the rights of the citizen that a defendant in a legal proceeding before the State court must be sued in his own county or vicinage; he is not compelled to answer elsewhere. One of the effects of the tendency toward an increase of Federal jurisdiction is to deprive the citizen of this right, and take him to some remote point where the Federal tribunal is held.

Now, my friend from Texas will permit me to say that if you are determined upon the policy of enlarging the Federal jurisdiction, if you are intending still further to increase the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, then of course the larger the number of courts the better; for as you increase the number of courts you come nearer the vicinage of the defendant. But if you propose at any time to restrict the Federal tribunals to that jurisdiction which was contemplated in the beginning, then instead of increasing the motive for enlarged jurisdiction you should diminish it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in his opposition to increasing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. I think those courts have sufficient jurisdiction now. But this bill, as the gentleman admits, does not increase the jurisdiction of those courts at all. It only brings the court nearer to the litigant, nearer to the people. It enables a poor man, when required in one of these courts to make a defense, to defend himself at less inconvenience and expense.

The Federal courts in Alabama are now held at Huntsville, within about fifteen miles of the Tennessee line; at Mobile, in the extreme southern end of the State; and at Montgomery, over a hundred miles from Birmingham. Huntsville is one hundred miles north of this point, and Mobile over two hundred miles south. Now, if you establish this new district with a court at Birmingham, you do not increase the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, but bring the court nearer to the people and make it more convenient for them when they are litigants. Nor do you increase the expenditure one cent. In fact you save money by bringing the courts nearer to the people; because the Federal Government pays witnesses so much a mile for the distance they are compelled to travel, and the marshals receive mileage for serving writs. Thus by bringing the courts nearer to the litigants you decrease expenditures instead of increasing them.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the objection interposed to this bill by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] would be an excellent argument if the bill before the House was one for the enlargement of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. But such is not its character. It is simply a bill for promoting the convenience of the people—not for any enlargement of jurisdiction. If there were a Federal court in every county of Alabama or any other State, the jurisdiction would not thereby be enlarged, but the convenience of the people would be advanced. As every lawyer knows, no suit can be maintained in the Federal courts unless the law gives such courts jurisdiction. It is the law that confers jurisdiction, not the number of courts. Hence I submit there is no force in the gentleman's objection.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I think it clear that the objections made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not hold for one moment. The old rule or policy seems to have been that the Congress of the United States would give to the Federal courts as little jurisdiction as the necessities of the times called for, and so that rule was proceeded upon by Congress for a long time in the history of the Government. But of late years the opposite rule has obtained, and now the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States is enforced by act of Congress in terms of the Constitution itself. In other words, sir, the jurisdictional power appears to have been exhausted.

How, then, will the gentleman from Indiana persuade the House that by passing the bill under debate it is going to increase jurisdiction in the Federal courts, when, proceeding under the Constitution, Congress has already made the jurisdiction commensurate with the judicial power of the Union?

It happens, then, that what Chancellor Kent insisted ought to be done has been actually accomplished; and not only is jurisdiction given to the courts of the United States in terms as found in the Constitution, but the grant extends apparently as far as the instrument will allow the Legislature to go. How, then, I ask again, can the gentleman from Indiana argue with success to the House that this is a bill to aggravate the tendency to enlarge jurisdiction in the Federal courts, since it would seem at the present time impossible, at least generally speaking, to enlarge this jurisdiction?

What, then, Mr. Speaker, is the bill before the House? It is a bill for the convenience of the citizens of the State of Alabama; to allow the citizen to be sued with facility at his domicile; to permit the process of the marshal to be served with small cost; to enable parties to attend the sessions of the court, and, if need be, to be put on trial without being dragged hundreds of miles, as was the case in the State of Louisiana in the recent memorable instance of the Grant Parish prisoners.

In the bill under consideration it is for the convenience of the citizen that he is to be sued at his domicile; in protection of his civil liberty and his civil rights; for the convenience of the people of Alabama, the security of their rights, their interests, their liberty, and, in the true sense, of their honor. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection whatever to the passage of the bill, for there can be none in law, none in reason, none in fact, and none growing out of the principles of public convenience and correct practice.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I demand the previous question on the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Texas will permit me to put a question to the gentleman from Louisiana. I wish to ask the gentleman from Louisiana whether he indulges any hope that the jurisdiction of the Federal courts will be diminished so as to confine that jurisdiction to questions arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States——

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I must insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman not to insist on his demand for the previous question, and to let us have some debate on this bill.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I hope it will not be ordered until this bill has been fully debated.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The previous question was ordered.

The substitute was adopted.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I now demand the previous question on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from Texas whether he will not allow some debate on this proposition.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I can not yield.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The gentleman has not offered any explanation of the bill which could be heard on this side of the House.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I can not yield.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It is nothing but a proposition to assist in the erection of public buildings and to give away the public money unnecessarily.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 124, noes 2.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum has voted.

The Speaker appointed as tellers Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, and Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 156, noes 8.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. As this is a prize for public buildings at Huntsville and Birmingham, Ala., I think we had better have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I merely wish to add to this title that this is a prize for a public building at Birmingham.

The SPEAKER. The title is the last thing considered. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order.

The previous question was ordered; and, under the operation thereof, the bill was passed.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move, sir, to amend the title of the bill, so that it will read——

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first dispose of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My motion is, Mr. Speaker, to amend the title of this bill, so that it shall conform to the facts in the case. This bill is entitled "A bill to create an additional United States judicial district and to establish circuit and district courts therein in the State of Alabama." Now I move to amend that title by adding, "and to secure an appropriation for a public building at Huntsville and Birmingham."

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the motion——

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. But I desire to discuss my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to that privilege.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this House has refused but a short time ago, just before the holidays, to grant to one-half of the people of the United States a committee to which petitions on the political rights of women could be referred for a respectful hearing, and yet, sir, we are here hurrying bills through without due consideration. This bill is not intended to assist the Department of Justice in executing the United States laws.

It is a notorious fact that the laws of the United States are violated in the Southern States and no respect whatever is paid to them. Look at Danville, Va., and Hazlehurst, Copiah County, Miss., a short time ago, as an illustration of the fact. [Laughter.] Here is a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, nominally to assist the people of the State of Alabama in being heard in the United States courts. I assert, sir, that the bill is for no such purpose. A few years ago a United States court was established at Huntsville, Ala., in the northern portion of that State, ostensibly for this same purpose; but if you read the Senate bill now on your desks, you will see that a Senator from that State has but recently introduced a bill to provide for the erection of a public building at that little town of less than 7,000 inhabitants. The object of getting a Federal court held there was not to see that the people of the United States exercised the immunities and privileges of citizens, as the right to vote and to have their ballots fairly counted; not to see that offenders against the laws of the United States were brought to justice, but to enable these men to put their fingers into the Treasury of the United States and take therefrom all the money that may be necessary to put up a public building in the little town of Huntsville, Ala.

Here is a report from the Committee on the Judiciary to be used as a prize to secure an appropriation for a public building at the growing town of Birmingham, of less than 17,000 inhabitants. Get your Federal court first established there for the ostensible purpose of having justice done to the people of the State, for the ostensible purpose of bringing offenders against your laws to justice, and, sir, before this Congress adjourns you will find that a bill has been introduced here or at the other end of the Capitol to erect a public building at Birmingham.

Look at my own State. In the other wing of this Capitol a Senator from my State introduced a bill which is here on your files, if you will examine them, to divide the State of Kentucky into two judicial districts. There are several things covered up in that bill. It is not only to divide the State into two separate districts, so that the President shall appoint, with the consent of our Democratic Senators, judges who may be the tools of the Democratic party to do justice in that State according to the rules of Democratic justice, but sir, it is to secure a public building at Lexington, Ky. You will find on your files in this House a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] to put up a public building within the new district proposed at the town of Lexington, in the State of Kentucky. At the bottom of every one of these bills providing for the division of a State into separate judicial districts I believe you will find lurking another bill or bills for the erection of public buildings in one or more towns of that State.

Now, sir, I return to the first remark I made, that it seems to me where there is a proposition to put the fingers into the public Treasury and bring out the money for these little schemes the other side of the House arises in solemn phalanx and this side retreats as rapidly. [Laughter.] You either come up to the scratch and vote as our friends on the other side dictate, or else you march off into the cloak-rooms and avoid the issue. It is time, Mr. Speaker, that we should begin to understand the intentions and the policy which gain support to such bills as this. I wanted to see how the question stood in this House, and so I called for the yeas and nays. Only a few men rose up and supported me. The country will judge of this matter. Sir, before this session closes there will not be less than forty public buildings sought to be built in little towns at the public expense where the interest on the money invested would ten times over pay for the rent of a suitable building in the very centers of such towns. As a mere business transaction, following the same rule in reference to public affairs as I should follow with reference to my own private matters, I shall not indorse any such policy.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, permit me to ask leave for the gentleman from Kentucky to be allowed to print the remainder of his remarks.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Alabama can print his remarks if he desires. I have no such intention.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that no discussion of the merits of the bill is in order on his motion. The only question submitted by his amendment is whether or not the title of the bill shall be changed as he proposes.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think I have been confining myself very closely to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to be discussing the merits of the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What I have been saying may not be in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the House; but the RECORD will show I have confined myself very closely to the proposition, which is that the title of the bill should be changed so as to show its real purpose. The intent is what makes the criminal, and not the act.

I have not had time, Mr. Speaker, to go through the files of the Senate bills and the files of the House bills introduced at this session to show just how many of these bills have been introduced to divide a State for the purpose given by the gentleman from Louisiana, that it would facilitate justice by bringing the court nearer to the people; nor have I had time to count up the bills that have been introduced for the purpose of giving an appropriation to put public buildings in some of the towns in these several districts. But I venture to make this prediction, without any fear of successful contradiction, that behind every one of those bills for dividing a State for the convenience of the people is another bill, either introduced by a member of the House or by a Senator, for the purpose of taking money out of the Treasury to put up a public building in a town that under no fair judgment of the House would be entitled to it. And if such a bill passes the House it will do so as a kind of log-rolling measure, because there are so many of those bills and so many friends around each that nobody cares to vote against one for fear he would lose friends for his bill.

I do not throw out any imputations of corruption on these men. Far be it from me to do so. I am willing to concede that the people in those towns want the public buildings; that they are willing to see the State divided if the post-offices or other public buildings can be had. And these members are perhaps doing the will of their constituents in urging such measures; but I claim that it is not such a policy as ought to receive our serious consideration or our votes.

I ask the gentleman to allow the bill to be recommitted; and I ask also that the title of the bill be so amended as to show exactly what it is. The gentleman from Texas, representing that great State with many growing towns, may have bills for public buildings in that State. If he has not, some of his friends have. They have many growing towns in that State which want post-offices and custom-houses. I know they want improvement of rivers and harbors, for I was on the Committee on Commerce last year and heard their appeals, which were many and grievous.

Let us amend the title of this bill so as to show exactly what it is; that it is a pivot; not a tribunal of justice for the people in your States, but a lever to prize money out of the Treasury of the United States. Label it as it should be—a bill to get money out of the United States Treasury to be spent in your district; to get money out of the Treasury to be spent in putting stone and mortar into public buildings where no such buildings are necessary.

This is not the first of such cases. They are numerous. In the last Congress I opposed many of them. I got tired. Perhaps this is the last time that I shall refer to this subject. I know you will not regret it. But I wish to place on record what, in my judgment, lies behind this class of bills. I believe my predictions to-day will come true before the close of the session.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, rose.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield to the gentleman from Texas. I call for a vote.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I ask the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The previous question was seconded.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, to amend the title of the bill, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The title will stand as reported by the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEXAS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2824) to amend sections 4, 5, and 9 of an act approved February 24, 1879, entitled "An act to create the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, and to change the eastern and western judicial districts of said State, and to fix the time and places for holding courts in said districts," and to provide for holding terms of the court of the western judicial district of Texas at the city of El Paso, and for other purposes, reported with a favorable recommendation by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the fourth section of an act approved February 24, 1879, entitled "An act to create the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, and to change the eastern and western judicial districts of said State, and to fix the time and places of holding courts in said districts," shall hereafter read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That the courts in the northern judicial district shall be held twice in each year at Waco and Dallas, and at Graham, in Young County; and the courts in the eastern judicial district shall be held twice in each year at Galveston, Tyler, and Jefferson; and the courts in the western judicial district shall be held twice in each year at Brownsville, San Antonio, the city of El Paso, and Austin. The courts shall be held at the city of Waco on the first Mondays in April and October; at the city of Dallas on the first Mondays in June and December; at the town of Graham, Young County, on the first Mondays in February and August; at the city of Galveston on the first Mondays in November and March; at the city of Tyler on the second Mondays in January and May; at the city of Jefferson on the second Mondays in February and September; at the city of Brownsville on the first Mondays in January and July; at San Antonio on the first Mondays in May and November; at the city of El Paso on the first Mondays in April and October; at Austin on the first Mondays in February and August. And the district judge of each of said districts shall have power to fix adjourned terms at all of said places, so as to dispose of the whole of the business of said courts."

SEC. 2. That section 5 of said act be so amended that all process issued against defendants residing in the counties of El Paso, Pecos, Presidio, Tom Green, Crockett, Andrews, Gaines, Yoakum, Cochran, Bailey, Parmer, Castro, Lamb, Hockley, Terry, Dawson, Martin, Swisher, Hale, Lubbock, Lynn, Floyd, Crosby, Garza, Borden, Howard, Scurry, and Mitchell shall be returned to the city of El Paso. That civil actions or proceedings now pending in the court at San Antonio against parties residing in the counties of El Paso, Pecos, Presidio, Tom Green, and Crockett, and now pending in the court at Graham against parties residing in the counties of Andrews, Gaines, Yoakum, Cochran, Bailey, Parmer, Castro, Lamb, Hockley, Terry, Dawson, Martin, Swisher, Hale, Lubbock, Lynn, Floyd, Crosby, Garza, Borden, Howard, Scurry, and Mitchell, as provided in the act to which this is amendatory, may, on the application of either party to such actions or proceedings, be transferred to the court at the city of El Paso; and in case of such transfer all papers and files therein, with copies of all journal entries, shall be transferred to the office of the deputy clerk of the court at the city of El Paso, and the same shall proceed in all respects as if originally commenced in said court.

SEC. 3. That the ninth section of said act be so amended as to authorize the clerk and marshal of the said western judicial district, respectively, to appoint a deputy clerk and deputy marshal, each of whom shall reside at El Paso, for said court at the city of El Paso.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect and be in force on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1885; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER If there be no objection, the title will stand as reported by the committee.

There was no objection.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I would like to submit a motion to amend the title.

The SPEAKER. The title has already been agreed to.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1090) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district court in the northern district of New York, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That that paragraph of section 572 of the Revised Statutes declaring the times and places and provisions providing terms of the district court in the northern district of New York be amended so as to read as follows:

"In the northern district of New York, at Albany, on the third Tuesday in January; at Utica, on the third Tuesday in March; at Rochester, on the second Tuesday in May; at Buffalo, on the third Tuesday in September; at Auburn, on the third Tuesday in November; at Binghamton, on the third Tuesday in December; and, in the discretion of the judge of the court, one term annually at such time and place within the counties of Onondaga, Saint Lawrence, Clinton, Jefferson, Oswego, and Franklin as he may from time to time appoint. Such appointment shall be made by notice of at least twenty days, published in the State of New York, and one newspaper published at the place where said court is to be held."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DORSHEIMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD LAND-GRANTS.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 174) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, &c., and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary without recommendation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company under the act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and that all of said lands be restored to the public domain and made subject to sale and settlement under existing laws of the United States; and the Attorney-General is instructed to enforce the provisions hereof by proper judicial proceedings.

Mr. COBB. That I believe is one of the bills which was reported this morning from the Committee on the Judiciary without recommendation. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. POLAND. This bill and several others of like character were referred by the House to the Committee on the Judiciary; and several bills of like character were also referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The question was raised before the Committee on the Judiciary as to which of the committees should take jurisdiction of the subject; and I believe that a large majority at least of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary are of the same opinion. I think the proper jurisdiction of these bills is in the Committee on the Judiciary. It has already been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that these grants of land carry a title in presenti; that all the conditions in these grants are conditions subsequent, and therefore they can be forfeited only by judicial proceeding. Therefore, as it seems to me, the whole question resolves itself into a legal and judicial question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Judicial or legislative?

Mr. POLAND. It has been said that it would be entirely proper for the Committee on Public Lands to go so far as to report a bill declaring a forfeiture of these lands. That is a mere step, and whether that step should be taken depends upon considerations that are wholly legal and judicial in their character.

The question of time in these grants is only material like the question of time as to the law-day in a mortgage or a rent-day in a lease. I do not claim that the title which is given by these grants may not be forfeited.

If there be an entire abandonment on the part of the grantee or corporation to whom lands are granted, or if there be gross negligence to comply with the conditions of the grant, there may be very good grounds for a forfeiture. In relation to these grants, so far as I have any information, some of them are proper cases for a forfeiture, while in regard to others there ought not to be a forfeiture. I voted against the resolution which passed the House by so large a majority yesterday because it included all, both good and bad.

I hardly expect, after the vote of yesterday giving instructions to the Committee on Public Lands to report certain bills, with leave to that committee to report them at any time, that there will be any doubt felt by a majority of this House in relation to giving that committee jurisdiction over this whole subject. The only reason why I have arisen now is to say that for myself I do not entertain the slightest doubt that the proper jurisdiction for all these bills is in the Committee on the Judiciary, and although like many of my brethren on that committee I feel a very considerable joy——

Mr. COBB. I would like to propound a question to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] if he has no objection.

Mr. POLAND. I have none.

Mr. COBB. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not the Committee on the Judiciary has taken any action with reference to the retention of the jurisdiction of this subject or the reporting to the House anything further than they reported this morning. Have they taken any action looking to any proposition for a settlement of this land-grant question?

Mr. POLAND. It is true that in the judicial committee we have not proceeded to any hearing of any one of these cases, for the very reason that if the House should determine that these measures should properly go to another committee and be considered there, we did not desire to enter upon the useless ceremony of having the same subject considered by two committees: nor, until we should ascertain what was the judgment of the House in relation to the question of jurisdiction between these two committees, did we deem it advisable to go into a hearing. Not that the Committee on the Judiciary desire to shirk any labor which the House may determine properly devolves upon them or to ask the House to bestow any jurisdiction upon them which does not properly belong to them.

As I was about saying when interrupted by the gentleman, the argument which I think prevailed with members of the Judiciary Committee that it was desirable for us, as we had so much to do, to get rid of this very considerable amount of labor, was, I confess, one that appealed with some force to myself. I am not any more anxious than other people to do more than properly belongs to me; but at the same time, considering that the jurisdiction of these bills belongs properly to that committee, I desire to have it understood by the House that as one member of the committee I should not shrink from any labor properly growing out of the consideration of these bills.

Mr. COBB. Inasmuch as the Judiciary Committee has reported these bills back without any recommendation, I take it that committee, or a majority at least of the committee, do not desire to take jurisdiction of this question. The Committee on the Public Lands has taken jurisdiction of it. If I understand the reading of this bill, it has reference to the Texas Pacific grant, upon which a very full and lengthy report was presented this morning from the Committee on Public Lands by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and that report was accompanied with a bill providing for the forfeiture of this very grant. In view of these facts, and taking into consideration the resolution adopted in this House yesterday by so decided a majority, instructing the Committee on the Public Lands to report bills on this subject, it seems to me there is but one direction that these bills ought to take, and that is to the Committee on the Public Lands. Believing this must be the view of the House, I do not care to occupy further time on the question.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a single word before this matter is disposed of. Questions have been asked as to the action of the Judiciary Committee on this subject and the opinions of the members of that committee. Of course it would be improper for me to refer to the opinion of any individual member. The committee found itself in this position: Bills of this character were referred to both committees. Each committee is the organ of the House. It was for the House to determine under its rules of proceeding which committee should take charge of these bills. But by the action of the House in referring them both committees were ordered to do so. We felt it improper that both committees should consider the same subject; that there should be hearings before each committee of the same parties, which would perhaps bring the two committees to diverse conclusions upon the subject-matter committed to each. In consequence of this, and owing to the request preferred to us by the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on the Judiciary determined to report back the bills to the House for the purpose of submitting to the House the decision of a question which the Committee on the Judiciary did not desire to decide for itself. We mean, therefore, in the language of the report, to say that whatever may be our opinion as to the proper jurisdiction in this case, and while we are perfectly willing to perform any duty that the House may devolve upon us, we do not desire to assert a jurisdiction which the House seems to have left in doubt by making a double reference of these bills. Therefore we stand before the House neither asking to be discharged from their consideration nor asking the House to impose that duty on us to the exclusion of the Committee on Public Lands. We come before the House saying frankly that we are willing to submit to its decision as to the committee it desires shall consider these bills. We are willing to consider them and report upon them if the House so says; if the House says we are not to do so, but the Committee on Public Lands is to discharge that duty, we are willing to forego the jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 111, noes 38.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Bills of the following titles, relating to the forfeiture of railroad land grants, were taken from the Calendar and, on motion of Mr. COBB, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. 175) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Mississippi to aid in the construction of railroads, &c., and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 176) to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to the State of Alabama to aid in the construction of the Savannah and Albany Railroad, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 177) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Arkansas to aid in the construction of railroads, &c., and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 178) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Mississippi to aid in the construction of railroads, &c., and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 179) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Alabama to aid in the construction of railroads, &c., and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 180) to declare forfeited certain lands in the State of Michigan granted to aid in the construction of railroads, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 181) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 182) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Alabama, &c., and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 183) to declare a forfeiture of certain lands granted in aid of certain railroads named, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 184) to declare a forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 185) to declare a forfeiture of certain lands granted to the State of Louisiana to aid in the construction of railroads, &c., and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 186) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Missouri to aid in the construction of railroads, &c., and to enforce the same by proper judicial proceedings;

A bill (H. R. 187) to declare a forfeiture of certain of the lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings; and

A bill (H. R. 188) to declare a forfeiture of certain lands granted to the State of Alabama in aid of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings.

TEXAS PACIFIC LAND GRANT.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3933) relative to the Texas Pacific land grant.

The bill was read.

Mr. PAYSON. The attitude of that bill is this: It was reported this morning from the Committee on the Public Lands, accompanied by a voluminous report which has not yet gone to the Public Printer. If not inconsistent with the practice I move its further consideration be postponed without prejudice until that report can be printed and laid on our desks.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection it will be passed over for the present, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3934) relating to recoveries for infringement of patents.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no damage or profits shall be recovered either in law or equity from any defendant for the infringement of a patent when it shall appear upon the trial that he was a mere user for his own benefit, and not in the manufacture of an article for sale, of any article or device purchased for a valuable consideration in open market without notice, and the same was subject to the patent sued on; but in all such cases the manufacturer or vendor only shall be liable for damages or profits: Provided, That any such user shall be liable for damages and profits for infringement of such patent from and after the time he shall have received notice that the article was subject to such patent if he continue to use the same.

SEC. 2. That when in any case the use complained of was an article or device made by the defendant, or his employé, for his own use and benefit, and not in the manufacture of an article for sale, the measure of recovery shall be a license fee. If in any such case a license fee shall not have been established under the patent or patents sued on, then in any action at law the jury, and in any action in equity the court, shall ascertain what, under all the circumstances of the case, would be a reasonable license fee: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to articles manufactured outside of the United States: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall apply to machinery held for sale or to be used for any manufacturing process whatever.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred sundry bills numbered 419, 1134, 311, 1956, 1250, report the following bill as a substitute for all:

Much complaint has grown up in the country from the practice of persons owning patents, or pretending to own them, allowing the use of an article, sometimes for years, and then sending an agent around and demanding damages from the holders of the article. Great annoyance has been the result. The committee have drawn the substitute so as to protect the innocent purchaser of a patented article, purchased in good faith in the open market, from such annoyance. The manufacturer and seller of a patented implement is the party that ought to be held liable, and not the user of the article who bought and used it innocently, or in other words who did not know he was infringing a patent.

The committee recommend the passage of the substitute.

Mr. VANCE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is not this substantially the same as the bill we passed yesterday?

Mr. VANCE. It is not exactly the same bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will make an explanation of the bill and state the difference between the two propositions.

Mr. VANCE. The other bill has been printed only in the RECORD. This proposition provides that no damages shall be recovered from innocent purchasers of patent-rights in good faith in open market and for their own use, and not for sale. In my judgment it is the better bill. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be again read, as there was some confusion when it was read before.

The bill was again read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. VANCE. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 13.

Mr. KELLEY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. VANCE and Mr. ANDERSON.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, nays 6.

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERKS FOR UNITED STATES COURTS, GEORGIA.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 163) providing for the appointment of clerks of the circuit and district courts in the southern district of Georgia, and that the same be placed on the House Calendar. It seems by some inadvertence that it had not been placed upon the calendar to which it belonged, but on some other calendar. It is of the same character as those that the House has already committed to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill had on it a memorandum from the committee, which indicated its reference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in the southern district of Georgia the circuit and district judges shall appoint two clerks, each of whom shall be clerk of the circuit and district courts for said southern district of Georgia. One of said clerks shall reside and keep his office at Savannah, and the other shall reside and keep his office at Macon. In case of a disagreement between said judges, the appointment of said clerks shall be made by the associate justice of the Supreme Court allotted to the circuit which includes said district.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby amended so far as is necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the immediate consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSIGNMENT OF COMMITTEE-ROOMS.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to present the following report and resolution in reference to a subject referred to it a few days since, with reference to additional accommodations for the various committees of the House. I present the report, with the accompanying resolution, and ask that it be passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution providing for the removal and safety of certain public documents, and for other purposes——

Mr. YOUNG. I desire the report to be read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk had better read the resolution first, which is the usual order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to remove to some safe and suitable place the public records now stored in the large room in the basement of the House side of the Capitol, and that said room, when vacated, be assigned to the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred House resolution in respect to securing suitable accommodations for the committees and officers of the House, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That there is not a sufficient number of rooms in the Capitol building to give a separate one to each committee, and heretofore two or more committees have held their meetings in the same room, in pursuance of some agreement and understanding among themselves, and does not seem to have given rise to any very great inconvenience. The committee think that this method may be continued in respect to all committees of the House except that on Rivers and Harbors, but this being one of the largest and most important of the committees of the House, would require for its accommodation and the proper transaction of its business a large and commodious room. So that if they are assigned to any one of the present committee-rooms, in connection with another committee, one of the larger rooms would necessarily have to be taken, and the frequent meetings which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will be compelled to hold, would render it extremely inconvenient if not wholly impracticable for it to use the same room with one of the more important committees.

It is deemed important that all the committees should, if possible, have rooms in the Capitol building, and that if it should be necessary to procure rooms outside they should be occupied as far as practicable for the use of the Doorkeeper and Clerk for folding and storage purposes. Conforming to this view, the committee have selected for the use and occupancy of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a large room in the basement of the House side of the Capitol near the entrance from the west terrace, which is the only room the committee charged with the duty are able to obtain without appropriating for that purpose some other room already occupied, and which would entail very much inconvenience in the transaction of public business. But this room is at present used for storing valuable public records, which are by sections 1808 and 1809 of the Revised Statutes placed in the custody and under the charge of the Chief of Engineers, and should, in the judgment of the committee, be removed to such place of safety as the Secretary of War may select. The committee believe that the Secretary of War has ample power under the laws cited to remove these records to a more suitable place at his own discretion without any action of the House on the subject, and they have reason to believe that he would be entirely willing to do so upon the mere request of the committee. But it is deemed proper for the House to pass a resolution requesting such removal, and the committee have prepared the necessary one and submit it at the same time with this report, and ask that it be adopted by the House. If this recommendation of the committee should not be acceptable to the House then they have but one other alternative to submit, which is, to rent additional rooms somewhere outside of the Capitol building. General Butler and Mr. A. W. Fletcher, owners of property near the Capitol, have proposed to rent their buildings to the Government for the purpose indicated; but the committee have entered into no negotiations with them in respect to details upon that subject, and await future instructions of the House in that regard. The committee are of the opinion that the arrangements which they propose will, for the present, meet the wants of the House for the proper transaction of its business, with such disposition as they think can be made in respect to the remaining committees which are not already provided with rooms, and therefore recommend the adoption of this report and the accompanying resolution.

Mr. YOUNG. The committee have encountered no little difficulty in discharging the very delicate task assigned us by the House. We discovered in the outset of our investigations in this matter that all the committee-rooms in the House available for the purpose of committee meetings were already appropriated to some one of the different House committees, and that in some of the rooms two or more committees were holding their meetings. We conferred with the chairmen of many of the leading committees and with several officers and many members of the House, and we discovered that, however anxious we might be to accommodate the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with a suitable room convenient to the Hall of the House, to which members might at any and all times have access, if we did so we should seriously disturb committees already in the occupancy of the rooms and disarrange and retard very much the transaction of the business of the different officers.

We endeavored to compromise this vexed and delicate question by getting gentlemen who were already occupying rooms large enough for the accommodation of this important committee to vacate them and occupy other rooms, but we have been unable to accomplish that result. It was proposed at one time before our committee that some one of the rooms occupied at present by the Clerk of the House should be vacated by him and turned over for the use of this committee. Upon consultation, however, with that officer, his employés, and many members of the House, we discovered that to do this would most probably entail very serious inconvenience in the convenient transaction of the business which the members must necessarily have with the Clerk and his employés.

Another proposition was suggested, and to some extent discussed: that we should go outside of the Capitol and rent rooms in some contiguous building, if it were manifest that there was not sufficient accommodation within the building for the committees and the transaction of the official business of the House by its officers. The committee, upon full consultation on that aspect of the case, was of the opinion that it would be better if possible to retain all the committees inside of the Capitol building, and if it should become absolutely necessary in order to the proper dispatch of the public business to obtain additional rooms and additional accommodation outside of the Capitol, it would be better that we should appropriate it for the use of the Clerk and Doorkeeper, for storage and folding purposes, in view of the vast number of documents that are under their charge.

We consulted very fully with the Architect of the Capitol and the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, Colonel Rockwell; and under all the circumstances, desiring as far as possible to accommodate our recommendation to the convenience and wishes of all gentlemen interested, we found ourselves unable to make any better recommendation for the immediate accommodation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors than is embraced in the recommendation and report I have just submitted.

We were aware of the fact, and we fully appreciated its importance, that this committee, one of the largest in the House, is charged with the conduct of the most important business that will probably come before us and the country for consideration. We are anxious to give them such room and such accommodation as would be fitting and becoming to a committee of its importance and dignity, and if we have failed in obtaining this end, it has not been for lack of a desire to do so.

Under the embarrassments with which we were surrounded, and in view of the various conflicting interests which we felt it our duty as far as possible to meet and reconcile, we found it impossible to arrive at any conclusion or to make any definite recommendation that in our judgment would give more general satisfaction to the House than the one embodied in the report I have submitted. If, in the language of the report, our recommendation does not meet the approval of the House, we submit but one further alternative, though our judgment is against its adoption if it can be avoided—that is, to go outside and rent rooms enough for all the committees and for all the officers of the House not already supplied. The committee do not believe that this course is desirable. They believe it is better, if possible, that all the committees should be retained within the Capitol building; and if it becomes absolutely necessary, as we are of the opinion it will be, to seek rooms and accommodations outside, to appropriate those to the use of the Doorkeeper and the Clerk of the House.

The committee have no pride or special interest in maintaining this report. They submit it with great deference to the judgment of the House. If that should be against us, we will certainly have no complaint to make.

One word further. We find that the room which we propose to appropriate to the use of this committee is at present, and has been for years, used for the storage of very important public records—records affecting the title of all the Government property in the District of Columbia, as well as a very large amount of that held by private individuals. These have been stored there for years under the direction of various officers of the Government; and by direction of a law carried into the Revised Statutes, to which I shall presently call attention, have for all this time been under the custody and control of the Secretary of War or his subordinate, the Chief of Engineers. While these records are stored away at this distance from the War Department and from the subordinate officer charged with their care, very great inconvenience has resulted from carrying them into the different courts of the District to be used in determining questions of title. In every litigation that has sprung up with reference to titles in the District of Columbia it has been necessary to transfer to the court-room, in the custody of an officer of the Government, whatever of these records it was necessary to use in determining the question involved in such litigation.

We had before us this morning the representative of the Secretary of War, and it was his opinion that these records should be removed from the place of their present storage and transferred either to the Winder building or to such rooms as might be selected in the War Department building by the Secretary of War; and in that opinion the committee, I believe, unanimously concur. We have been unable to find any law upon the statute-book which forbids such action by the Secretary of War. The only provision we have been able to find that has any apparent application to the question is embraced in the two sections of the Revised Statutes to which we have called attention in our report. I send them up, and ask the Clerk to read, for the information of the House, sections 1808 and 1809 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1808. He [the Chief of Engineers] shall be furnished official apartments in one of the public buildings in the city of Washington, as may be directed by the President, and shall be supplied by the Government with the stationery, instruments, books, and furniture which may be required for the performance of his duties.

SEC. 1809. He shall keep in his office a complete record of all the lands and other property connected with or belonging to the Washington Aqueduct and other public works under his charge, together with accurate plans and surveys of the public grounds and reservations in the District of Columbia.

Mr. YOUNG. Being unable to find any other law upon this subject, the committee were of the opinion that under these sections of the Revised Statutes the Secretary of War had ample authority to remove these records to a place of safety without any action on the part of the House, but we deemed it safer and better to submit the question to the House, and if it should be of opinion that it is necessary to pass the resolution I have offered, then we ask that it shall be done. I have no doubt, from the information which we received this morning from his subordinate, that the Secretary of War, upon a mere request of the committee, would readily make this removal; but perhaps it may be better to pass the resolution.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman how the Clerk of the House would be so seriously inconvenienced by the occupation of any of the rooms now in his possession.

Mr. YOUNG. I will answer that question as best I can. We have taken the judgment of a number of members of the House on that subject, and we have consulted with the Clerk himself. The inconvenience which has been pointed out to us would consist in this, the only room now used by the Clerk in the transaction of his business that would be large enough to furnish adequate accommodations for this large committee of the House is the room now occupied by the enrolling clerks—three or four clerks, occupying as many desks, and who are almost constantly employed enrolling bills; a very responsible and important duty.

It may be asked, and I will answer the question in advance, why the enrolling clerks might not be removed to the room at present occupied by the Clerk himself. The answer to that is that if the Clerk should be removed from that room he would necessarily be obliged to transfer his office to an inconvenient distance from the Hall of the House. Now, at almost every hour of the day some one of the members of the House has business with the Clerk, and it would involve very serious inconvenience and considerable loss of time if members should have to search throughout the Capitol to find his room.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. Where did the Clerk have his office before the last session of Congress?

Mr. YOUNG. I will answer that question as far as I am able. At former sessions the Clerk had the room now occupied by the Speaker, and the Speaker had a room in the west end of what is now the open lobby back of the Speaker's chair. By a resolution of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which met the approval of the House, that lobby was thrown open, the partitions removed, and the room of the Speaker was transferred to its present location.

I think the Clerk then moved into the adjoining room, which had been occupied by his Chief Clerk and various other subordinates, though I believe he had a private room somewhere in the basement where he transacted that portion of his official business which should necessarily be transacted somewhat in private. The room now occupied by the Clerk was, up to the Forty-seventh Congress, I believe, occupied by the Committee on Naval Affairs. By some arrangement made at the beginning of that Congress, the nature of which I am not informed of, that room was then assigned to the Clerk of the House and has since been occupied by him.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have the impression that that was done by order of the Speaker before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was appointed.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not know about that; it was done during the last Congress, when I was not here, and the room is now occupied by the Clerk of the House. He there keeps his private clerk, transacts his private business, and confers with his subordinates. It is the only place now about the Capitol where the Clerk can transact business of that character.

To remove the enrolling clerks from the room they now occupy to any great distance from the Hall of the House of Representatives would involve very serious consequences, which will be appreciated by every member of this House. Every one with any experience on this floor knows the haste with which business is transacted in the closing hours of the session, and the importance that bills should reach the enrolling clerks promptly and be returned to the Speaker for his signature. Bills have been lost which have passed both Houses, and failed to become laws because they could not be returned from the enrolling clerks in time to receive the signature of the Speaker.

I am myself of the opinion, and I think the majority of the committee concurs with me, that to remove the Clerk of the House and his subordinates in the enrolling-room from the rooms they now occupy would involve perhaps more inconvenience than to select rooms outside of the Capitol building for some of the less important committees.

The committee believe that if the House shall decide to go outside of the Capitol building to secure additional accommodations it would be better to send to such outside rooms some of the committees now occupying rooms in the Capitol building which would be large enough for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and appropriate some such room to that committee.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. YOUNG. Very well.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommend that certain committee-rooms of the House be so assigned that there shall be two or more committees in a room.

Mr. YOUNG. That has already been done by action of former Congresses, and we found that arrangement in existence.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That has been done?

Mr. YOUNG. That is the custom now. There are one or two, perhaps four, of the smaller committees that have not yet been accommodated with rooms. If our recommendations contained in this report should meet the approval of the House, I think we can dispose of all the remaining committees in a manner entirely satisfactory to them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Has the committee recommended such assignment?

Mr. YOUNG. We have not yet. We have made partial recommendations, but we do not think it will be necessary to report to the House our conclusions in that respect, because we think the chairmen of those committees not already provided with rooms will be content to occupy such rooms as we may be able to assign them.

I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. As a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the room now occupied as the enrolling-room of the House be set apart for the use of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors until the further order of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that a very difficult and delicate duty has rested upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I am not surprised, therefore, that they express in their report the conclusion that they have been unable satisfactorily to discharge that duty. I do not hesitate to say that no gentleman on this floor who is personally acquainted with the location of the room designated by the committee whose report has just been read would by his vote say that any committee of this House should be so assigned. There are questions of health and other questions which can not be discussed upon the floor of this House, but which are understood by all present, and which are conclusive upon the judgment of the committee. They have therefore simply reported the fact that, while that is not a proper or desirable room, it is the only vacant room obtainable.

Now, that brings us face to face with the necessity of making a judgment as to other rooms of the House; and while it would not be proper on a question of this kind for one committee to antagonize another, it is perfectly proper, as every gentleman will recognize, for us to look around and see what space may now be occupied by subordinate officers that can be utilized for the public necessities as existing in the demands of the committee named in my amendment.

I state what is known to all the members of this House when I say that two things are to be considered in locating a room for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The first and the lesser of these two considerations is the convenience of members of the committee. The character of the work which they have to discharge is such as to require their time night and day; and when the river and harbor bill is being prepared for the action of this House, that committee will be almost continuously in session, night and day. Now it is not right—and no gentleman on this floor will by his vote say it is right—to take the members of this committee away from the Hall of the House so far that they can not be within easy call when important questions are pending here which demand their attention and their votes. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] now before me, who has served for many years as a member of the committee that has had this bill in charge, will indorse what I say in this particular. That gentleman, as well as the former chairman of the committee and indeed every gentleman on the floor of the House, knows that it frequently becomes necessary to send for members of the committee, that they may vote here upon legislation affecting their constituents or affecting their common country; and it would not be right to place them in a remote part of this building, where they would be as ignorant of the proceedings going on here as if they were out of the Capitol altogether.

That, I say, is a minor consideration. A greater one is the convenience and comfort of members themselves. Nearly every member on this floor, I predict—I hope my prediction will not be verified—will have some bill pending before that committee upon which he will desire, at the proper time, to be heard in behalf of his constituents. It has been customary to send pages to notify gentlemen of different delegations when the committee could hear them for ten, fifteen, or twenty minutes. If they are compelled, when thus notified, to go from the floor of this House to where this hole or room designated by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is located, most of the members of this House, unless they had a guide, would never be able to ascertain the whereabouts of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and all of them would consume from ten to fifteen minutes in going to and fro. I say, therefore, that for the convenience of members of the House it is essential that the room of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should be accessible to them in a few moments, so that they can present their statements and return to the House to vote.

Now, as to the proposition embraced in this resolution, I understand that the corner room, now occupied by the Clerk of the House, was never assigned by any order whatever——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understand that there are five clerks' desks in the room to which the gentleman's resolution refers, the enrolling-room. Now, what provision is made or contemplated for these if that room be appropriated to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. WILLIS. My reply is that according to my understanding the Clerk of the House, in addition to the enrolling-room and the file-room and the corner room, has five other rooms in this Capitol. That is my information.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But that does not answer my question.

Mr. WILLIS. As to the enrolling-room, which, as I recognize, should be in close proximity to the Hall of the House, it will be easy for the Clerk to remove the enrolling officers to the corner room to which I have referred, which was taken, as I understand, without any resolution and without any authority. It was formerly the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs, but during the last Congress was taken by the Clerk of the House, as I am informed, without any authority from this House to do so.

A MEMBER. In the Congress before the last.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. I find it provided in Rule I that the Speaker—shall preserve order and decorum, and in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries, or in the lobby, may cause the same to be cleared.

He shall have general control, except as provided by rule or law, of the Hall of the House, and the disposal of the unappropriated rooms in that part of the Capitol assigned to the use of the House until further order.

Now, sir, I make the point of order that this question of rooms and which committee shall have a room is for the Speaker to decide. The gentleman's speech, therefore, would be more appropriate in the Democratic caucus than before this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that it is the duty of the Speaker to assign appropriated rooms. The rule is as read, that the Speaker shall have control over unappropriated rooms.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The point I make is this: At the beginning of this session, when the Speaker was elected it became his duty to assign to these committees—but allow me a moment, as I wish to read further in reference to the Speaker. "Unless otherwise specially authorized by the House, the Speaker shall appoint at the commencement of each Congress the following standing committees," and so on. Now, in this list of committees is the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. What use have they for a room? Then we have the Committee on Labor. We also have the Committee on Mileage, which has already disposed of their work.

Mr. WILLIS. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I am confining myself to the point of order. And my point is this: that it became the duty of the Speaker at the beginning of the session to appoint to each one of these committees, in accordance with its number and the proportion of work it had to do, such a room as is suited to it. This matter should have been settled in a caucus, and not brought here as an obstable to our proceeding with the consideration of the public business.

The SPEAKER. Whatever may have been the duty of the Speaker is not, of course, the question before the House. The point of order can not be sustained here, because the House itself, by resolution adopted only a few days ago, has referred this whole matter to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and directed it to make inquiry and report. And that committee has made inquiry, and its report is now under consideration by the House. The House itself referred this whole matter by resolution to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with, I hope, becoming Christian resignation to the rebuke of my colleague, and I now merely mean to say that upon no question of law or propriety or of right will this House ever be compelled to take his judgment on the subject.

Coming back, Mr. Speaker, to the point I was making as to the propriety of taking the enrolling-room, I ask gentlemen, then, if there is any question as to having that enrollment in close proximity to the House. It is easy to put the enrolling clerks into the room now occupied by the Clerk himself as a reading-room, and there are reasons why the enrolling clerk should be by himself. We know the necessity of his being accurate in the examination of bills, and we know grave errors have, through the rush of business and a crowding of men around the enrolling clerk, occurred in the legislation of this country, and it is for that reason I have changed the resolution so as to permit the Clerk of the House to put the enrolling clerk in a room where he can lock the door and see no one has a right to enter that room while he is engaged in examining laws.

Mr. YOUNG. But where will the gentleman put the Clerk of the House, who now occupies that room?

Mr. WILLIS. Where he was formerly; that is, before the last Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I think a committee of this House should have the preference over the Clerk of the House, provided the public business is not in any way injured thereby.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. When did the Clerk of the House not have a room on this floor?

Mr. RANDALL. In the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Unless for a brief time, I understand that the Clerk of the House always had a room on this floor.

Mr. RANDALL. No, in the Forty-sixth Congress the Clerk was downstairs. The gentleman from Kentucky is correct in his statement that the room now occupied by the Clerk during the Forty-sixth Congress was the room which was occupied by the Committee on Naval Affairs; and that room was taken during the Forty-seventh Congress from that Committee on Naval Affairs and given to the Clerk, without any action on the part of the House.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Is not that room now occupied by some committee?

Mr. RANDALL. It may have been, but during the Forty-sixth Congress, as I have already stated, that room was occupied by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Clerk of the House did not then have the benefit of a room on this floor.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. As I understand it that was merely temporary.

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. It is a matter of great importance to the House, and to the other members of the House as well as to the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that that committee should have a room convenient and accessible. There is no one committee of the House which sits so steadily as that committee. There is no one committee of the House that has so many delegations of citizens coming here to attend to the wants of their districts. At times there are delegations of twenty, thirty, and forty who come here desiring to appear before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That was formerly the case with the Committee on Commerce, and will be the case with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. They come here for the purpose of presenting their claims or the claims of their districts to appropriations for rivers and harbors in their neighborhood. In consequence of that fact it is necessary the rooms should be commodious and large, so as to accommodate the members of the committee as well as these delegations.

It is also important to the members of the committee that it should be near the floor of the House. While the committee is in session it is frequently necessary they should come in to vote. And that is another reason why the room should be convenient and near the floor of the House.

Now, sir, with reference to the accommodations, there is not a doubt, and I venture to assert that there is not a gentleman who will examine the question and give it a personal inspection who will doubt, but that the enrolling clerks can be abundantly accommodated by the present reading-room. If any gentleman chooses while this debate is in progress to go into the enrolling-room and see the room now occupied by the clerks of the House, he will find abundant accommodations there for the enrolling clerks; and the question resolves itself simply into this, whether or not the Clerk of the House shall occupy a single room as a reading-room, with the files of the newspapers before him, or a committee of the House shall be denied all proper accommodations. It narrows itself right down to that simple question, and it strikes me that the natural order of things is that the committees of the House for the proper transaction of its work should receive first suitable accommodations, and that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should provide a room convenient, and one that will not interfere in any way with the progress of the business of the House, for the Clerk.

I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say simply to the members of this House that I am not advised as to the condition of the room now occupied by the Clerk, but I do know that the room selected by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, if assigned as they propose, would be a simple outrage upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and not only that, but it would be an outrage upon the members of this House; and not only that, Mr. Speaker, but upon the people of this country who present themselves before that committee for the purpose of having a hearing.

That committee, if it does its work, is compelled to sit for four long months on an average of from four to five days in the week, and towards the last part of the session they work from three to four evenings in the week, and also during the sessions of the House. I say, and I think the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of this present Congress will bear me out in the assertion, having had more experience than I have had, that of the old work of the Committee on Commerce more than four-fifths of it was in considering the river and harbor appropriation bill. It is not uncommon to have large delegations appear with maps, books, and illustrations, and they can not do the work of that committee without a large, well-lighted, properly arranged room.

This, as I understand it, the report of the committee to whom the duty of appropriating these rooms was assigned does not contemplate. They provide a room in the basement of this House. It is simply doing a thing which the people of this country and the members of this House ought not to permit. That committee should be, if there is any room in this building adapted to their purposes, supplied with the very best one possible. And let me say further, that in the consideration by the committee of this river and harbor bill members here will want to be heard before it. During the last Congress we heard at least three-fourths of all of the members on the floor who came in to make their explanations and applications in support of what they believed to be a proper distribution of the bill. They thought that the commerce of their people ought to be understood. Now, sir, there are committees who have commodious rooms that do not meet on an average once a week. These men here, if they do their duty, will be required to sit hour in and hour out for a long period of time, for the labor of that committee is simply enormous, and we should look to their health as well as their convenience, and not confine them to a basement room, where it is barbarous to expect and impossible for them to attend to their important duties.

I can not see how the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds could have understood the enormous duties of this committee and confined them to such a room. I suppose they had great difficulty in finding vacant room which might be occupied by the committee; but certainly for the present it seems that no difficulty should arise from allowing the committee to occupy the room of the Clerk of the House to which reference has already been made, and make temporary provision for the Clerk. A committee performing the duties that this committee must perform, as I have said, under any circumstances should have the preference. It should have a committee-room near the House and in the most accessible part, and not a place where people can not find it, where members who have occasion to go will find difficulty in reaching it and objection to entering it.

Now I wish to yield the remainder of my time, without request, to the gentleman the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of this House, who has had considerable experience on this subject.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HORR. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman from Michigan point out to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds some such room as he has described, which will accommodate the Committee on Rivers and Harbors? I wish to say to him that the committee has been as desirous as he himself seems to be to find a room that would accommodate that committee. I fully recognize the necessity of their having a large and commodious room; and the only reason why the committee have not provided such a room is the simple fact that they have not been able to find it. If the gentleman will point out such a room, or where it is to be found, to accommodate the committee in the way we wish and in the way we believe it should be accommodated, I have no doubt that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, if they have any other duty to perform in that direction, will be exceedingly glad to do it.

Mr. HORR. I was about to yield to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the gentleman from Texas, but I want to say to the gentleman from Maine that I am not on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but that if I was I should have found some room adjacent to this Hall for that committee or else I would report none at all for them. I certainly should not recommend the putting of them in the basement of this building, in a room where they could not perform the duties safely. That is my idea.

Mr. CANNON. The question is now, I believe, on the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], to take the enrolling-room across the hallway. Does the gentleman think—the enrolling-room being for the convenience of the House, and it is a great convenience to members to have it near the Hall when they have their records there—does he think it proper the House should discommode itself in that way for the purpose of accommodating this committee? I agree the committee should be located in a good room, but I do not think it should be at the expense of the convenience of all the members of this House.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. HORR. And I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a question. Will you tell me that the enrolling clerk can not be accommodated where he used to be before the last Congress?

Mr. CANNON. That place is occupied, as I understand. And I do not want you to turn the enrolling clerk with his records, that nearly all of us have to inquire about daily, out of his quarters, unless you find some good quarters for him to remove to where he can be properly accommodated.

Mr. HORR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] has no time to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. YOUNG. I yield first to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. CALKINS. Before the gentleman from Tennessee yields I desire to get some information from him as to the number of clerks who now occupy the enrolling-room.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I am about to furnish that information. I have here a letter from the Clerk of the House which I desire to have read.

Mr. YOUNG. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The SPEAKER. There are seventeen minutes still remaining of the hour under the control of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to ask the Chair a question. I desire to know whether the members of the committee have a right to be heard or whether the hour of the gentleman from Tennessee closes debate.

The SPEAKER. The hour of the gentleman from Tennessee does not exhaust debate. Debate is not closed till the previous question is ordered.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to be heard myself.

The SPEAKER. The letter sent up to the desk by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] will be read as a part of his remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIR: Being advised that a resolution will be submitted in the House assigning one of the rooms now occupied by the Clerk's office for use as a committee-room, I deem it proper, in the interest of the prompt and proper dispatch of the public business, to submit to the House for its consideration, through you, the following statement: From the occupation of the present Hall in the Thirty-fifth Congress until the Forty-fifth Congress the Clerk's office, with the exception of the rooms used on the lower floor for store and document rooms, was in rooms adjacent to the Hall. In the Forty-fifth Congress the room in the southwest corner, which had been occupied since 1858 by the Clerk, was assigned to the Speaker, and the room adjoining, occupied by the Chief Clerk and disbursing clerk, was assigned to the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Chief Clerk and disbursing clerk being assigned their present rooms on the lower floor. That assignment subjected members to some inconvenience, but the Clerk's office, with its very considerable increase of business in the past twenty years, to more.

At present there are but three rooms on the floor adjacent to the Hall of the House occupied by the Clerk, viz: one occupied by the Clerk in the room formerly occupied by the Committee on Naval Affairs; one known as the file-room, occupied by the file, journal, bill, and printing clerks, and their assistants, tally and reading clerks; and one known as the enrolling-room, occupied by the enrolling clerk, assistant enrolling clerk, petition and resolution clerk, newspaper and document clerk, and distributing clerk, both of which last-named rooms are now fully occupied, and causing at times great inconvenience to the employés named.

The file-room is filled up with cases for files and records, and could not be taken for a committee-room without seriously disarranging the files, and would require a very considerable expenditure of money.

The enrolling-room is fully occupied by the clerks named, who are required to be in immediate proximity to the Hall in order to properly as well as promptly discharge their several duties, and a transfer of such clerks to the lower floor or to a distant part of the House wing of the Capitol would cause delays and inconvenience in the transaction of public business.

They could not be transferred to the file-room, for that is already overcrowded, and the small room known as the "file-room annex" could not be used for that purpose, being not only occupied by valuable files and records, but it is not warmed.

The only remaining room is that occupied by the Clerk, who, in the very nature of the case, is required to have an office adjacent to the Hall; and if that room be taken from him and he be assigned a room elsewhere, it will not only greatly inconvenience the members of the House and the public generally, but will seriously inconvenience the Clerk in the discharge of the duties devolving upon him by law and the rules and orders of the House.

It is not a matter of mere personal inconvenience, but the consideration of the proper discharge of my official duties, that induces me to address you this communication.

I am, very respectfully,

JOHN B. CLARK, JR.,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Hon. WILLIAM H. HATCH.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. YOUNG. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the proposition to take the room occupied by the Clerk. I do not think it would be wise to interfere with any of the business rooms. I should only consent to the change suggested with reference to the Clerk's room on the ground that it is possible he might be able to get along with his desk somewhere else with less inconvenience than a whole committee such as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors can get along without a suitable room.

Something was said by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], and I suppose accurately said, about there having been a change of the Naval Committee from that room without authority of the House. But what the gentleman said may have left the impression on the minds of some that the change was made without authority. The statement was exactly accurate. That change was made before the organization of the last Congress, before any committees were appointed, before any assignment had taken place. The doubt that has arisen is not relative to the power of the Speaker under the rules to assign committees, but it has been relative to his power to reassign them after they have once gone to their rooms. And that I understand to be the doubt in the mind of the present Speaker and others. There was no doubt, I suppose, about the right to assign this room to the Clerk, and it was done on a theory of this kind, that it would accommodate not only the Clerk but all the members who wanted to communicate with the Clerk there. He proposed to keep, and during the Forty-seventh Congress did keep, a reading-room there with newspapers on file where members could go and read them if they chose, and also where members could go and consult with newspaper correspondents and others on any subject they desired to talk about. It was in one sense a private room, but only in the way that there was no other room where members could go for such conference, leaving them only the halls, where it would be very inconvenient and sometimes unpleasant.

Mr. YOUNG. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON. I fully concur with all that was said by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] in appreciation of the difficulty that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had in making an allotment of rooms. I recognize the fact that a number of standing committees had heretofore been assigned the different rooms that were available in the Capitol; and I recognize the fact that however important or unimportant the business of a committee may be, yet the committee, having been appointed, is entitled to a room to meet in, and having had a room assigned them, they do not like to be turned out and ought not to be turned out. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, being a new one, was left without a room, or rather was created without a room, and it became necessary for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to give to us some room that had been formerly occupied for some other purpose. Like my friend from Michigan [Mr. HORR] I am surprised that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds did not report absolutely their inability to accommodate that committee, rather than report to this House a proposition to put a committee composed of members of this body in a room which they themselves say has not been occupied for years and that must be musty.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. That room is occupied now, and has been for a number of years.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand that, but it is not occupied by people; it is a store-room for matters which render it unhealthful.

I desire to ask this House if they will permit a room in this Capitol building to be used as a loafing-room for the members of this House or for any officer of the House while an important committee has no room to go in? I would like the Clerk of the House to have every convenience; I would like that every member of this House could have every convenience; I would be glad if every member on this floor could have every convenience which this nation in its dignity and power can give them; but if some one must yield, we demand of this House, if they expect the River and Harbor Committee to discharge its onerous work, to consider intelligently and honestly the important propositions that may be brought before us, to deal intelligently and honestly with great questions of public interest, that they shall give us a decent room in which we can meet and investigate.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asked the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] whether the members of this House should not consult their own convenience, and whether in consulting that convenience it was not necessary that the room of the Clerk should be where they could conveniently go for consulting the records. I undertake to reply to that question by saying that this House will consult its own convenience when it provides means by which every committee shall be capable of discharging the duties devolved upon it. There is no other or higher convenience belonging to this body than to properly equip and locate its committees so that they may discharge their duties. In the proper discharge of the duties of each committee will be found the convenience and honor of this House.

I hope this House will have no hesitation in adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS]. It is not in the nature of an attack upon the committee submitting this report, for I understand that they frankly and generously say they have found themselves surrounded by these difficulties and do not desire to antagonize either a subordinate officer of the House or a committee of the House. They therefore come here to the House and represent the true facts of the case and ask the House to relieve them by deciding the question. We now ask the House to relieve them of the responsibility and to give to this important committee a room where it can meet and where every member of the House can go and consult them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to occupy that time myself, though if other gentlemen desire to speak I have no wish to abridge debate.

Mr. RICE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:
"And that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire if other and additional accommodations can not be procured for the Library of Congress, by which the space in the Capitol now used for the Library can be utilized for committee-rooms, and report the same."

Mr. RANDALL. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not germane to the original proposition.

Mr. RICE. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] provides that this room shall be assigned to the committee named until otherwise directed by the House. I desire to offer an amendment, in order that other space and more convenient may be provided at an early day, not only for this committee but for other committees of the House which shall need that additional space.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] take the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] off the floor? He has three minutes left of his time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not take it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He wants to take it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] to state that he did not desire to occupy the three minutes remaining of his time.

Mr. YOUNG. The Chair misunderstood me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not proceed to address the House.

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] said that he desired to offer an amendment, and I waited to hear it read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to occupy the three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. YOUNG. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have no disposition to combat the views expressed by any gentleman on this subject. They desire only to lay before the House the result of their investigation, and to allow the House to dispose of the matter as it may see proper.

But there is a part of the resolution reported by the committee which ought to be adopted, even though the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] shall prevail. Should the amendment be adopted by the House, the latter part of the resolution reported by the committee should be stricken out and the former part should be adopted, providing for the removal of these records to the War Department, in order that we may utilize that room for some other purpose. That room might be used by the Doorkeeper as a folding-room, and thus avoid the necessity of going outside of the Capitol building to procure additional accommodations for him. Therefore, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky should be adopted by the House, I shall ask that the first part of the resolution of the committee be also adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has been recognized, and has sent up an amendment against which the point of order is made that it is not germane to the subject upon which the committee has reported. Has the gentleman anything to say upon the point of order?

Mr. RICE. A word, Mr. Speaker. It appears that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were only able to find an exceedingly inconvenient and ill-fitted room to assign to this important committee, and they made their report accordingly. It was stated that if they could have found a better room they would have gladly assigned it to this committee. Then the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moved his amendment assigning another room, thereby crowding out important officers of the House with important records from space which seems to be needed for the proper transactian of their business. That amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky only provides, however, that this room shall be assigned to this committee until otherwise ordered by the House. Now, therefore, my amendment proposes to instruct this committee to inquire whether the space now occupied by the public library—most inconveniently occupied by that library because the library has outgrown its present accommodations—may not be converted into convenient committee-rooms at an early day by providing accommodations elsewhere for the public library. Let that be done, and there will be at least eight or ten additional committee-rooms provided for committees of this House from the space which would be thus obtained.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How long would it take to make provision for the library?

Mr. RICE. It would take longer than I wish it would.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And longer than this Congress will remain in session.

Mr. RICE. But this House can commence the relief, so that in the next Congress the House may find space for its committees, and not be confined to the small and poorly fitted rooms in which now many of our committees are compelled to transact their business.

Mr. RANDALL. Upon the point of order, I wish to say that the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] proposes to instruct this committee upon a subject not within the purview of the original resolution.

The SPEAKER. The matter now before the House is privileged, because it relates to the comfort and convenience of the committees of the House and to the transaction of the public business by the House. To attach to this proposition some matter which is not privileged, for instance, to instruct this committee, when the House has under consideration a privileged matter, to proceed to make inquiry as to the erection of a library building, would be in the opinion of the Chair a violation not only of the letter but the spirit of the rules of the House. The Chair therefore holds that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. KASSON. I will detain the House but a moment, for I think it time that we should come to a vote on this question. It seems to me there is one proposition which has not been discussed, and which might solve this difficulty if the question were recommitted. Near to the room occupied by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures is a room which is devoted merely to business about which there is never haste, the room known as the stationery-room. It is on this floor; it is convenient and large.

As to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], I feel, from some experience of the necessities of the business of the House near the close of a session, that it would be a very dangerous movement for us to remove any portion of the Clerk's office from the immediate vicinity of the Hall of this House. It does not matter now, when business is light, but when we approach the close of the session and business is hurried, when members of the House must trace their bills, and when upon a minute depends often whether a bill becomes a law or not, I feel it would be very dangerous if any portion of our Clerk's office, having charge of such important papers, should be out of the immediate reach of every member. All the committees are interested in this element of convenience and safety. I know of no legislative or deliberative body that puts the clerks in charge of its important papers away from its immediate vicinity.

I have myself been frequently obliged to go in great haste to these officers to refer to a bill or other paper while a debate was in progress here, and when every minute was important. I have seen clerks rushing to the other end of the Capitol at the close of a session, when the fate of important bills depended upon almost a moment. I believe these reasons to be important, and that every gentleman on the floor will feel their importance as the end of the session approaches.

Mr. BAYNE. Do not the considerations to which the gentleman refers apply to only a very brief period of the session?

Mr. KASSON. But that brief period determines the fate of important measures. Your very river and harbor bill itself might depend for its passage upon immediate access to these clerks for the correction of some error in the last stages of the session. Every old member of the House, I think, must have had this sort of experience, and must appreciate the importance of these considerations.

Without desiring to say at all what disposition should be made of the rooms already appropriated to committees (for that is not my province; I do not wish to interfere with that), I believe there are other arrangements which could be safely made—possibly the one I have suggested. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that there will soon come a time in the last days of the session when, I believe, members will regret the removal of the clerks out of immediate reach; and I hear no arrangement suggested which preserves them in so convenient a location as they are now.

Mr. YOUNG. I demand the previous question on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I would like to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order while the demand for the previous question is pending.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] as a substitute for the resolution reported by the committee.

The substitute of Mr. WILLIS was adopted; there being—ayes 120, noes 62.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon agreeing to the resolution as amended by the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. YOUNG. I move to strike out so much of the resolution as directs the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to occupy this room, and I ask the passage of the remaining part of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The substitute has been adopted.

Mr. YOUNG. I move to strike out so much of the resolution reported by the committee——

The SPEAKER. It has been disposed of, as the House has adopted the substitute.

Mr. YOUNG. I move an amendment to the substitute; to add so much of the resolution reported by the committee as relates to the removing of the records. Those records should be removed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the words the gentleman proposes to add to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to remove to some safe and suitable place the public records now stored in the large room in the basement on the House side of the Capitol.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to add that this room be assigned by the Speaker to some committee of the House.

Mr. YOUNG. That can be done hereafter. It is needed for storage purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I wish to move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Would that not be in the third degree?

The SPEAKER. There is but one amendment pending, and this would be in the second degree.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I ask that my amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors having taken away all the business of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River they take its committee-room also, and that the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River be abolished.

[Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. All right; let us adopt that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides the amendment is not in order.

Mr. YOUNG. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have an amendment to submit.

Mr. YOUNG. Is it in order to offer an amendment when I have called for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland has been recognized.

Mr. TALBOTT. I ask the Clerk to read my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Committee on Naval Affairs shall occupy the room occupied by that committee in the Forty-sixth Congress, and the Clerk of the House shall occupy the room now occupied by the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is that amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is, as it is in relation to the assignment of committee-rooms.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it in order when the previous question has been called?

The SPEAKER. The amendment is before the House.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, that room is opposite the room of the Committee on Military Affairs, and prior to the Forty-seventh Congress was occupied for more than ten years by the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was taken away from that committee and the committee was removed upstairs by an order of the Speaker in the Forty-seventh Congress before the appointment of the committees. The room should be restored to the committee as soon as it can be done. And if the Clerk wishes a room where the enrolling clerks can not be interrupted, where they can not be disturbed, that room upstairs is the very place for him to go. My amendment gives the room which belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs to that committee, which occupied it for ten years before the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes; for more than twenty years.

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes; for more than twenty years. It is opposite to the Military Committee room, where it ought to be.

Mr. YOUNG. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question first recurred on Mr. TALBOTT'S amendment to the amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 145, noes 29.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to recommit the subject to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as that committee can arrange the rooms better than it can be done here.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 105.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So Mr. HOLMAN'S motion was rejected.

Mr. YOUNG'S amendment as amended was then adopted.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. YOUNG moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 23, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1090) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district court in the northern district of New York; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 119) making an appropriation for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the Lady Franklin Bay expedition to the Arctic regions.

JOHN C. HARGRAVE.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill (S. 361) granting a pension to John C. Hargrave was yesterday reported adversely by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] from the Committee on Pensions, and indefinitely postponed. I did not hear the name at the time, and I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely, so that it may be placed on the Calendar. The bill was favorably reported at one or two Congresses and passed this body, and I am at a loss to know why it was reported adversely at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate yesterday postponing indefinitely the bill indicated by him be reconsidered and that the bill be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 16th instant, the opinion of the Attorney-General of June 22, 1883, on the so-called longevity clauses of the naval appropriation acts of August 5, 1882, and March 3, 1883; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, submitting copies of reports from Maj. A. M. Miller of the results of examinations and surveys of D'Arbonne River and harbors at Monroe and Trenton, La., and a project and estimate for continuing the improvement of Ouachita River, made under his direction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be printed. The Chair will call the attention of the Senate to the question whether the accompanying documents connected with a report from a Department in answer to a resolution of the Senate or in pursuance of law should be printed under the direction of the Chair or whether the Chair is to await a motion. The rule provides that every motion to print shall, unless the Senate otherwise order, be referred to the Committee on Printing. The Chair has been in the habit of directing, by general consent, as the Chair understands it, that accompanying official papers be printed, together with the letter transmitting them. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senate to the matter, as it is occurring every day, so as to understand what is the wish of the Senate. Strictly and regularly the Chair should await a motion to print before he suggests the printing of anything besides the official communication, but the practice has been for the Chair, unless the documents were very voluminous or supposed to be unimportant, to direct that the accompanying official reports, with the main letter, be also printed. If there be no objection, the Chair will direct that the letter of the Chief of Engineers and the reports accompanying it be printed, together with the letter of transmittal, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was going to suggest that the practice heretofore adopted be acquiesced in, and that the Chair follow that until the Senate otherwise directs. I am sure there will be no objection.

["None."]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of December 6, 1883, a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, submitting copies of certain agreements with the Sioux Indians relating to cessions of land to the United States, with the correspondence connected therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. DAWES] to the volume of the package of papers accompanying the Sioux agreements, and inquires whether the chairman desires to suggest that they should be printed.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know how voluminous the report may be, but I think it should be printed and referred to the select committee that were instructed by the Senate at the last Congress to consider the subject-matter. It was in obedience to the instructions of that committee that the call was made for these papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has that select committee made a report at this session?

Mr. DAWES. It has not made any report as yet. It has been awaiting these papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The select committee is still in existence, the Senator understands?

Mr. DAWES. I infer that it is still in existence. The members of the committee have acted upon that supposition themselves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, if there be no objection, the letter, with the accompanying papers, will be printed and referred to the select committee raised at the last Congress upon this subject, which has not yet reported.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 119) making an appropriation for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, composing what is known as the Lady Franklin Bay expedition to the Arctic regions, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, this joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which some other propositions relating to the subject have previously been referred.

The bill (H. R. 1090) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district court in the northern district of New York was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 3925) to regulate practice in patent suits was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Patents [Mr. PLATT] to this House bill in respect to the question of its reference.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee on Patents is already considering bills of a similar nature. I think the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (H. R. 3926) to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, and such sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States as perpetuate the oath prescribed in said act, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Mrs. S. Loveland, of Vermont, praying for an increase of her pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Mariah W. Washburn, of Athol Center, Mass., praying for an increase of her pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of James H. A. Johnson, editor of the African Methodist, Baltimore, Md., praying for the passage of a bill which will secure to all citizens equal civil rights; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of Association No. 318 of the Knights of Labor, of Knightsville, Clay County, Indiana, praying Congress to enact such legislation as will forever prevent the importation into this country of foreign laborers under contracts made abroad; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HARRIS. On the 13th of December I introduced a bill (S. 695) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter, commodore in the Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I now present the petition of Rear-Admiral Carter, who was retired with the rank of commodore, but has since been promoted to the rank of rear-admiral. He asks that he may be allowed the pay of the rank that he now holds. I move that the petition and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a petition of the New Hampshire State Teachers' Association, signed by Elliot Whipple, president, and Josephine F. Prescott, secretary, in which they express the regret of the association that since the transfer of Alaska from Russia to the United States sixteen years have been allowed to pass without extending to the population educational privileges, and their shame as American citizens that any large section of our land should be worse off educationally than when under the control of Russia, we having failed to continue the schools which for many years were sustained by the Russian Government; and further expressing their approval of the recommendation of the President that there be an appropriation of $50,000 made for the establishment and maintenance of schools in that Territory, especially asking the attention of the Committee on Appropriations of this body to the subject-matter. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON presented the petition of Felix G. Gibbs, of Madison County, Tennessee, the petition of George H. Hunt, of Madison County, Tennessee; and the petition of Allen K. Jones, of Henderson County, Tennessee, praying compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late rebellion; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUTLER presented a petition of letter-carriers of Charleston, S. C., praying for an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of James H. Goss, postmaster at Union, S. C., praying for relief for certain injustice done him under the present law; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ALLISON. I present two petitions, one from citizens of Red Cloud, Webster County, Nebraska, and the other from citizens of Wapello, Iowa, praying for an appropriation for an industrial school at Sitka and for common schools at such points in Alaska as may be designated by the United States Commissioner of Education. These petitions seem to have a common origin, and at the head of each of them is a direction that it be filled up and sent to me. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I present a similar petition of citizens of Richmond, Ky., which I desire to have referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The petition which was sent to me does not contain the special request of that presented by the Senator from Iowa. I suppose my constituents did not deem it necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. Probably it was torn off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have in my hand a memorial from the Board of Marine Underwriters of the city of New York, and signed by a large number of the insurance companies of that city. They have made a request that the memorial be read to the Senate. It is only a page and a half in length, and will require not more than two minutes of time. I ask unanimous consent that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, marine underwriters of the city of New York, respectfully represent that, incurring responsibilities of many millions of dollars upon vessels and cargoes, they represent a very large interest in the safe pilotage of sea-going vessels, an interest oftentimes greater than that of the vessel-owners themselves; and by reason thereof they have sought to keep themselves advised respecting the means best adapted to insure this safety.

That experience enables them to commend the pilot system of the port of New York as in general safely and fairly conducted. The pilots have for a long course of years under the existing discipline proved themselves to be skillful, prompt, and attentive to their duties, and to be law-abiding citizens. The per centum of loss or disaster in anywise attributable to fault on their part is infinitesimally small when computed upon the vast commerce which yearly passes through the shifting and intricate channels of the harbor.

That the propriety and indeed necessity of special guidance of sea-going vessels into and out of harbors have been generally conceded in commercial communities. This guidance should be duly regulated and enforced. Each vessel has in charge cargo intrusted to it by various shippers, and the port channels are narrow highways over which other vessels must pass. Neither the cargo nor the highway should be left wholly at the mercy of a vessel owner or master.

That so far, at least, as concerns the laws of New York and New Jersey, the pilot system provided by these laws has worked well and with good results, and there seems to be no good reason for its abolition, or for changes which will impair its efficiency.

Your memorialists therefore respectfully ask that no material alteration of the system be enacted by Congress, and especially that the essential requirement of compensation for the offer of pilot service be not abrogated.

JANUARY 11, 1884.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of Snyder Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, of Waterloo, N. Y., praying that pensions be granted to the veterans of the late civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of Richard B. Chapman, an owner of land in Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 559) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of Messrs. Leopold & Austrian and 19 others, ship-owners and merchants of Chicago, Ill.; the petition of Ira H. Owen and 19 others, ship-owners and merchants of Chicago, Ill.; the petition of Alfred Chesebrough and 15 others, ship-owners of Detroit, Mich.; the petition of A. Bradley and 27 others, merchants and ship-owners of Cleveland, Ohio; the petition of Frank Prim and 13 others, ship-owners and merchants of Buffalo, N. Y.; and the petition of R. F. Goodman and 19 others, ship-owners and merchants of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 730) to amend sections 4233 and 4234 of the Revised Statutes, relating to steam and sail vessels navigating the ocean; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GROOME presented additional papers to accompany the bill (S. 578) for the relief of Dennis W. Mullan; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BROWN. I present the memorial of P. F. Lawshe; postmaster at Gainesville, Ga., in reference to accommodations for post-offices of the third class. It is addressed to me, but it was evidently intended for the Senate, as it is in the form of a memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent to present a paper in the nature of a memorial, relating to the subject of post-offices. If there be no objection it will be received and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 830) for the relief of John Fraser, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 296) for the relief of Harriet W. Shacklett, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 375) for the relief of George H. Carlyle, to report it adversely. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be placed on the Calendar until I can examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of T. W. Tansill, praying for a readjustment of his accounts by the Treasury Department, to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition. The petitioner is desirous of withdrawing his claim from before Congress.

The report was agreed to; and the petitioner was granted leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 87) for the relief of the heirs of Maurice Grivot, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 170) for the relief of Thomas M. Redd, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8) for the relief of F. W. Peyton, administrator de bonis non of James D. Morton, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 690) for the relief of Mary A. Lewis, widow of Joseph N. Lewis, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 158) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. LOGAN] and I desire to make a statement. There is committed to his care a minority report from the Military Committee of the Senate on the bill just reported by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. I ask that when that report is submitted it may be printed with the majority report as the views of the minority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the views of the minority in respect of the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, reported to-day from the Committee on Military Affairs, may, when presented, be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is entered.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ellen Call Long, praying payment of the claim of the heirs of the late Richard K. Call in accordance with the judgment rendered in the United States court for the district of Florida, January 18, 1847, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1233) for the relief of Ellen Call Long and Mary K. Brevard.

The bill was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 276) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, the surviving partner of James Cowan, deceased, heretofore trading and doing business under the firm-name and style of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, East Tenn., submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 88) to provide for the payment of the claim of Joseph R. Shannon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 539) for the relief of Francis B. Van Hoesen, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 643) for the relief of A. A. Thomas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, on his motion, recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (S. 1248) to provide for the issuance of patents for certain lands in the Indian Terrritory occupied by the Kickapoo, Iowa, and other Indians;

A bill (S. 1249) to confirm certain lands in the Indian Territory to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, and the Wichitas and affiliated bands, to provide for the issuance of patents therefor, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1250) for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 1234) to confirm the title to certain lands in the Territory of Arizona to Charles P. Sykes and John Currey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 1235) to establish an educational fund, and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill (S. 1236) for the relief of Richard Middleton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MCPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 1237) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MILLER, of California, introduced a bill (S. 1238) providing for a survey of the Napa River, in California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 1239) to provide for a port of delivery at Sturgeon Bay, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 1240) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, administratrix of the estate of William Perine, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 1241) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to pensions and certain laws enacted since the revision of the Statutes, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. In relation to this bill I desire to say that it was prepared under the supervision of the Commissioner of Pensions. It is a very important bill, and I call the special attention of the Senate to it. I wish further to state that I do not by introducing it indorse the whole of it. However, I think it is an important measure. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 1242) to reimburse Elizabeth Comstock customs dues paid by her on articles donated for the relief of colored refugees; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1243) for the relief of J. W. Patterson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 1244) for the relief of James W. Schaumberg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1245) for the relief of Robert Brigham, late postmaster at Franklin, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 1246) for the relief of Frank P. Gross; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1247) to regulate bar-rooms in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I introduce the bill by request. I have not read it through. It was prepared by a lawyer in this District, and the parties interested in the matter desire to have presented a petition, drawing up in form what they desire. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM introduced a bill (S. 1251) to authorize the purchase of a wharf for the use of the Government in Wilmington, N. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ANTHONY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 44) directing the Public Printer to forward a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each of the American legations abroad; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. VANCE. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution which I desire to have printed and lie on the table, and at an early day I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a few remarks upon it.

The joint resolution (S. R. 45) to provide for the commemoration of the landing of Sir Walter Raleigh's colony on Roanoke Island, N. C., in 1584, was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 46) relative to a certain accepted draft in the Department of State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported certain amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 343) to provide for the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon the United States in places out of their territory and dominion, and to repeal the Revised Statutes from section 4083 to section 4130, inclusive; which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 487) to regulate promotion in and to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of W. C. Dodge be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Patents.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of the State National Bank of Boston, Mass., be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Louisa H. Hasel be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of M. C. Mordecai be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Casimiro Ginesi be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. BECK, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of John B. Davies, there being no adverse report.

NAVY LIBRARY BINDING.

Mr. ANTHONY. The bill (S. 1199) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1878, which I introduced on Monday last, was by mistake referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that that committee be discharged from its consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing. It relates to the binding of books for the library of the Navy Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the change of reference? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

ALLEGED ELECTION OUTRAGES IN VIRGINIA AND MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer for adoption a preamble and resolutions, and ask for their present consideration.

The preamble and resolutions were read, as follows:

Whereas among the expressed objects for which the Constitution of the United States was established were those to establish justice and insure domestic tranquillity; and

Whereas the Constitution provides for the security to all citizens of equal civil rights, and to all citizens the privileges and immunities that belong to the condition of citizenship, and that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied by the United States, or any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and further provides "that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws;" and

Whereas among the privileges and immunities inherent in citizenship are the right peaceably to assemble for the consideration of questions of State and national concern, and safely to discuss the same, and the right to exercise the elective franchise in every State freely and without molestation or intimidation; and

Whereas a general election was to occur, and did occur, in the State of Virginia on the 6th day of November, 1883; and

Whereas it is alleged and currently reported in the public press that on or about the 3d day of November, 1883, at Danville, in said State, a large number of peaceable citizens of the United States and of said State were violently assailed by an organized body of men and fired upon, and several of them killed, by said armed men conspiring to affect, and with the purpose of affecting, the result of said election so about to occur, by creating, by means of such unlawful violence and homicide, a state of alarm on the part of peaceable citizens throughout said State, which should induce them to refrain from voting or to vote differently from their previous intentions at said election; and

Whereas it is alleged that all the victims of said attack were of one race and of one political party, and all their assailants of another; and

Whereas it is alleged that the authorities of said State of Virginia have not brought any of the persons connected with said alleged conspiracies, violence, and homicides before the courts of justice for examination or trial, whereby the equal rights of citizenship and the equal protection of the laws have not been secured to all the people of said State; and

Whereas a general election was to occur, and did occur, in the State of Mississippi on the 6th day of November, 1883; and

Whereas it is alleged and currently reported in the public press that prior to said election, in the county of Copiah, State of Mississippi, there was an organized movement by members of one party to prevent members of another party from voting at that election, and to prevent the free and open discussion and expression of political opinions; that this purpose was carried into execution by organized plans of terror and violence; that the means used for that purpose were by lawless and organized mobs, moving by night and by day, assaulting, and in some cases killing, lawful voters, with a view, by terror and fear of violence, to deter others from voting; that this violence was committed by one party upon the members of another party with a view to deprive the latter of their constitutional rights, and extended throughout the said county of Copiah and into portions of other counties of that State; that, as a part of this general plan and conspiracy, one J. P. Matthews, a peaceable and law-abiding citizen of Copiah County, was warned not to vote, and upon his voting on the day of election was murdered at the place of election by a person selected for that purpose, and with the approval, express or implied, of the officers of election, and no effort was made to punish the murderers; that this killing was subsequently approved by a public meeting in said county, composed strictly of members of one party, and the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas certain rumors are current that the relatives of the late J. P. Matthews have threatened the peace of society, in order to avenge his death, by killing Democrats and destroying their property: Now, therefore,

"Be it resolved by the people of Copiah County in mass meeting assembled this day at the court-house of said county, That if any person shall be injured, or an attempt made to injure him, either in person or in property, in any manner, by the said relatives or friends of said J. P. Matthews, we hereby declare that we will hold his said relatives and friends who participate accountable for the same, and that we will regard them as without the pale and protection of the law and common enemies of society, and that we will visit upon them certain, swift retribution.

"Be it further resolved, That so long as the friends and relatives of the said J. P. Matthews obey the laws and become good citizens, we hereby pledge them the protection of the law.

"Resolved further, That in the opinion of this meeting it is necessary to the safety of society and the welfare of all races and classes in this county that the Matthews family shall keep out of politics in Copiah County.

"Resolved further. That from henceforth no man or set of men shall organize the negro race against the whites in this county, and if it shall be attempted in the future, we hereby give notice that it shall be at the peril of the person or persons attempting so to do.

"Resolved, That we do hereby pledge ourselves, each to the other, our lives and fortunes and our sacred honor, that we will, all and individually, from henceforth, hold ourselves in readiness to enforce the foregoing resolutions, and to meet at any time upon the call of the chairman of this meeting.

"Resolved, That a committee of twenty-four from each supervisor's district be appointed by the chair to present a copy of these resolutions to the brothers and sons of the late J. P. Matthews, and that the same be published in the Copiah Signal and the Crystal Springs Meteor.

"Resolved by the citizens of Copiah County in mass meeting assembled, That the honors heretofore worn, and worthily so, by beat No. 2 be, and the same are hereby, awarded to beat No. 3.

"Be it further resolved, That this resolution is by no means intended to reflect upon the past and present services of beat No. 2, but to show our appreciation of the result of the election of the ticket in beat No. 3.

"It is also resolved, That the clubs continue their organizations, and consider themselves not disbanded, subject to the call of the chairman of the Democratic executive committee.

"Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be extended to the Hazlehurst brass band for their services on this occasion.

"J. L. MEADE, Chairman.

"JESSE THOMPSON, Jr.,
"C. J. ALLEN,
"Secretaries."

And whereas it is alleged that the authorities of the State of Mississippi have utterly failed and neglected to protect and preserve to the citizens of that State the equal enjoyment of civil and political rights, but have in some cases contributed to their overthrow, and have failed to punish or bring to trial persons alleged to be guilty of the conspiracies, violence, and homicides above stated, in disregard of the equal rights of citizenship in the equal protection of the law guaranteed to all the people of that State: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into all the circumstances of, and connected with, the said alleged events, and into the condition of the constitutional rights and securities before named of the people of Virginia and Mississippi, and that it report, by bill or otherwise, as soon as may be; and that it have the power to send for persons and papers, and to sit during the sittings of the Senate, and that it may employ a stenographer or stenographers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed and lie over until to-morrow morning. I think the Senator from Ohio will want to add some more recitals to it; I do not think it contains quite enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution lies over under Rule XIV.

INDIAN TERRITORY LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the Senate of the present status of lands in the Indian Territory other than those claimed and occupied by the five civilized tribes; the extent of each tract separately; the necessity for or obligation to keep said lands in their present condition of occupancy or otherwise, and as to whether any portions of said lands, and, if so, what portions, are subject to entry under the land laws of the United States; and as to what portion, if any, could be made so subject to entry by the action of the Executive.

SPECIAL ATTORNEYS OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its adoption:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to inform the Senate when and by whom the compensation for special attorneys in the star-route cases in the District of Columbia was fixed, and to furnish copies of any agreements or memoranda relating thereto; and if in his judgment the compensation is unreasonable, why he ratified and continued the same. Also, whether said attorneys, or any of them, are now in the employ of the Department of Justice, and at what compensation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, and the question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that that is hardly a respectful and proper form of direction to give to the head of a Department by the Senate. It is in the nature of a cross-examination, calling upon the Attorney-General to explain something which, as it is put, implies improper conduct on his part, asking the Department why if a thing is unreasonable he did it. I respectfully suggest to my friend that he should modify that phrase and ask for the facts.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think the Senator will readily see that by the most far-fetched construction or the most vivid imagination there can be in the language here used no sort of reflection upon or catechising of the Attorney-General. It has been stated, I suppose by way of apology, though as to that I know naught, that the compensation of one or more of these special assistants was fixed by the predecessor of the present head of the Department. Therefore it is competent to inquire as to that fact. The inference from that partly would be that as the compensation was fixed by his predecessor he had not the power perhaps to change the terms of the compensation. If that be the case, if the inference is properly deducible that the compensation was too high, but was beyond his power to regulate and modify, then it is certainly competent for the Attorney-General to so inform this body, in order that when there shall be, as I trust there will at this session, some legislation restricting the power of the Attorney-General in the employment of special assistants and regulating the mode of compensation, if there be any defect in the old law and the Attorney-General will call our attention to it, the old law may be properly modified.

It is the only object and purpose of the resolution, as it has been the only object and purpose of previous resolutions on this subject, to see wherein the law is defective, as it is conceded to be, to ascertain wherein the administration of the law has been defective, so that any abuses may be corrected in the future. If it be that the Attorney-General feels that he is bound by an arrangement made in a previous administration by his predecessor that fact ought to be known, so that the legislation in the future may be such as to leave authority with the head of the Department to change a contract when, in his judgment, it is unreasonable. My object is that he shall state these facts, in order that we may more intelligently modify the law and meet that which I think is the sense of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out from the resolution, at the end of the first paragraph, the words, "and if in his judgment the compensation is unreasonable, why he ratified and continued the same," and to insert, "and all facts relating to the reasonableness of such compensation and his reasons for paying the same."

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is almost the language, and it is precisely the idea incorporated in the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. It struck me, and I think it will strike the Senator on reflection, that the language he has employed is in the nature of a cross-examination and making a charge against the Attorney-General which would not be civil.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think the language suggested by the Senator incorporates the idea and is just as much catechising the head of the Department and a reflection upon him, if you choose to call it a reflection when none is intended, precisely as the language I used; but if it is a matter of etiquette and whatever else one may choose to call it, I accept the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. An incivility on the part of this body to the head of a Department does not injure the person to whom it is directed; it only injures the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3931) to create an additional United States judicial district and to establish circuit and district courts therein in the State of Alabama;

A bill (H. R. 163) providing for the appointment of clerks of the circuit and district courts in the southern district of Georgia; and

A bill (H. R. 2824) to amend sections 4, 5, and 9 of an act approved February 24, 1879, entitled "An act to create the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, and to change the eastern and western judicial districts of said State, and to fix the time and places for holding courts in said districts," and to provide for holding terms of the court of the western judicial district of Texas at the city of El Paso, and for other purposes.

ENSIGN L. K. REYNOLDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further "concurrent or other resolutions?" If there be none, that order of business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate under Rule VIII the business on the Calendar, commencing at the point where under Rule VIII proceedings terminated on the last occasion, being Order of Business No. 14, Senate joint resolution No. 26.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 26) granting permission to Ensign L. K. Reynolds, United States Navy, to accept the decoration of the Royal and Imperial Order of Francis Joseph from the Government of Austria.

Mr. MORGAN. This joint resolution was examined and passed the Senate at the last session without any opposition. I do not care to repeat the facts, as they are already in the RECORD. They do great honor to this young gentleman, in whom the people of the State of Alabama feel very great pride, as the people of the United States must naturally do. I shall, therefore, unless some Senator desires an explanation of the case, say nothing further.

Mr. INGALLS. Is this an order of nobility, conferring a title?

Mr. MORGAN. I think not. The Senator from Kansas may remember that at the last session of the Senate he made an inquiry somewhat similar to that.

Mr. INGALLS. I had forgotten it.

Mr. MORGAN. I supposed at that time I had explained the subject entirely to the satisfaction of the Senate, so that there was no objection to the measure.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it merely a decoration?

Mr. MORGAN. Only a decoration.

Mr. HALE. Has this resolution been before any committee?

Mr. MORGAN. It has been twice before the Committee on Foreign Relations, and was reported at the last session by the Committee on Foreign Relation, and passed the Senate.

Mr. HALE. And is it now reported by the present Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. MORGAN. It is now reported by the present Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE. That is satisfactory.

Mr. PLUMB. Perhaps it is not very gracious, but I want to say that I hope the resolution will not pass. I am rather of the opinion that a man who carries the commission of his own Government, especially so good a one as the American Government, ought to be satisfied with that. I think we have enough toadyism in all branches of our service that have contact with foreign people. I have observed something of that even in the diplomatic service. I think on the whole we have some men in the diplomatic service who are more proud of the distinctions they get at the hands of the governments to which they are accredited than they are of the commission by which they were accredited. I think it is a good time to inculcate a wholesome American sentiment, and have it understood that we shall not hereafter give permission to any one of our officials to be decorated by any foreign government whatsoever.

It seems to me, Mr. President, as though we are just getting as a nation into this condition, that the only things we import into this country are the vices, the frills, the furbelows, and the fashions from abroad, and the only thing that we export is a class of people who are but too glad to get out of this country and spend their money disporting themselves among foreign peoples. I am told that we have consuls abroad who spend a good deal of their time in berating the country whose commission they bear and whose salary they regularly draw. In fact, they draw it with a regularity equal to that which the late Mr. Phœnix commended so highly in the still later George Washington of his imagination; and yet they pass the most of their time, as I am told, practically and actually, in berating the Government which accredits them, and in doing all they can to show that they are less American citizens and more citizens of Great Britain or of other countries in which they happen for the time being to be.

This may be a very little thing, but it is in this same line; it is a cultivation of the same idea that the American Government, the American commission, the American ideas are not good enough for all our people. I am a protectionist; I am in favor of protecting this country as much as I can against the importation of these ideas, against these un-American habits, and for inculcating in all branches of the public service a good, old-fashioned, wholesome love of American principles and American institutions. An American decoration is good enough any way, but it always palls on a certain class of people when it comes in competition with one which is conferred by some person who has had the kingly oil poured upon him. We ape the manners, the fashions, and the notions about rank that are prevalent abroad; and I think, Mr. President, it is high time this should end. I do not think it ought to have the sanction of law, of the resolution of either branch of Congress. I think it is puerile, I think it is un-American, and should be condemned rather than be commended.

Mr. CONGER. Let the resolution be read before there is further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, since I have been a member of the Senate a great many resolutions similar in purport to that which is now before us have been introduced and passed without formal opposition. I have during all that time had the feeling that such measures were un-American and anti-republican, and tended to the cultivation of a spirit which in my judgment bodes no good to our country; but living as I do in a State that does not make any very great account of distinctions and titles, my notions might be somewhat different from the rest of the Senate and I said nothing about the matter. I am very glad indeed to hear the Senator from Kansas, who lives in the same character of country I do, express the same opinion. In my judgment, in all that region of country matters of this kind would be laughed at, and I think they ought to be. It is true that in many of our cities some of the people are aping foreign manners; there are dudes and a class who want to pronounce like Englishmen, to ride like Englishmen, to hold their arms like Englishmen, and all that thing. The whole of this is wrong. Whenever an officer of the Government of the United States is not satisfied with the honors which his own country can confer upon him, he had better quit the service of his country and go into that of a country which is willing to confer its honors upon him. That is my judgment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator that debate is proceeding under Rule VIII, and he has exhausted his privileges under that rule.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous leave to explain this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Alabama speaking a second time on this resolution for five minutes? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I will send—I suppose it will not come out of my time—to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read the correspondence on this subject, which is to be found on page 1002 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 14, part 1, Forty-seventh Congress, second session. I respectfully ask the Senate to listen to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair's interpretation of the rule would be that the Senator's time expires at the end of five minutes from the time he takes the floor, whether the matter occupying the time is read at the Clerk's desk or spoken by him in his place.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I am excluded from having this correspondence read unless out of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can ask unanimous consent. The Chair is obliged to enforce the rule.

Mr. MORGAN. I am glad the Chair is so punctilious about the rule; it is a good idea; and therefore I ask unanimous consent to add to my time enough of the valuable time of this body to allow the correspondence to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES FLAGSHIP TRENTON,
Toulon, France, February 3, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report, in order to render tardy justice to a deserving young officer:

In my report of the rescue of the crew of the Austro-Hungarian bark Olivo I neglected to mention the gallant conduct of Ensign L. K. Reynolds.

Ensign Reynolds had charge of the first whaleboat and was the only one who communicated with the bark.

The second whaleboat, owing to the heavy sea, failed to get within hail.

After making two trips and bringing to the Constellation nine of the crew of the Olivo, he (Mr. Reynolds) volunteered to return and bring off the three men remaining on the bark.

Before leaving the last boat I directed Mr. Reynolds either to scuttle or fire the bark to secure her sinking, as she was in the track of vessels and dangerous above water. Owing to the heavy sea running, Ensign Reynolds could not go alongside the bark, but jumped overboard, swam to the vessel, fired her in two places, swam to his boat again, and returned to the Constellation with the last of the crew of the Olivo.

To the good judgment and skillful handling of the boat by Ensign Reynolds is due the fact that no accident happened either to the rescued or rescuing party.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY WILSON,
Captain, Commanding.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 27, 1880.

SIR: The Department has read with great satisfaction the report of Capt. Henry Wilson, detailing your gallant conduct in rescuing the crew of the Austro-Hungarian bark Olivo while en route to the European station.

Such heroic conduct commends itself not only to the consideration of the Department but of the country, and the Department cheerfully tenders its thanks for it.

The exhibition of such qualities by so young an officer gives assurance of a brilliant and useful future.

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Ensign L. K. REYNOLDS, United States Navy,
United States Flagship Trenton.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 4, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, in recognition of your heroism in saving, on the 24th of November, 1879, twelve persons from a vessel wrecked at sea, the gold life-saving medal authorized by the act of Congress approved June 21, 1874.

It appears that on the above date, while the United States steamer Constellation, to which you were attached, was lying hove-to in the vicinity of the Azores, on account of the violence of the gale then prevailing, a vessel was seen from her decks at daylight several miles astern with a signal of distress flying. This vessel proved to be the Austro-Hungarian bark Olivo. Two boats were sent from the Constellation to her relief, one of which failed to get within hail through the heavy sea then running, but the other, which was under your command, succeeded in getting near her and in two successive trips took off nine of the twelve persons on board. The day was consumed in these efforts, but although the danger of the enterprise was greatly increased by the setting in of darkness, it is shown that you volunteered to return to the sinking bark, and took off the remaining three men. On each occasion the sea was so rough that the men from the bark were obliged to jump overboard to be taken into the boat, which was unable, on the peril of being stove, to come up alongside; and after the last rescue was effected, as the bark was in the track of passing vessels, and dangerous to navigation so long as her hulk floated, you performed the dangerous feat of swimming to her through the violent sea, and getting on board, set her on fire in two places; you then swam back to your boat and returned to the Constellation late in the evening with the last of the crew of the Olivo.

It gives me particular pleasure to transmit to you the accompanying medal, the public recognition of a memorable day of hard labor and constant peril which you endured in the service of humanity.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Ensign L. C. REYNOLDS, United States Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 7, 1880.

SIR: It gives me great pleasure to transmit herewith a gold medal of the first class, awarded to you by the Secretary of the Treasury, under an act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, in recognition of your heroism on the 24th of November last in rescuing the crew of the Austrian bark Olivo. The circumstances of the affair are minutely detailed in the letter addressed to you by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 4th instant, also herewith transmitted. The Department has already expressed to you its high appreciation of your gallantry, which secured to you so handsome a recognition by the Government of your services. And it is with satisfaction that it finds itself the medium of transmitting to you the gold medal and the appreciative letter from the honorable Secretary of the Treasury. You will please acknowledge to the Secretary of the Treasury the receipt of the medal.

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Ensign L. K. REYNOLDS, United States Navy,
Flag-ship Trenton, European Station.

WASHINGTON, June 20, 1882.

SIR: Lieut. L. K. Reynolds, United States Navy, having displayed almost unexampled bravery, this gallant officer having succeeded in 1880, while on board the United States frigate Constellation, to save, at imminent peril to himself and during a furious gale, the whole crew of the Austrian bark Olivo (12 men), which heroic act has been reported by the Austrian naval board of Trieste to the I. R. ministry of commerce, a cabinet council had unanimously passed the resolution, subject to His Majesty's approval, that the I. R. Order of Francis Joseph be awarded to Lieut. L. K. Reynolds, as an acknowledgment of his gallantry and noble intrepidity.

In consequence thereof the I. and R. foreign office had instructed this legation in January last to ascertain whether the said officer would be allowed to accept that position.

Preliminary confidential and verbal application having been made concerning that question to the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Mr. Hunt had declared that the United States Senate would have to grant that permission by special act; that such permission would undoubtedly be given considering the circumstances of the case, and that the Department saw no objection to Lieutenant Reynolds being made a Knight of the I. and R. Order aforesaid.

I have consequently the honor to forward you hereby the said decoration, with the diploma and the bond attached to it, requesting you to inform me in due time whether Lieut. L. K. Reynolds has been permitted to accept that decoration.

In that case he will have to sign the annexed bond, which you will be pleased to return to me for transmission to Vienna.

Accept sir, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

SCHAEFFER.

The honorable FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Secretary of State, &c., Washington.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 30, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th instant and inclosure, and to request that application be made to Congress for permission for Ensign L. K. Reynolds, United States Navy, to accept the I. R. Order of Francis Joseph, proposed to be conferred by the Government of Austria.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Secretary of State.

THE LIFE-SAVING BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, (51 Wall Street),
New York, March 19, 1880.

SIR: I take leave to send herewith the gold medal awarded by the Life-Saving Benevolent Association of New York to Mr. Lovell K. Reynolds, ensign, United States Navy, of the United States steamship Constellation, as a mark of appreciation of his skill and gallantry in rescuing the crew of the Austro-Hungarian bark Olivo, Captain Luciano Barbarovich, when in a sinking condition in mid-Atlantic Ocean, November 24, 1879.

This association will feel sincerely obliged if you will be pleased to forward the medal and accompanying letter to Mr. Reynolds in such manner and with such expression of your approval or consent as may seem to you proper.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROYAL PHELPS, Vice-President.

Hon. R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 23, 1880.

SIR: I have the pleasure of transmitting herewith an open letter addressed to you by Royal Phelps, esq., vice-president of the Life-Saving Benevolent Association of New York, accompanied by the gold medal awarded to you by that association in appreciation of your gallant conduct in rescuing the crew of the Austro-Hungarian bark Olivo, at sea, November 24, 1879.

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Ensign LOVELL K. REYNOLDS, U. S. N.,
United States Steamship Trenton, European Station.

BOSTON, 90 Boylston Street, March 31, 1880.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Humane Society of Massachusetts holden March 5, 1880, it was voted that the gold medal of the society be awarded to Ensign Lovell K. Reynolds, U. S. N., for his courageous and successful efforts in saving the captain and crew of the Austro-Hungarian bark Olivo in a severe gale of wind, at sea, November 24, 1879.

In sending you this vote and the accompanying medal the trustees wish to express to you their high sense of your heroism, self-devotion, coolness, and courage, by which so much good was accomplished and so many lives were saved.

Yours, respectfully,

CHAS. D. HOMANS,
Corresponding Secretary Humane Society of Massachusetts.

LOVELL K. REYNOLDS, Esq.,
Ensign, U. S. Navy.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. President, it will be seen from the reading of these letters from our own Secretary of the Treasury, from our own Secretary of the Navy, from the officer in command of the Constellation, upon which this young ensign was, that no man in the naval history of the United States has ever performed acts of greater personal gallantry than these; and twelve men who were upon the high seas in the bark Olivo in the midst of a terrific storm, which lasted three days, owe their lives to this young officer. Thereupon his Government, under our own laws, ordered a gold medal for him, expressive of its thanks for his gallantry on that occasion. The Austrian Government seeks to participate in this expression relative to the young ensign, and Senators are found here who are so entirely democratic and represent such democratic constituencies in the West and Southwest that they can not afford to allow the Austrian Government to make this expression of its thanks to so gallant an American as this. Sir, indeed we are getting to be in the very drivel of democracy when we get to that low pitch of it.

I think the honorable Senators could not have considered for one moment the condition of this case. This young American did not come in contact with the Austrian Government on the carpeted floor of royalty or in the midst of scenes of revelry. He did not claim a golden snuff-box from somebody because he had attended at a coronation; but he met the Austrian ship upon the high seas in the midst of a most terrific storm, and when the hearts of other men failed them, he took his boat and went on board that ship and saved the lives of those on it, and he had to throw himself into the sea and swim from his boat to the side of the ship before he could reach the point where he could furnish them relief.

I, sir, feel proud of the young man, and especially proud that he is an Alabamian, and I think that I can claim from the Senate of the United States its co-operation with the Government of Austria in paying a deserved compliment to a man of such high merit.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am very sure that it was not without a meaning that the framers of the Constitution provided that no officer of the United States should without the consent of Congress receive testimonials from foreign governments. It was intended that Congress should have the opportunity to accept for one of its citizens expressions of commendation from other governments or other peoples.
